Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. VI, r. 6—Bengal Cess Act (IX B. C. of 1880), s. 54, notice under—Presumption—Denial, specific, by defendant, whether necessary.

Notice under section 54 of the Cess Act is a condition precedent to the liability to pay cess. A defendant must, if he contends non-service of such notice, state this specifically in his pleadings, otherwise due service of the notice will be presumed. [p. 1, col. 2.]

Appeal from a decision of the Subordinate Judge, Saran, dated the 4th October 1920 reversing that of the Munsif, Siwan, dated the 7th August 1919.

Mr. S. N. Bose for Mr. S. N. Palit, for the Appellants.

Mr. Nirsu Narayan Sinha, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the plaintiffs in a suit for recovery of Road Cess alleged to be payable by the defendants who are Malikānādars. The Munsif decreed the suit; but the Subordinate Judge, while agreeing with the Munsif, that cess had been assessed on the Malikana lands in suit, dismissed the claim on the ground that the plaintiffs had failed to prove service of notice under section 54 of the Cess Act (Bengal Act IX of 1880).

The learned Vakil for the appellants contends, in the first place, that the effect of O. VI, r. 6, Civil Procedure Code, is that an averment of the giving of this notice must be implied in the plaint. He also contends that under O. VIII, r. 2, Civil Procedure Code, it was for the defendants to raise by their pleadings the new fact of non-service on which they relied to show that the suit was not maintainable. Order VI, r. 6, corresponds to O. XIX, r. 14 of the Rules of the Supreme Court and the decisions on that rule are applicable to this case. The rule has been stated in this way, that it is for the defendant, if he contends that there was a condition precedent and that it has not been duly performed, to state specifically what the condition was and to plead its non-performance, otherwise its due performance will be presumed (Annual Practice, 1922, page 342). In Harris Calculating Machine Company, In re, Sumner v. Harris Calculating Machine Company (1) where a demand for payment to be made at Lloyds Bank was a condition precedent and it was not pleaded that no such demand had been made, Astbury, J., said that he was not at all satisfied that O. XIX, r. 14, did not apply to the case, that the defendants had not given the slightest warning that they were going to take any such point in the pleadings; and that it should have been done if a point of that character was going to be relied on. In Gates v. Jacobs (2) where there was a question of the service on a lessee of the notice required by section 14 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, Lawrence, J., held that "the statement of claim must be read as if it contained an allegation that the plaintiffs had given the necessary notice under section 14 of the Act before the commencement of the action. These decisions are, in my opinion, applicable to the present case. And the terms of O. VI, r. 6, are explicit. It is no longer necessary for the plaintiff to plead the performance of a condition precedent. If the pleadings are silent they must be read as implying an allegation of performance. And there is no denial by the defence. That notice under section 52 of the Cess Act is a condition precedent has been held in Ashan-ullah Khan v. Trilochan Bagchi (3) and notice under section 54 must similarly be held to be a condition precedent to liability to pay cess. On this ground, therefore, it seems clear that the plaintiffs are entitled to succeed in this appeal.

A further ground was taken that section 54 of the Cess Act has no application, inasmuch as the lands are not lands held free of rent within the meaning of that section. The words used in the Record of Rights are Mafi Malikana and it is contended that this means that the rent is remitted as equivalent to the Malikana payable to the tenure-holder. If it were necessary to decide the point I should be inclined to hold that this is the correct view and that the lands are not lands held free of rent. But as the plaintiffs are entitled to succeed on the first point, I do not think it necessary to decide this.

The result is, that the appeal is decreed with costs, the decree of the Subordinate Judge is set aside and the decree of the Munsif restored. The plaintiffs will get the costs of the lower Appellate Court also.

PLAINTIFFS—RESPONDENTS.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXII, r. 4—Appeal against several respondents—Death of one of them—Legal representative not brought on record—Abatement of appeal—Conflicting decisions.

Where in an appeal against several respondents one of them dies and his representatives are not brought on the record within time, the appeal abates in its entirety, if the success of the appeal would result in two conflicting decisions with regard to the same subject-matter.

Appeal against the decree of the Officiating Subordinate Judge, Third Court, Mymensingh, dated the 10th January 1920, affirming the decree of the Munsif, Second Additional Court at Eswargunj, dated the 30th January 1919.

Babu Birendra Kumar De, for the Appellant.—The first defendant is the appellant before your Lordships. The fact that the heir of defendant No. 6 was not brought on the record in time cannot operate to my client's prejudice. It is elementary law that no suit is to be defeated for defect of parties or non-joinder of parties. Refers to O. I, r. 9 and Bastir Sheikh v. Fazle Karim (1). Kali Dayal v. Nagendra Nath (2) is distinguishable from the facts of the present case. Refers to O. XXI, r. 35; clause (2) and O. XXII, r. 4.

Babu Prafulla Chandra Chakravarti, for the Respondent, refers to Kali Dayal v. Nagendra Nath (2) and O. XXI, r. 15.

Babu Birendra Kumar De in reply.—There will be no inconsistency as your Lordships seem to think. Shares can be ascertained even here. The dispute is among Muhammdans. O. XXI, r. 15 will not come into operation. Here it is a decree for joint possession.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the first defendant against a decision of the Subordinate Judge of Mymensingh who dismissed the appeal on the ground that even if the defendants were successful the decree would be infructuous by reason of the fact that the heirs of respondent No. 6 had not been brought on the record within the time allowed by law. The suit in respect of which this appeal arises was a suit for khas possession after evicting the defendants. The plaintiffs in the suit were Muhammadans—two being brothers, other plaintiffs being heirs of a deceased brother and the remaining plaintiff being the widow of another brother. They claimed joint possession of the whole of the land and the Munsif decreed the suit in respect of 10 annas $13\frac{1}{4}$ gandas, decreeing that the plaintiffs were to get joint possession with the defendants. Now respondent No. 6 died and, as already stated, his heirs were not brought on the record in time. Now, it is said that this case is distinguishable from the case of Kali Dayal v. Nagendra Nath (2) and from the other cases cited in that judgment on the ground, first of all, that the defendants are entitled to a five-annas and odd share and, secondly, on the ground that the plaintiffs being Muhammadans the share of the heirs of the respondent No. 6 is ascertained or capable of ascertainment, it being said that it is $1-32$ nd. It is said that this is the share to which a Muhammadan widow under the circumstances would be entitled. What is argued is this. It is said that the appeal will not necessarily be infructuous, that if the defendants succeeded they would then be entitled as joint owners with the heirs of respondent No. 6 to bring a suit for partition, and it is suggested that in this suit it would be possible to establish that the heirs of respondent No. 6 were only entitled to $1-32$ nd of the property with the result that the defendants might become entitled to 10 annas $13\frac{1}{4}$ gandas less $1-32$ nd thereof.

It seems to us, however, that this point is concluded by the authority to which I have already referred. The basis of the decision is this: that where there is a decree such as this in favour of one of the respondents who has died, which cannot be questioned by reason of the fact that owing to lapse of time any right of appeal has abated, if the appeal succeeded against the respondent who remained alive there might be conflicting decisions of the Court, that is, to say, there might be the decision of the first Court in favour of the respondent who has died, a decision which cannot be questioned, and the decision of an Appellate Court contrary to the decision of the first Court which cannot be called in question owing to the abatement. That seems to us to be the ratio decidendi of the cases on the subject. The arguments urged by the learned Vakil for the appellant do not get over that difficulty. Suppose the appeal proceeded and the defendants were successful. They would then be forced to commence a partition suit, and if they succeeded to the extent to which we have stated there will then be a decision of the Court which cannot be questioned by reason of the abatement and possibly a decision in the partition suit that would conflict with the decision which cannot be called into question, with the result that there would be a conflict of decisions of two Courts with regard to the same subject-matter. In this view the judgment appealed against is correct and the case is governed by the decision above referred to and the cases therein cited. The appeal is dismissed.

The Vakil who has appeared for the respondents has not been able to file a properly executed vakalatnamah. If he files a properly executed vakalatnamah within a fortnight the respondents will get their costs, otherwise there will be no order as to costs inserted in the decree.

Miscellaneous appeal against an order passed by the Judge, Hanthawaddy District.

Mr. Halker, for the Appellant.

Mr. Charu, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—Appellant's daughter, Ma Hta Sein, married Eng Wa and by him had a daughter Ah Nyun. After Ma Hta Sein's death Eng Wa married Ma Khin Saw by whom he had two children Maung Maung and Ma Than. Eng Wa died and his estate was divided between Ah Nyun and Ma Khin Saw and her children. Then Ah Nyun died, while still a minor, and appellant on the one side and Ma Khin Saw on behalf of her children on the other side claimed Letters of Administration. The lower Court held that Ma Khin Saw's children were Ah Nyun's sole heirs and excluded appellant, and accordingly granted Letters to Ma Khin Saw on behalf of her children.

Appellant now argues that because Ah Nyun had previously lived with her for some years and because she was Ah Nyun's own grandmother while Ma Khin Saw's children were only half brother and half sister of Ah Nyun, she ought to be regarded as Ah Nyun's sole heir and ought to exclude Ma Khin Saw's children.

The only cases cited before us were Taung Mro v. Aung Nyun (1) and Ma Hnin Bwin v. U Shwe Gone (2).

The first of these, according to the newspaper report to which we were referred by appellant, decided that where the only possible heirs were children of an elder half brother and grand-children of a younger full brother, the latter would exclude the former. There can, we think, be no doubt that if the contest were between an elder half-brother and a younger brother the latter would exclude the former, but in the present case there are only a half-brother and a half-sister on the one side and a maternal grandmother on the other.

The other case, on which the respondents rely, decides that younger sisters exclude a father at any rate where the sisters have lived separately from the father.

It is surprising that no reference has been made to the case of Le Maung v. Ma Kwe (3) where the contest was between a father, with whom the deceased son lived up to the time of his death, and a half-sister of the deceased whose mother had been divorced from the father and who after the divorce had always lived with the divorced mother. In that case a Bench of this Court said: "The learned District Judge is probably right in holding that the ruling in Ma Hnin Bwin's case (2) may properly be applied in favour of brothers and sisters of the half-blood when there are no full brothers and sisters. This would be in accordance with the fundamental principle that inheritance should not ascend if it can be helped."

We accept this "dictum" as being in entire accord with Burmese Buddhist Law.

and we note that in Maurg Kyaw Sein v. Ma Min Yin (4) it has been extended to the case of a step-brother where there was no blood-relationship with the deceased.

In our opinion the fact that Ah Nyun had previously lived with appellant, although she was not living with her and was not under her legal guardianship at the time of her death, is entirely insufficient to warrant any departure from the ordinary rule that the inheritance shall not ascend, and we find that the District Court was right in holding that Ma Khin Saw's children were Ah Nyun's only heirs and that Letters were rightly granted to Ma Khin Saw on behalf of her minor children.

We accordingly dismiss the appeal with costs, Advocates' fee to be 3 gold mohurs.

When there is no one competent to sue there can be no cause of action, and, consequently, limitation cannot run, because there is no one against whom it can run.

Where a person as trustee of a temple and a mutt unites in himself the function of landlord and tenant, the cause of action for a suit to recover arrears of rent arises when there is some one in existence who can enforce payment of such arrears, as for instance, when a Receiver is appointed, at which time the arrears become due within the meaning of Art. 110 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act.

Appeal against a decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Sivaganga, in Original Suit No. 27 of 1918.

Messrs. T. V. Gopalaswami Mudaliar and A. C. Sampath Iyengar, for the Appellant.

Messrs. A. Krishnaswami Iyer and T. L. Venkatarama Iyer, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—There is absolutely no evidence worth the name of the alleged custom or implied contract that the devashanam the melwaramdar, was responsible for collecting the melwaram from the sub-tenants, and that the kudivaramdar, i. e., the mutt, was not liable in any way. Failing proof of such a custom, the mutt, as kudivaramdar, is bound to pay the melwaram to the devashanam. This melwaram has only been paid in part as shown by the accounts kept by defendant himself, and, consequently, the balance is due from the mutt. It does not lie with the defendant to question the quantum of arrears shown in his own accounts.

The only other point with which it is necessary to deal is the question of limitation. Defendant, as trustee of the temple and of the mutt, united in himself the function of landlord and tenant, and consequently could not bring a suit for rent against himself, on the principle that when the hand that receives and the hand that pays is the same no suit will lie for payment. It is contended for appellant that a suit might have been brought by some of the temple worshippers, but, at any rate, no such suit could be brought unless sanction was obtained, and until such sanction was obtained no suit would lie, and no particular person would be in a position to sue. Until the defendant was removed from his trusteeship he could not sue for the rent and there was no other person, who was in a position to do so. When there is no one competent to sue there can be no cause of action and, consequently, limitation cannot run, because there is no one against whom it can run [vide Murray v. East India Company (1)]. Plaintiff, therefore, when he was appointed Receiver was the first person who had the right to sue and the question is, whether his right is barred (except in regard to three years' rent) under Art. 110, Limitation Act. Under that Article, the time for which period begins to run is "when the arrears become due." This time is usually the end of each Fasli year, but the meaning of the words has been considered by the Privy Council in Ranee Surno Moyee v. Shooshee Mokhee Burmonia (2) and Rangayya Appa Rao v. Bobba Sriramulu (3), and it has been held that a quite different time may in certain circumstances be the time from which limitation begins to run. In this case, the arrears became due, [applying the language in Rangayya Appa Rao v. Bobba Sriramulu (3)], as soon as there was some one to whom they were payable, who was capable of enforcing the obligation by suit. Holding as we do that defendant could not enforce the obligation by suit, it was not until plaintiff was appointed that there was any cause of action in existence. Plaintiff's claim is, therefore, not barred. The plea that the suit should have been brought in the Revenue Court is not supported by any evidence, and must be rejected.

The appeal is dismissed with costs.

Agreement for sale—Consideration, payment of—Vendee already in possession—Conveyance not registered—Suit for possession by vendor—Vendee, position of.

When a person agrees to sell property to another who is already in possession and the latter pays the purchase-money but omits to take a registered conveyance the position is the same as if the document had been executed and the former person is not entitled to recover possession, even though the right to obtain specific performance of the agreement to sell has become time-barred. Venkatesh Damodar v. Mallappa Bhimappa, 66 Ind. Cas. 868; 24 Bom. L. R. 242; (1922) A. I. R. (B) 9; 46 B. 722, relied on.

P mortgaged a plot of land to D (1) who assigned the mortgage by registered deed to M and his wife. Later P made over possession to M and made a report to the Revenue Surveyor that the land was sold outright. No conveyance was executed. M conveyed the land by registered sale-deed to D (2). P sued D (1) and D (2) for redemption and was granted a decree:

Held, that the sale was not valid, because no registered conveyance was executed but that the intention to sell was clear and, therefore, P could not be allowed to take advantage of his neglect to give conveyance in due form and fall back upon his mortgage and redeem the land. To give him a decree would be in effect to assist him in perpetrating a fraud on his vendee [p. 8, col. 1.]

Second civil appeal against the judgment of the Divisional Judge, Myaungmya, confirming the judgment of the Sub-Divisional Judge, Pyapon.

Mr. Anklesaria, for the Appellants.
Mr. Chifon, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—Plaintiff sued for redemption of a house and site, and a piece of land.

The proved facts are that plaintiffs mortgaged the land on June 16th, 1913, to the first and second defendants, Maung Shwe Hmon and Ma Hnin E, for Rs. 1,000.

On the 14th December 1915, the mortgagees by registered-deed assigned the mortgage to one Maung Po Hlaing and his wife Ma Shwe Yi.

In 1918 plaintiffs made over possession of the land to Maung Po Hlaing and a report was made to the Revenue Surveyor and signed by both plaintiffs, to the effect that the land was sold outright for Rs. 1,600 (Exhibit A). No conveyance was executed. On the 20th June 1919, Maung Po Hlaing conveyed the land by registered-deed to Maung U Gyi, third defendant, for Rs. 1,500. Plaintiffs were granted a decree for redemption.

The appeal was dismissed by the Divisional Court.

The learned Judge pointed out that, as first and second defendants had assigned the mortgage, they were not necessary parties to the suit and that, on the other hand, Maung Po Hlaing and his wife might properly have been joined, but their omission was not fatal to the suit.

The proved facts are considerably at variance from the case set up in the plaint.

Plaintiffs alleged that the simple mortgage was converted into a usufructuary one and the land made over to first and second defendants. Subsequently, the land was transferred to the name of Po Hlaing benami.

The Divisional Court has discussed the question at length and come rightly to the conclusion that there was nothing benami about the transaction.

There is no proof that the simple mortgage was ever converted into a usufructuary mortgage and there can be no doubt that the learned Divisional Judge was right in holding that the intention of the plaintiffs was to make over the land outright to Maung Po Hlaing.

The evidence of the Revenue Surveyor together with the entry in his register signed by plaintiffs is conclusive proof that the transfer was intended to be an outright one. The evidence of promises to allow redemption can be disregarded and plaintiffs do not rely on a transfer with right to re-purchase.

Their case was that a simple mortgage was converted into an outright sale and this allegation is not proved and is not in accordance with the proved facts.

There has been no valid sale, because no registered conveyance was executed but it is clear that there was an intention to sell for Rs. 1,600 and in pursuance of this intention Maung Po Hlaing has been put in possession.

The question for decision, therefore, is: having made over the land for consideration on an agreement to sell, can the plaintiffs now fall back on their mortgage and redeem the land, because they have not given Po Hlaing a legal conveyance?

In other words, can they be allowed to take advantage of their own laches?

The learned Divisional Judge held that, as the time for a suit for the specific performance had expired at the time of his judgment, Po Hlaing and consequently his vendee could no longer resist plaintiff's claim to recover possession.

The Judge's decision was based on the doctrine approved in Akbar Fakir v. Intail Sayal (1) that where in pursuance of an agreement for a lease or sale the intended transferee has taken possession, though the requisite documents have not been executed, the position is the same as if the documents had been executed, provided specific performance can be obtained between the same parties in the same Court and at the same time as the subsequent legal question falls to be determined.

In the above quoted case the Court held that plaintiff could not eject defendants, who had come into occupation by his leave and license under an agreement to sell.

The principle enumerated in Akbar Fakir v. Intail Sayal (1) was approved by a Full Bench of this Court in Karamath Khan v. Latchmi Achi (2).

In the present case limitation will only commence to run from the date when the vendee became aware that the vendor refused to complete the contract, that is to say, from the date of filing the suit.

I am unable to hold that specific performance was barred by limitation.

As a matter of fact, however, the doctrine enumerated in Akbar Fakir's case (1), has been extended in the recent Bombay case of Vekampsh Damodar v. Mallapa Bhimappa (3), in which it was held that when plaintiff agreed to sell certain property to defendants who were already in possession, and defendants paid up the purchase-money, but omitted to take a registered conveyance, plaintiff was not entitled to recover possession, even though the right to obtain specific performance of the agreement to sell had become time-barred.

With this conclusion I am in entire agreement. On behalf of plaintiffs it is contended that the report to the Revenue Surveyor is not admissible in evidence as it is not registered, and that it is not a contract or evidence of a contract.

I do not think there is any force in this contention.

The report is not intended to be or to take the place of a sale-deed, but it is admissible as evidence as to what was reported.

In similar circumstances, in Ma Shwe On v. Maung Kywet (4) it was held that a sale of land worth over Rs. 100 without registration is in law a mere contract of sale.

In the present case the position is that after the mortgagees had assigned the mortgage to Maung Po Hlaing, the mortgagors made over the land in suit to him under an agreement to sell for a fixed sum due under the mortgage.

Their intention clearly was by the transfer to extinguish that portion of the mortgage-debt.

They cannot now be allowed to take advantage of the fact that they neglected to give a conveyance in due form and redeem the land. To give plaintiffs a decree would be in effect to assist the vendors in perpetrating a fraud on the vendee.

As regards the house and the site the position is different. First and second defendant assigned the mortgage to Po Hlaing, who is not a party to the suit.

Po Hlaing did not transfer the house and site to Maung U Gyi.

I do not consider I should be justified in making Po Hlaing a party at this stage of the proceedings.

Second appeal from a decision of the District Judge Agra, dated 21st May 1920.

JUDGMENT.—This second appeal raises certain questions regarding the position of a reversioner, who has succeeded to immoveable property on the death of a Hindu widow, in respect of an alienation by way of gift or endowment made by the said widow. The essential facts may be stated as follows. The property with which we are concerned belonged to one Tulsi Ram, who died leaving a son, Daulat Ram. The latter died childless and was succeeded in the possession of the property, first, by his own widow Musammal Man Kunwar, and afterwards by his mother Musammal Munian, the widow of Tulsi Ram. On the 19th April 1905 Musammal Munian made a gift of certain immoveable property in favour of the family idol, who is impleaded as the defendant in this suit, which is contested by Mahant Puran Das, the manager of the temple in which the idol is installed. At the time of this transfer the nearest reversioners to the estate of Daulat Ram were the grandsons of one Daya Nand, who was the own brother of Sukh Deo, the father of Tulsi Ram. On the 12th May 1905 two of these reversioners, by name Fateh Singh and Sunder, executed a document which has been referred to in the pleadings and arguments as a deed of relinquishment. The third reversioner, by name Duli Chand, instituted a suit in the year 1907 claiming a declaration that the transfer effected in favour of the idol was not valid beyond the lifetime of Musammal Munian and would not bind the reversioner or reversioners who might succeed to the estate on that lady's death. He obtained after contest a decree granting him the declaration sought for. It is not suggested that there was any kind of fraud or collusion in connection with the passing of this decree in favour of Duli Chand. Musammal Munian lived until the 12th December 1916. When she died the succession opened in favour of Fateh Singh and Duli Chand, Sunder having died in the interval. For some reason with which we are not concerned, Duli Chand has up to the present taken no effective steps to recover possession of any part of the property covered by the deed of gift of April 19th, 1905. The suit out of which this appeal arises was instituted by Fateh Singh on the 31st July 1918. The plaintiff asserts that he is actually in possession of some of the property covered by the deed of gift of April the 19th, 1905 but he claims to recover one-half share of the remainder admitting that the other half share has passed by inheritance to Duli Chand. The suit was resisted on various grounds with two of which only we are now concerned, it was contended on behalf of the plaintiff that the decree in favour of Duli Chand in Suit No. 163 of 1907 was conclusive as to the invalidity of the gift beyond the lifetime of Musammal Munian, so that the Court was bound to accept that decision and to decree the plaintiff's claim accordingly. On behalf of the defendant it was denied that the decree in favour of Duli Chand could operate as res judicata in favour of Fateh Singh in respect of any of the questions raised. It was further contended that in any event Fateh Singh was bound by the terms of his own deed of relinquishment of the 12th May 1905 and was, therefore, debarred from contesting the validity of the alienation.

The case was argued before a Bench of two Judges by whom it was referred to a Full Bench in order that the questions of law raised might be finally determined.

The question regarding the effect of the decision in favour of Duli Chand in Suit No. 163 of 1907 need not detain us long. Indeed, it was not argued before us. In the case of Kesho Prasad Singh v. Sheopareash Ojha (1) it was held that on the principles laid down by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Venkatanarayana Pillay v. Subbammal (2) a decision in favour of one reversioner in a declaratory suit such as that brought by Duli Chand would ordinarily, in the absence of fraud or collusion, bind the whole body of reversioners. We are satisfied that we could have treated the judgment in favour of Duli Chand as conclusive in respect of all matters actually decided in that litigation. The point is not really material so far as the result of the present appeal is concerned. By way of precaution, in order that the other point which we have to decide with respect to the deed of relinquishment of the 12th May 1905 might come before us as a definite question of law clear of all possible controversy as to matters of fact, we remitted certain issues for further investigation by the lower Appellate Court. One result of this has been a finding that the gift made by Musammal Munian in favour of the defendant idol covered about two-thirds of the estate in the possession of the said donor as a Hindu widow. We have no doubt that such an alienation for the purpose stated in this deed of gift could not be justified per se and that the suit brought by Duli Chand was rightly decided.

We are equally satisfied, however, that the decision in the Duli Chand's suit did not and could not determine the further question which arises in the present litigation, namely, whether Fateh Singh personally, by reason of the deed of relinquishment of May the 12th 1905, is precluded from raising the question whether or not Musammal Munian had exceeded her powers of alienation in making the gift in question. The Trial Court seems to have relied principally on certain dicta in the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Amrit Narayan Singh v. Gaya Din (3). Undoubtedly, this is authority for the proposition that when he joined in the execution of this deed on the 12th of May 1905 Fateh Singh possessed no interest in the property therein referred to which he could assign or relinquish; his right became concrete only on the demise of Musammal Munian, until then it was a mere spes successionis. Without in any way questioning the correctness of this principle, we are nevertheless of opinion that the lower Appellate Court, the learned District Judge of Agra, was right in holding that Fateh Singh is so bound by the terms of his own deed of May the 12th, 1905, that he cannot successfully impugn the alienation to which he then gave his unqualified assent. We have examined this document and we find that it is drawn up in the strongest possible terms. The two executants, Fateh Singh and Sunder, purport to renounce whatever rights and relinquish whatever interest they might conceivably possess under the Hindu law in respect of the property covered by the deed of gift; but they do even more than this. They expressly covenant that at no time hereafter will either of them or their heirs, successors or representatives, set up any right or claim whatsoever to the property specified at the foot of the deed which is, of course, the property conveyed to the defendant idol by Musammal Munian in her deed of the 19th of April 1905.

One minor matter in controversy was, whether Fateh Singh and Sunder received any consideration for the execution of this deed of relinquishment. We have obtained a finding from the District Judge that no such consideration passed. We are not concerned with the question of the correctness of this finding. In the deed of relinquishment itself the executants state that their motive for executing the same is, that the gift was one in favour of the tutelary deity of the family and they purport to be actuated by pious and religious motives. We are content to deal with the matter on this footing.

On the question of law involved we were referred in the course of argument to a number of decided cases; we do not think it will be necessary for us to refer to more than a few of these. The latest decision of this Court is clearly in favour of the defendant idol. The learned Judges who decided the case of Mahadeo Prasad Singh v.

FATEH SINGH v. THAKUR RUKMINI RAWANJI MAHARAJ.

Mata Prasad (4) after a review of previous authorities held that a reversioner who had joined in making or had ratified a particular transfer by a Hindu widow could not in the event of the succession opening in his favour be permitted to question the validity of that transfer. We appreciate the fact that one of the reasons for the reference made to a Full Bench in the present case was to have the decision above quoted fully considered and discussed; but the respondent is clearly entitled to have it noted that the latest authoritative pronouncement of this Court on the question in issue is directly in his favour. Much of the argument before us has turned upon two cases of the Bombay High Court, Bai Parvati v. Dayabhai Manchharam (5) and Basappa v. Fakirappa (6). The first of these decisions may fairly be described as the sheet-anchor of the plaintiff-appellant's case and, at first sight, it is very much in his favour. It is a clear instance of a transfer made by a Hindu widow jointly with the reversioners entitled to succeed upon her death being set aside at the instance of the same reversioner after the succession had opened. In the later case, however, the learned Judges of the Bombay High Court themselves pointed out that the decision in Bai Parvati v. Dayabhai Manchharam (5) proceeded upon a peculiar and exceptional state of facts. The alienation there contested was made under a deed by which the widow purported to assign her life-interest only, while the reversioner purported to convey whatever rights belonged to her on the date of the execution. It was rightly held that the reversioner possessed no rights capable of assignment in the lifetime of the widow, and that it is not a correct proposition of law to say that the widow and the nearest reversioner between them represent the entire estate. These principles once recognised it becomes obvious that the widow herself having conveyed nothing but her life-interest nothing more than this could pass under the deed.

In the case of Basappa v. Fakirappa (6) the learned Judges of the Bombay High Court explained their earlier decision and held that gift by a Hindu widow of a portion of her late husband's estate in her hands as such widow if made with the consent of the nearest reversioner living at the time of the conveyance was valid as against the reversioner who has so consented in the event of the succession opening in favour of the said reversioner. The learned Judges there pointed out that, with the exception of their own previous decision, which they distinguished for the reason already explained, their attention had not been drawn to a single reported case in which a reversioner had been permitted after he had succeeded to the estate to challenge a conveyance made by the widow to which he had expressly assented before the succession opened. We find ourselves in the same position and it might almost be sufficient for us to say that the whole weight of authority is in favour of the respondent to this appeal. We were referred in argument to a number of cases of this Court, both reported and unreported, in which similar attempt by a reversioner, who had succeeded to an estate to set aside a conveyance by the widow to which he had assented or which had been ratified by him before the succession opened had been defeated. The argument before us really turned upon an attempt to define with precision some general principle of law upon which these decisions could all be based. We are of opinion that such a principle is to be found upon a consideration of two important decisions of their Lordships of the Privy Council, Bajrangi Singh v. Manokarnika Bakhsh Singh (7) and Rangasami Goundan v. Nachiappa Goundan (8). The former was a case from Oudh and it was an attempt to contest an alienation which had been made by a Hindu widow with the express concurrence of practically the entire body of reversioners living at the time. Their Lordships repelled this attempt, but in so doing made use of expressions about which considerable controversy arose in the Courts in India. For this reason their Lordships themselves, in the latter case above referred to, entered upon an elaborate review of the entire question of the legal effect upon the validity of transfers made by a Hindu widow of her deceased husband's estate held by her as such widow of the concurrence, consent or ratification of the nearest reversioners living at the time of the transfer. It is towards the close of their judgment that their Lordships laid down the principle upon which the controversy now before us ought, in our opinion, to be determined. After discussing various aspects of the question and explaining the decision in Bajrangji Singh's case (7), their Lordships entered upon this particular aspect of the question in an important paragraph which begins with the words, "No doubt there is another view which is not estoppel, but is expressed by one learned Judge as ratification. It is scarcely that, though it might be hyper-criticism to object to the use of the word. What it is based on is this. An alienation by a widow is not a void contract. It is only voidable." For this last proposition express authority is quoted in the case of Bijoy Gopal Mukerji v. Krishna Maheshi Debî (9). Their Lordships go on to point out that if a reversioner who had actually succeeded to the estate thereupon did something which showed that he treated the alienation as good he would lose his right of complaint. "This may be spoken of, though scarcely accurately, as ratification. (In some cases it has been expressed as an election to hold the deed good." They then pointed out that a presumptive reversionary heir was not bound to challenge an alienation by the widow in possession of the estate as soon as it came to his knowledge, but was entitled to wait till "the death of the widow has confirmed his character." They added, "Of course, something might be done even before that time which amounted to an actual election to hold the deed good." If these words are carefully considered with reference to their context, it seems to us quite beyond question that they refer to something done by the reversioner before the death of the widow has "affirmed his character." Applying this principle, the conclusion we arrive at is that no reversioner could well have done anything before the death of the widow which so clearly amounted to an actual election to hold good the transfer effected by the widow while in possession of the estate to which he had since succeeded as what Fateh Singh did when he executed the deed of May the 12th, 1905. Having made this election he cannot be permitted, now that the succession has opened in his favour in respect of half of the estate formerly in Musammat Munia's possession, to challenge the validity of the transfer which he had expressly bound himself to accept, whether his action be spoken of as a ratification of the transfer, or as an election to hold good the deed of April 19th, 1905. We are satisfied that it is binding upon Fateh Singh so that he personally is not permitted to challenge its effect.

For these reasons we are of opinion that the decision of the learned District Judge of Agra was in substance correct and that Fateh Singh's suit must fail.

We have before us another small matter with which it is necessary for us to deal. The respondent has petitioned this Court pointing out a small error in the decree of the lower Appellate Court, in which a sum of Rs. 100 paid on account of Pleader's fees has been omitted, apparently by mere oversight, from the schedule of costs incurred by the respondent. We order that this omission be made good by the insertion of the said sum of Rs. 100 in the schedule. Apart from this small rectification we affirm the judgment and decree of the lower Appellate Court dismissing this appeal with costs, including fees in this Court on the higher scale.

Walsh, J.—I entirely agree. In my judgment, the so called deed of relinquishment, which is not an accurate description of this deed of confirmation and consent, is an absolute bar to a suit by either Fateh Singh, or those who claim under him, for his share. It does not matter whether it is called an estoppel, an election, or equitable bar; we have to give effect to the acts and intentions of parties as evidenced by their conduct, unless prevented by some Statute, or by some rule of law or equity. The proportion of the estate given by the widow's deed of gift, or endowment is exceptionally large, and could not stand proprio vigore. But it is an endowment for religious purposes, and, if within the limits as regards amount permitted by law, would be valid. The only question, as it seems to me, which arises in this appeal is whether Fateh Singh, in view of his conduct, could be heard to say that it was in excess of what was legally permissible. No question is raised as to the right of any other reversioner to challenge the propriety of the gift. Nor is it an adequate answer to the question propounded merely to show that there was no binding agreement under the Indian Contract Act. The District Judge in dealing with the issues referred by the Full Bench has, perhaps inevitably, confined himself to the question of a simple contract. But the clear terms of Fateh Singh's deed, the circumstance that it was almost contemporaneous with the deed of endowment, and with an attempt by donor to confer some benefit on Fateh Singh by Will, and, further, the fact that Fateh Singh's brother, Sunder, solemnly joined, all go to show that the three parties, from high motives, and for adequate reasons, approved of, and desired to encourage this religious endowment and that as a fundamental element in such mutual arrangement, Fateh Singh agreed not to claim his share of the reversion if he ever became entitled to one. The principle that, when such a course of conduct is clearly established, the person who has consented or elected to approve cannot afterwards make a claim inconsistent with his own solemn act, has been established by the Courts in India in a long series of cases. The distinction between such a case, and the attempt to transfer à spes successionis contrary to the provisions of section 6 of the Transfer of Property Act, is clearly marked by a comparison of Bu. Parvath v. Dayabhai Manchharam (5) with Basappa v. Fakirappa (6). The decision of the District Judge in this case has not been shown to conflict with any rule laid down by their Lordships of the Privy Council, and was clearly right. The question of the effect of the decree in favour of Duli Chand does not, in my opinion, arise, and the point was conceded at the Bar during the hearing.

CHINNASAMI SERVAI alias CHINNASWAMY THEVAN—RESPONDENT.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), ss. 4, 5—
Court holiday treated as working day by special permission—Last day for presentation of application—Application made next day if out of time—Delay, whether can be excused.

Where a Court holiday is treated as a working day and not a public holiday, and with the special permission of the High Court, a Court sits on that day, the Court cannot be held to have been closed on that day; an application, therefore, which ought to have been filed on that day but is filed on the next working day is out of time. [p. 14, col. i.]

Where, however, the publication of the order of the High Court was insufficient to put parties on notice, the delay in filing the application would be excusable under section 5 of the Limitation Act.

Section 4 of the Limitation Act is applicable only where the period of limitation expires on a day when the Court is closed. [p. 14, col. i.]

Petition, under section 25 of Act IX of 1887, praying the High Court to revise an order, dated the 1st April 1921, of the Court of Small Causes at Kumbakonam, in Interlocutory Application No. 283, of 1921, in S. C. No. 5690 of 1919.

Mr. T. R. Srinivasa Raja Gopala Aiyangar, for the Petitioner.

Mr. S. R. Mukhuswami Iyer, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the petitioner's suit was dismissed for default on 20th January 1921. On 24th February 1921 he applied for its restoration. That application should prima facie have been made not later than 19th February 1921. But it was contended before the lower Court and is contended here that the time available was extended with reference to the occurrence of holidays on 19th, 20th 21st and 22nd February 1921. As regards 21st and 22nd February 1921 there is no doubt that the lower Court was closed under Government Notification for the Mahamakam festival. 20th February 1921 was a Sunday. The only question is then whether the Court was closed on 19th February 1921. That day was a holiday as a penultimate Saturday. But the Court sat and the day was treated as not a public holiday with the special permission of the High Court given in its order dated 4th February 1921.

It is urged first that the lower Court should have held that the petition to it was in time with reference to section 4 of the Limitation Act. Section 4 is applicable only when the period of limitation expires on a day when the Court is closed. It cannot be said that in the present case the Court was closed on 19th February 1921.

This failing, it has been suggested that the petitioner had sufficient cause for not making his application to the lower Court within the period allowed and that the delay in making it should be excused with reference to section 5, Limitation Act; and, in the circumstances of the case, the petitioner has been allowed to amend his petition in this Court accordingly. It is material that this Court's order permitting the lower Court to sit on 19th February 1921, though passed on 4th February 1921, was despatched to the lower Court only on 8th February 1921 and was presumably received there next day. It is not shown what publication of the order there was or that the petitioner who does not live in Kumbakonam itself could reasonably be expected to take notice of it. This being so, he had, in my opinion, sufficient cause for assuming that the Court would, as usual, be closed on 19th February 1921, the penultimate Saturday, and for postponing the presentation of his petition to the next Court day, 24th February 1921.

The result is, the lower Court's order must be set aside with a direction to it to restore the petition and deal with it on the merits in accordance with law. Costs in this Court will follow the result of the proceedings on the restoration petition and be provided for by lower Court in its order thereon.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 11, Exp. I V—Suits for possession of property—Suit on ground of gift from father, dismissal of—Subsequent suit as orasa son, whether res judicata—Alternate claims, joinder of—Test.

A person claimed title to a plot of land as having been given to him by his father who, at the time of the suit, was dead. The suit was dismissed on the ground that the gift was invalid. He brought another suit in his capacity as the orasa son of his father but the Court held it to be res judicata.

Held, affirming the decision of the lower Court, that if the plaintiff had in the former suit put in the claim that he made in the subsequent suit as an alternative claim, there would have been no confusion and all questions relating to his title in the property would have been completely and finally determined. Second appeal from a decree of the Additional Divisional Judge, Prome, confirming that of the Sub-Divisional Judge, Thayetmyo.

Mr. Halker, for the Appellant.

Mr. Lambert, for the Respondents.

MAUNG BA THAW V. MA HNIT.

JUDGMENT.—The point for determination is whether the present suit is res judicata by reason of a former suit.

Both the suits were instituted in the same Court and between the same parties, and the subject-matter is the same. In the former suit the plaintiff claimed title to three pieces of paddy lands, as having been given to him by his father who, at the time of that suit, was dead. It was held that the gift was not valid. In the present suit he sues as the orasa son of his deceased father and his mother, Ma Hnit, claiming a half share in the same three pieces of land.

Both the lower Courts have held that the present suit is res judicata.

If Explanation IV to section 11 of the Code of Civil Procedure applies to the case, the suit must be held to be res judicata.

The specific question to be determined is, whether in the former suit the plaintiff in the present case should, in the alternative, have made the claim he now makes.

Rameswar Pershad v. Rajkumari Ruttan Koer (1) is a Privy Council case. Jenkins, C.J., referred to it in Gudaappa v. Tirhappa (2) and said: "What is apparent, however, from the judgment is, that their Lordships considered that the case should be determined on the words of the section themselves; no authority is even cited. In reference to those words it is said 'That it might have been made a ground of attack is clear. That it ought to have been, appears to their Lordships to depend upon the particular facts of each case. Where matters are so dissimilar that their union might lead to confusion, the construction of the word ought would become important; in this case the matters were the same. It was only an alternative way of seeking to impose a liability upon Run Bahadur, and it appears to their Lordships that the matter ought to have been made a ground of attack in the former suit, and, therefore, that it should be deemed to have been a matter directly and substantially in issue' in the former suit, and is res judicata." The learned Chief Justice proceeded to state:—"The test, therefore, proposed whereby to determine whether it ought to have been matter of attack is this: are the matters so dissimilar that their union might lead to confusion?"

The facts of the Bombay case are that the first suit was for the recovery of certain lands on the allegations that the plaintiffs were the surviving members of the joint family to which the former owner belonged. That suit was dismissed. Then the same plaintiffs brought a suit to recover the same land, alleging that, on the death of the widow of the former owner, they became entitled as reversioners. It was held that the latter suit was res judicata. Both the causes of action existed at the time of the first suit. It was pointed out that in the first suit the plaintiffs could have alleged, in the alternative, their title as heirs, and that they ought to have so alleged it, because it was forbidden by no rule of pleading, and, on the contrary, it was necessary for the complete and final disposal of all questions as to the plaintiff's title, and also because no confusion could have arisen by introducing the plea in the former suit.

In the case before me it is conceded that the plaintiff might have, in the former suit, put in the claim that he now makes as an alternative claim. If he did so, there would have been no confusion, and all questions relating to his title in the property would have been completely and finally determined. For this reason, he ought to have made the claim in the present suit as a ground of attack in the former suit. For this reason, the present suit must be held to be res judicata.

The case of Masilamania Pillai v. Thiruvengadam Pillai (3) is similar to the present case, and Wallis and Miller, J.J., (White, C. J., dissenting) held that the subsequent suit was barred by Explanation II to section 13 of the Code of 1882. A careful perusal of the learned Chief Justice's judgment shows that the question whether a matter ought to have been made a ground of attack within the meaning of the provision in question would depend on the facts of the each case.

(3) 31 M. 385.

MAUNG BA THAW V. MA HNIT.

It has been argued that the cause of action in the present suit is not the same as that in the former suit, and that, therefore, Explanation IV to section 11 does not apply. But this is a case in which the plaintiff claims title to certain property, and, in proving his title to that property, he ought to have put forward all means of attack in his armoury; and it is to be pointed out that the rule, as enacted by section 11 of the present Civil Procedure Code, omits all references to the cause of action. Under the Civil Procedure Code of 1859 there was a conflict of opinion as to matters of the kind in question on this case. Section 2 of that Code says:—"The Civil Courts shall not take cognizance of any suit brought on a cause of action which shall have been heard and determined by a Court of competent jurisdiction in a former suit between the same parties or between parties under whom they claim." It is to be noticed that these provisions do not contain any provisions like those of Explanation IV to section 11 of the present Code. Under the Code of 1859, the Madras High Court consistently held in several cases that a plaintiff was not bound to bring forward all his titles at once. See Sadaya Pillai v. Chinmi (4) and Thyila Kandi Ummatha v. Thyila Kandi Cheria Kunhamed (5) which expressly dissented from the decisions of the Calcutta High Court in Denobundho Chowdhry v. Kristomonee Dossee (6) and Bheeka Lall v. Bhugoo Lall (7). In Brojo Lall Roy v. Khetur Nath Mitter (8) it was held that the dismissal of a suit for certain land on the basis of a gift would bar a suit for the same land on the ground of heirship, as "a litigant cannot be allowed to keep back one of his titles, and then . . . to bring a fresh suit on the ground that he had still a right in reserve. He is bound to disclose all his titles at once". It was also pointed out that the Subordinate Judge appeared to have confounded the plaintiff's title and his cause of action together, and to have considered that, because the plaintiff's title by inheritance was not decided by the former judgment it was open to trial now, and that a plaintiff's cause of action is a very different thing from his title; the one being something done contrary to a person's interest which obliges him to seek the aid of the Court, the other the proof that that something affords him a valid ground for relief.

In Dudsar Bibee v. Shakir Burkundaz (9) the decision was the same on facts similar to those of the last case cited above. Mitter, J., said:—"It is perfectly clear that the title on which the plaintiff has brought the present suit was in existence at the time when the former suit was brought, and she was bound to bring the latter suit on all the titles that were then in existence. She did not choose to do so; and it follows, therefore, that the decision in the former case, so far as it relates to the ownership of the jote, must operate against her as an estoppel in this case". These two cases were under the Code of 1859.

In the Code of 1877 a provision exactly the same as Explanation IV under consideration was inserted, besides other Explanations. It has been retained in the Code of 1882, which has now been superseded by the present Code. It seems clear to me that the insertion of the Explanation in the Code of 1877 was with the object of putting an end to the conflict.

The decision in the Privy Council case above cited is binding on all the Courts in the Indian Empire, and cases which were decided by the High Courts in India before that decision are not of any assistance at all.

For the above reasons, the appeal is dismissed with costs.

MARMADUKE PICKTHALL, In re.BOMBAY HIGH COURT.

CRIMINAL APPLICATION NO 113 OF 1922.

September 20, 1922.

Present:—Sir Lalubhai Shah, Kt., Acting Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice Crump.• In re MARMADUKE PICKTHALL.Contempt of Court—Newspaper articles—Journalistic privilege—Imputation of dishonesty.

• In determining whether an article published in a newspaper constitutes a contempt of Court, the point to be considered is the natural and probable effect of the article, and not only the avowed intention of the Editor. Where the article, as a whole, would leave on the mind of an ordinary reader the clear impression that injustice had been deliberately done in the trial of a case, the publication of such an article would constitute a contempt of Court. [p. 19, col. 2.]

Judges and Courts are alike open to criticism, and if reasonable argument or expostulation is offered against any judicial act as contrary to law or the public good, no Court could or would treat that as contempt of Court. The law ought not to be astute in such cases to criticise adversely what under such circumstances and with such an object is published; but it is to be remembered that in this matter the liberty of the press is no greater and no less than the liberty of every subject of the King. It is a jurisdiction, however, to be exercised with scrupulous care, to be exercised only when the case is clear and beyond reasonable doubt. [p. 18, col. 1.]

The freedom of the journalist is an ordinary part of the freedom of the subject, and to whatever lengths the subject in general may go, so also may the journalist, but, apart from Statute law, his privilege is no other and no higher. The responsibilities which attach to his power in the dissemination of printed matter may, and in the case of a conscientious journalist do, make him more careful, but the range of his assertions, his criticisms, or his comments is as wide as, and no wider than, that of any other subject. No privilege attaches to his position. [p. 20, col. 2.]

A journalist may say that a Judge is wrong, or ignorant of law, but if he accuses a Judge of dishonesty or corruption he transgresses the limit. [p. 21, col. 1.]

Rule.

Mr. Kanga, Advocate-General, with him Mr. S. S. Patker, Government Pleader, for the Crown.

Mr. Jinnah, (with him Mr. Rattanlal Ranchoddas, instructed by Messrs. Maiti, Mody, Ranchoddas & Co.), for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

Shah, Ag. C. J.—This is a Rule issued on the application of the Government of Bombay against Marmaduke Pickthall, the Editor, Printer, and Publisher of the Bombay Chronicle, to show cause why he should not be committed for contempt of Court in respect of the article headed "The Malagaon Appeals" published in the issue of the said paper of April 24th 1922.

The article in question relates to what may be briefly stated as the Malagaon riot cases. The original trial was held by the Sessions Judge of Nasik against one hundred and thirteen persons, out of whom sixty-six persons were convicted by him, and the rest acquitted. Sixty-four persons appealed to this Court. These appeals were heard by Marten and Crump, JJ., for several days and they delivered their judgments on April 18th. A few of the appellants were acquitted: and in the case of the remaining appellants the convictions were confirmed. On the whole, it may be said that, in the main, the conclusions of the Trial Court were accepted. The record was exceptionally heavy and the difficulty of handling the appeals unusual. The case was undoubtedly important and difficult. The article in question was written by way of criticism shortly after the judgments were delivered.

I may note, at the outset, the objection raised by Mr. Jinnah to any reference being made to the interlocutory judgment of Marten, J., when the Rule was granted, on the ground that it has the effect of prejudging the point which we have to decide. We have overruled the objection, it does not prejudice the issue in any sense; and, speaking for myself, it has been helpful to me in knowing the general features of the case without having to turn to the bulky record for the information. It is obvious that we have to decide the questions arising on the Rule, and the interlocutory judgment does not in the slightest degree affect that position.

In this case we are concerned with a contempt of this Court and not of any Subordinate Court; and no question of jurisdiction, such as arose in Emperor v. Balkrishna Govind Kulkarni (1), arises in this case.

The publication we are concerned with refers to the proceedings which had ended, and it will not be inappropriate to refer briefly to the considerations applicable to a publication of that kind. I take them as stated in the following extracts from the judgment in McLeod v. St. Aubyn (2):—

(1) 65 Ind. Cas. 753; 46 B. 592; 24 Bom. L. R. 16; 23 Cr. L. J. 177 (1922) A. I. R. (B.) 52.

"Committals for contempt of Court are ordinarily in cases where some contempt ex facie of the Court has been committed, or for comments on cases pending in the Courts. However, there can be no doubt that there is a third head of contempt of Court by the publication of scandalous matter of the Court itself...The power summarily to commit for contempt of Court is considered necessary for the proper administration of justice. It is not to be used for the vindication of the Judge as a person...Committal for contempt of Court is a weapon to be used sparingly, and always with reference to the interests of the administration of justice. Hence, when a trial has taken place and the case is over, the Judge or the Jury are given over to criticism. It is a summary process, and should be used only from a sense of duty and under the pressure of public necessity, for there can be no landmarks pointing out the boundaries in all cases."

I may also refer to the following passages in the judgment of Lord Russell of Killowen, C. J., in Reg. v. Gray (3).

"Any act done or writing published calculated to bring a Court or a Judge of the Court into contempt, or to lower his authority, is a contempt of Court. That is one class of contempt. Further, any act done or writing published calculated to obstruct or interfere with the due course of justice or the lawful process of the Courts is a contempt of Court. The former class belongs to the category which Lord Hardwicke, L. C., characterised as 'scandalising a Court or a Judge'. That description of that class of contempt is to be taken subject to one and an important qualification. Judges and Courts are alike open to criticism, and if reasonable argument or expostulation is offered against any judicial act as contrary to law or the public good, no Court could or would treat that as contempt of Court. The law ought not to be astute in such cases to criticise adversely what under such circumstances and with such an object is published; but it is to be remembered that in this matter the liberty of the press is no greater and no less than the liberty of every subject of the Queen. It is a jurisdiction, however, to be exercised with scrupulous care, to be exercised only when the case is clear and beyond reasonable doubt."

The questions that arise for our consideration are: first, whether the case of contempt is clearly made out against the opponent; and, secondly, whether, having regard to all the circumstances, it is necessary to take action against the opponent in the interests of the administration of justice.

As regards the first point, the materials that we have to consider principally are the article itself and the affidavit of the opponent. It is urged by the learned Advocate-General that the article attributes to the Judges of the High Court who decided the appeals an improper desire to uphold the convictions on evidence which would be ordinarily considered clearly insufficient to punish persons for their political views and activities rather than for the crimes committed by them and to give effect to the plea of exceptional times rather than to vindicate justice. It is also suggested by him that the article insinuates that the Judges were influenced by some outside agency in arriving at their conclusions. On the other hand, it is urged by Mr. Jinnah that the article suggests no such outside influence and it would be wholly unreasonable to read it in that sense. He contends that the writer suggests nothing more than an error of judgment in convicting some innocent persons, that the inaccuracies in the statement of the evidence and the charges are not intentional, that the article attributes at the most an unconscious political bias to the Judges in the appreciation of the evidence, and that it is a fair criticism open to his client to offer on a political case of importance. In other words, he has argued in favour of the plea put forward by his client in the affidavit in these words:—

"It is not the policy of the Bombay Chronicle to lower the dignity of this Honourable Court as the Government Pleader imagines it has done. But I say that after the conclusion of the trial and appeals I felt justified in criticising the decision and in doing so I did not mean to show any disrespect to this Honourable Court or to its dignity. The article in question is merely a criticism of the decision of the Judges concerned and expresses an opinion to the effect that the lower and the Appeal Courts committed an error of judgment in attaching importance to the political character of the trial."

We have considered the article and the affidavit in the light of the arguments urged before us. I am prepared to concede that the article does not constitute a personal abuse of the Judges such as we find, for instance, in Keg. v. Gray (3) or in Narasinha Chinnaman Keikar, In re (4), nor does the article contain such comprehensive condemnation of Courts including this Court and British justice, as is to be found in the recent case of Satyabodha Ramchandra, In re (5). I also pass over as immaterial or insignificant for our present purposes the mistakes pointed out by the Advocate-General in the statements in the article as to the charges and the evidence in the case against the several accused. Taking the article as a whole, and making due allowance for the style, the view point and the possible political bias of a journalist, I find it difficult to avoid the conclusion that the article does attribute improper motives and political bias to the Judges in upholding the several convictions. I reject, as wholly improbable under the circumstances, the suggestion that the writer meant to imply that some extraneous influence was at work. But the article begins by a clear expression that the cause of justice was not vindicated by the Bombay High Court, and a clear implication that the vindication of justice is possible only when persons are acquitted and not if they are convicted. It clearly suggests that some innocent persons have been convicted not on account of a mere error of judgment but because of their active association with the Knilarat movement, and that they were singled out for exemplary punishment and made to pay the penalty for a cause rather than for any crime they committed. The article ends with a clear implication that the Judges were influenced by the consideration of exceptional times not, of course, expressly urged by the prosecution but impliedly taken into consideration by the Court that upheld the convictions on the evidence which, according to the writer, ought never to be accepted as sufficient. The article, as a whole, would leave on the mind of an ordinary reader the clear impression that injustice had been deliberately done on political grounds to some of the accused who were apparently innocent. In other words, it attributes judicial dishonesty to the Judges. I am unable to accept the contention that such an article does not constitute a contempt of Court. We have to consider the natural and probable effect of the article and not only the avowed intention of the Editor as indicated in his affidavit. I think that the publication of the article in question constitutes a contempt of Court.

The second question is more difficult. I am slow to hold that any unfair criticism of Courts or Judges constitutes such an interference with the administration of justice as should be punished. I am willing to act upon the view that the confidence of the public in Courts rests mainly upon the purity and correctness of their pronouncements and that such confidence is not lightly shaken by a mistaken or unfair criticism of this kind. At the same time, it is clear that the tendency of such criticism is to undermine the dignity of the Courts and in the end to embarrass the administration of justice. The faith of the public in the fairness and incorruptibility of Judges is a matter of great importance. On the other hand, I take into consideration the circumstance that the attitude of the opponent before us has not been unreasonable, particularly if due allowance is made for his natural partiality for the publication in question in his own paper, though the writer of it was a different person. I attach due weight to his statement that the policy of his paper is not "to lower the dignity of this Honourable Court." There is no allegation in the petition to suggest anything to the contrary. I also take into account that he has expressed his sincere 'regret' for the publication if it is held to constitute a contempt of this Court, as we hold it now. On the whole, I think that the ends of justice will be satisfied in this case if we order that he should pay a fine of Rs. 200 (rupees two hundred),

MAPMADUKE PICKTHALL, In re.

Crump, J.—The short facts of this matter are as follows:—On April 18th, 1922, a Divisional Bench of this Court delivered judgment in Criminal Appeal No. 776 of 1921 and other connected appeals. These cases dealt with what may be called the Malagaon riots which took place on April 25th, 1921. The record was voluminous and the appeal was possibly the heaviest that has been heard on the Criminal Appellate Side of this Court. The hearing lasted thirteen days. Put shortly, the riots arose in consequence of the inflamed state of feeling among the Mussalmans of Malagaon and were of a serious nature. Two Police Officers were murdered, and many other persons were injured. Much damage was also done to property. These cases were thus important merely as criminal cases but, further, in the public eye, they were held to have a political aspect.

On April 24th, 1922, there appeared in a newspaper styled The Bombay Chronicle an article headed "The Malagaon Appeals." This article contains a criticism of the conduct of the Judges of this Court who heard the appeals. At the instance of the Government of Bombay the Government Pleader moved this Court to take proceedings for contempt. A Rule was issued and arguments were heard.

The affidavit put in by the Editor of the newspaper comes shortly to this. That the article is fair comment; that the liberty of the Press demands that there should be freedom to point out errors in judgments, and to criticise judgments after they are delivered, and that there was no contempt. In the final sentence regret is expressed "if this Honourable Court is of opinion that the article in question does constitute contempt."

It is not disputed that this Court has jurisdiction to take proceedings for contempt of Court: nor is it disputed that comments on a case after the hearing is completed may amount to contempt. As to the latter proposition it is sufficient to cite the case of Reg. v. Gray (3). The questions which arise are whether the language used in this article amounts to contempt, and, if so, whether this Court should take notice of it. The principle is clear enough. The Court will not act so much to protect the dignity of its Judges as in the interest of the administration of justice. This Court may rightly hold itself to be above such criticism as this article contains but if the public confidence in the impartial administration of justice is in danger of being impaired, it may be the duty of the Court to exercise its powers.

The nature of the defence has been indicated, but with reference to paragraphs 3 and 16 of the affidavit the following remarks of their Lordships of the Privy Council are pertinent (page 169*) :—

"Their Lordships regret to find that there appeared on the one side in this case the time-worn fallacy that some kind of privilege attaches to the profession of the Press as distinguished from the members of the public. The freedom of the journalist is an ordinary part of the freedom of the subject, and to whatever lengths the subject in general may go, so also may the journalist, but, apart from Statute law, his privilege is no other and no higher. The responsibilities which attach to his power in the dissemination of printed matter may, and in the case of a conscientious journalist do, make him more careful; but the range of his assertions, his criticisms, or his comments, is as wide as, and no wider than, that of any other subject. No privilege attaches to his position."

"Upon the other side it would appear... that this false and dangerous doctrine may have been hinted at, that some privilege or protection attaches to the public acts of a Judge which exempts him, in regard to these, from free and adverse comment. He is not above criticism, his conduct and utterances may demand it. Freedom would be seriously impaired if the judicial Tribunals were outside of the range of such comment." Channing Arnold v. Emperor (6).

Though the case in which these remarks are to be found was not one of contempt, nevertheless they furnish a valuable guide in dealing with such matters as that which is here before the Court. No one, whether he be a Judge or not, ought to take exception to fair criticism, nor should any journalist be hindered from offering such criticism. Nevertheless, there is a limit which must not be passed. A journalist may say that a Judge is wrong, or ignorant of law, but if he accuses a Judge of dishonesty or corruption he transgresses the limit. And if it appears to this Court that such criticism must hinder the proper administration of justice, then it may be the clear duty of this Court to exercise its powers. The article in question must be considered from this stand-point.

The first paragraph of the article deals with the case of Wolfe Tone. The substance is that the Judges "who detested the rebels" nevertheless protected Wolfe Tone; and this was "a splendid assertion of the supremacy of the law." The second paragraph opens with these words: "We wish we could say of the Bombay High Court judgment that it was a splendid assertion of the supremacy of the law." The innuendo is that the Judges of this Court did not rise above political considerations. The point is made clear in paragraph 10 of the affidavit where it is said that Wolfe Tone's case is cited to show that "the administration of justice should be pure and not tainted with extraneous considerations." The writer then proceeds to deal with the facts of the case. There has been some question as to the accuracy of this recital, but it is not necessary to go into this beyond remarking that the writer deliberately ignores the largest and most important part of the evidence. Then follows this passage:—

"In a case like the one under notice to which the authorities apparently attached considerable political significance it was hardly likely that the defence of the accused, especially the 'tallest poppies among them,' would easily be accepted, even where it was sufficiently clear and emphatic."

The plain meaning is that the learned Sessions Judge convicted against the weight of the evidence.

The writer then points out that the majority of these convictions were confirmed by this Court. The passage which follows gives the reasons which, according to the writer, influenced the Judges of this Court:—

"Some of these may have undoubtedly been guilty of the charges brought against them; but of the rest it is difficult to believe the same, and the impression in the public mind is that certain prominent people, because of their active association with the Khilafat movement, were singled out for exemplary treatment, and made to pay the penalty for the cause rather than for any crime they have committed. We have heard it said that Indian Judges are always out for convictions but it can hardly be the duty or the pleasure of the High Court to uphold them".

The plain meaning is this. The Sessions Judge convicted though the defence was clear and emphatic. The High Court confirmed the convictions contrary to "their duty and their pleasure." It was argued that nothing more was meant than that the Judges being human were swayed by some subconscious political bias. But the words mean more than this. A man so influenced does not act against "his duty and his pleasure." He believes that that which he does is right and he is not reluctant to do it.

The article closes with the following words:

"It was an eminent English Judge, Justice Buckland, who said that the administering of "pure unadulterated justice" is the only duty of the Courts and they have no right to take into consideration 'the plea of exceptional times' brought forward by the executive to secure convictions against the politically minded."

The ingenuity of Counsel has failed to discover where and in what context "that eminent English Judge, Justice Buckland," used these words. But here and in this context the meaning is plain. "Justice was not pure and unadulterated because the High Court gave effect to the plea of exceptional times." It is unnecessary to ascribe to these words the grosser meaning suggested by the Advocate-General. They do not fairly bear the construction that outside influence was brought to bear upon the Judges. It is enough to say that no plea of "exceptional times" was ever raised on behalf of the prosecution, nor would any such plea have been tolerated by this Court.

Such is the article and it is impossible to doubt that it charges the Judges of this Court with conscious dereliction of duty.

EMPEROR V. RAJANI KANTA GHOSE.

But the further question remains whether it is necessary to act. Unfortunately, the effect of such writing as this cannot be ignored, and however unwilling this Court may be, "for indeed all Courts are unwilling to take proceedings in contempt unless compelled—it is impossible to permit the public to be poisoned with such calumnies as these. In a country such as this where more importance is attached to the printed words than it perhaps at times deserves, it would be difficult for the average reader to read the language used without conceiving grave doubts as to the integrity and impartiality of the Judges of the Court. Therefore, in the interests of the administration of justice the Court cannot overlook this contempt.

Something has been said as to the apology, set at the close of the affidavit, that expression of regret is conditional and such as the Judges of this Court declined to consider in the case of Narasimha Chintaman Kelkar, In re (4). The reasons assigned in that case are equally applicable here.

Legal Practitioners Act (XVIII of 1879), s. 13 (b)—Legal Practitioner—Fraudulent conduct—Representation of conflicting interests.

A legal practitioner cannot represent conflicting interests or undertake the discharge of inconsistent duties. When he has once been retained and received the confidence of a client, he cannot accept a retainer from or enter the service of those whose interests are adverse to his client in the same controversy or in matter so closely allied thereto as to be in effect a part thereof. The rule is rigid and is designed not alone to prevent the dishonest practitioner from fraudulent conduct but as well to preclude the honest practitioner from putting himself in a position where he may be required to choose between conflicting duties, or be led to an attempt to reconcile conflicting interests, rather than to enforce to their full extent the rights of the interests which he should alone represent. Proceedings under the Legal Practitioners Act were taken against a Mukhtear on the ground that he, while acting on behalf of the prosecution in a criminal case, had drafted a written statement on behalf of two of the accused persons in that case. The Mukhtear pleaded that he had acted in good faith and that he had not realised that his conduct was improper :

Held, that the Mukhtear was guilty of an offence against professional propriety and was liable to be punished. [p. 24, col. 2.]

People v. Spencer, (1882) 61 Calif 128, referred to.

Reference by the District Judge and Sessions Judge, Midnapore dated the 11th May 1922.

Babu Surendra Nath Guha in support of the Reference:—The Mukhtear concerned is clearly guilty of an offence against professional propriety. As a legal practitioner he cannot undertake the discharge of conflicting duties. The Mukhtear pleaded ignorance and good faith. But ignorance of law is no defence to a charge of professional misconduct. Refers to Jugal Chandra Mazumdar, In the matter of (1).

Mr. J. C. Hazra, Counsel (with him Babus Gopendra Nath Das and Santosh Kumar Pal), for the Mukhtear :—The evidence does not support the charge under section 13 (a) of the Legal Practitioners Act. The evidence clearly established that the man from whom the Mukhtear took instructions had authority to look after the criminal case on behalf of the accused. So on the evidence the charge under section 13 (a) of the Legal Practitioners Act cannot stand.

JUDGMENT.—This is a reference under section 14 of the Legal Practitioners Act in the matter of Babu Rajani Kanta Ghose, Mukhtear. The facts proved by the evidence are narrated by the District Judge in his letter of reference. Babu Rajani Kanta Ghose was engaged as a Mukhtear on the side of the prosecution in a criminal case in which there were four accused persons. Under instruction received from one Padlochan Das, who was looking after the case of two of these accused persons, namely Harihar and Nirubar, Babu Rajani Kant Ghose prepared a draft written statement on their behalf. It has been proved that neither Harihar nor Nirubar gave instruction direct to him to prepare the draft. The draft written statement was taken to the gentleman who was engaged as Mukhtear on behalf of the four accused persons. When he read the written statement he found that it would be impossible to file it in Court, inasmuch as it implicated the other two accused to their prejudice. The result was that Babu Nabakrishta Das Adhikary did not file the written statement. It is thus obvious that Babu Rajani Kanta Ghose, while engaged for the prosecution in the criminal case, did prepare a written statement for the use of two of the accused persons. In these circumstances the Sub-Deputy Magistrate took proceedings under the Legal Practitioners Act and framed a charge in the following terms: "Whereas it appears that you were retained by the prosecution in the case of Pahul Mali v Sishir Kumar Das Mohapatra and whereas it appears that you had drafted a written statement on behalf of accused Harihar and Nirubar and thereby acted contrary to the provisions of section 13 (a) of the Legal Practitioners Act, I charge you under the said section of the said Act." The Mukhtear filed a written statement in answer to this charge. Evidence was recorded in due course and this reference ultimately made by the District Judge as already stated.

It has been argued before us by Mr. Hazra that no case has been made out under section 13 (a) of the Legal Practitioners Act, inasmuch as the evidence establishes that Padma Lochan Das who approached Babu Rajani Kanta Ghose was authorized by Harihar and Nirubar to look after the Criminal case on their behalf. In our opinion, it is not necessary to consider whether the evidence does or does not establish this point. The reference need not be treated as one under section 13 (a) which provides for the case where a Mukhtear takes instructions except from the party on whose behalf he is retained or some person who is the recognised agent of such party within the meaning of the Code of Civil Procedure or some servant, relative or friend authorised by the party to give such instructions. The facts stated in the notice issued by the Sub-Deputy Magistrate show that the case was really under section 13 clause (b) which includes a case where a legal practitioner is guilty of fraudulent or grossly improper conduct in the discharge of his professional duty.

There is, in our opinion, no doubt as to what actually happened. It is plain upon the evidence and upon the admission of the Mukhtear that while he was acting on behalf of the prosecution, he drafted a written statement on behalf of two of the accused persons. An attempt has been made to support the theory that he might have forgotten the facts of the case and might not have realised that the written statement which he drafted related to the very case he was to conduct on behalf of the prosecution. We find from the record, however, that he accepted the Mukhtear-nama on the 14th June 1921 when the proceedings were instituted, and the written statement was not drawn up till the 16th February 1922 at the concluding stage of the trial. During the six months which had elapsed, he might be expected to have made himself familiar with the case for the prosecution. Indeed he does not allege that he was under a misapprehension. He pleads that he did not realise that his conduct was improper; in other words, he believed in good faith that, though he was Mukhtear for the prosecution, he was free to prepare the written statement for the accused.

As this has happened once and may happen again, it is desirable to state the well settled general rule that a legal practitioner cannot represent conflicting interests or undertake the discharge of inconsistent duties. When he has once been retained and received the confidence of a client, he cannot accept a retainer from or enter the service of those whose interests are adverse to his client in the same controversy or in matter so closely allied thereto as to be in effect a part thereof. The rule is rigid and is designed not alone to prevent the dishonest practitioner from fraudulent conduct, but as well to preclude the honest practitioner from putting himself in a position where he may be required to choose between conflicting duties, or be led to an attempt to reconcile conflicting interests, rather than to enforce to their full extent the rights of the interests which he should alone represent. This is not the first instance in which the rule has been broken and reference may be made to the cases of Davies v. Clough (2), Cholmondeley v. Clinton (3); Day v. Ponsonby (4). Fidelity is required from all who hold fiduciary relations, they must not lightly enter upon such relationships, but if they do, they will not be permitted to be disloyal; and of all species of disloyalty, desertion and adherence to the enemy or to the opposite party in a suit is recognised as the worst. On these grounds it has been held that the attorney may be disbarred where he conducts a criminal prosecution against a person or assists therein, and thereafter appears for the defence, or while acting as attorney for the prosecutor in a criminal case he accepts money from the defendant in consideration of a dismissal. Reference may in this connection be made to the decision in Ali Muhammad v. Sham Lall (5), Ugri Bhoi v. Shridhar Kulta (6), Rai Durgapershad v. Baivan Bi (7), Pallonji Mervanji v. Kallabhai Lallubhai (8), Ramlall v. Moonia Bibee (9) and Reg. v. Bezouji Nowroji (10). We may observe that the conduct imputed to an attorney when it is said that he has received instructions from both sides in a cause is so disreputable that unfounded allegation to this effect is considered actionable without proof of special damage; Shire v. King (11) reported as King v. Shore (12) Brokes case (13).

The Mukhtear before us is not the first member of the legal profession who has been under the delusion that it is open to a person to appear on behalf of the prosecution and at the same time to assist the defence. The case of People v. Spencer (14) shows that he has had a predecessor where the attorney concerned conducted the case for the prosecution and then looked after the case for the defence. When he was called upon to explain his conduct he stated in all innocence that he did not realise that his conduct was reprehensible. The Court thereupon made the following observations: "By appearing both for the plaintiff and defendant in the same action he was guilty of violation of his duty as an attorney for which it is our duty to remove or suspend him. Neither his ignorance of the laws nor the crudity of his notions of professional ethics, can excuse an offence against professional propriety by one whose duty it is to assist in the administration of justice. The degree of turpitude involved in the breach of his duty by an attorney, however, must appear in the circumstances of each case. The punishment which should follow an inadvertent or ignorant departure from professional propriety, no seriously evil consequences having resulted, should be less severe than where the offence is a deliberate or corrupt violation of official oath. The circumstances presented by the record, while they go towards showing an absence of intentional wrong, do not justify respondent. However innocent his motives, his conduct must be condemned, yet in consideration of the facts we are disposed to inflict a penalty which, while it shall satisfy the provisions of the Code and mark our disapprobation of his act, shall not forever debar the respondent from the further practice of his profession." The Court then suspended the attorney from practice for a period of three months. We are of opinion that in the case before us a similar order may be made. We direct accordingly that the Mukhtear be suspended for a period of three months from this date.

Railways Act IX of 1890, s. 109—Reserved accommodation—Railway Company, powers of—Reservation, nature of.

By virtue of section 109 of the Railways Act, a Railway Company has a general power of reserving compartments for the use of passengers who have already booked their seats, or for prospective passengers who the Company anticipate will travel, and the Company are entitled to reserve either individual seats or whole compartments. But such power ought not to be exercised so as to give an undue preference or to cause an undue prejudice to any particular passenger traffic, whether individual or collective. [p. 29, cols. 1 & 2.]

Criminal reference made by the District Magistrate of East Khandesh.

FACTS appear from the following dissentient judgments of Sir Lallubhai Shah, Actg. C. J., and Crump, J., on October 5th 1922:—

Shah, Actg. C. J.—This is a reference by the District Magistrate of East Khandesh recommending that the conviction and sentence should be set aside. The accused was convicted by the First Class Magistrate of Jalgaon City, under section 109 of the Indian Railways Act, for having entered a compartment which was reserved for Europeans and Anglo-Indians in a passenger train. The accused had a third class ticket to travel from Pachora to Bhusaval by the down passenger train on February 17th, 1922; and he entered the compartment in question which was in fact vacant. The learned Magistrate was inclined to hold that the Railway Company had no power to reserve the compartment in that manner; but following the ruling in Brijbasi Lal v. Emperor (1) he held that the Railway Company had the inherent right to reserve compartments in that manner and convicted the accused and sentenced him to pay a fine of Rs. 5.

The accused applied to the District Magistrate who has made a reference to this Court.

The point that we have to consider is whether the compartment such as was reserved in this case could be legally reserved for a class of passengers without reference to the question whether there were any actual passengers of that class travelling or known to be intending to travel by that train. I have stated the question in this form, though in this particular case we are concerned with the reserved accommodation provided in a third class compartment in a passenger train for Europeans and Anglo-Indians, as, in my opinion, that is the question underlying the reference.

It is not suggested that there is any statutory provision or any rule under section 47 of the Indian Railways Act which authorises this kind of reservation. It appears to have been done in pursuance of 'Working Instructions' issued by the Railway Company, a copy of which has been furnished to us by Mr. Binning appearing for the Company. I refer to it only for the purpose of showing that the Crown and the Company rely upon the inherent powers of the Company and not upon any statutory provision or rule.

I have considered the arguments urged before us on behalf of the Crown, the Company, and the accused: and I have also considered the decisions of different Courts on the point, which are opposed to the view which I take of this question. In the first place I feel quite clear that the powers of the Company are subject to certain statutory limitations and must be determined in the light of the scheme of the Act so far as it bears upon the point in question. A penal provision ought to be strictly construed: and it is for the prosecution to make out that the compartment could be legally reserved in the manner it was reserved on this occasion. The Company has full power to regulate its traffic within the limits allowed by law. Section 42 (2) provides the limitation in question; and it is for the prosecution to establish that the limitation has not been transgressed in this case. I do not feel any doubt that the sect on refers to all traffic, which includes passenger traffic (see section 3 (II)). This point is, in my opinion, sufficiently dealt with in Vishwanath Ganesh v. G. I. P. Railway Company (2). It is true that no suit can be instituted or proceeding taken for any thing done or any omission made by the Railway Administration in violation or contravention of any provision of Chapter V. But I do not see how a Criminal Court is relieved of its obligation to consider this question so far as it is relevant in determining whether a particular offence is committed or not. In my opinion, it is a question of fact to be determined in each case whether the particular accommodation reserved for a section of the travelling public to the exclusion of the rest of the public involves any undue or unreasonable preference or advantage to or in favour of any particular person or description of traffic in any respect whatever or subjects any particular person or description of traffic to any undue or unreasonable prejudice or disadvantage in any respect whatever. I readily concede that the powers of a Railway Administration are very wide so long as it does not transgress the limitation which the Statute has imposed in the interests of the public. But where it exercises its powers in a manner which may appear to involve some kind of preference, it is open to the administration to have an appropriate rule under section 47 which would remove the doubt and difficulty to a large extent. For instance, if there were a rule authorising the Railway Administration to reserve accommodation for Europeans and Anglo-Indians travelling in the third class within such limits as may be prescribed the onus of proving that such a rule was inconsistent with the provisions of the Act, would lie heavily upon the party asserting it. When a rule is framed under section 47, it would imply that the Governor-General in Council is satisfied as to its need and propriety.

EMPEROR V. NARAYAN KRISANA GOGATE.

In the absence of such a rule, we have to consider it as a question of fact on the evidence in this case. In doing so it is necessary to bear in mind the provisions relating to 'carriage of passengers' in the Act. It is provided in section 66 that "every person desirous of travelling on a Railway shall, upon payment of his fare, be supplied with a ticket specifying the class, the fare and the range of his journey". Section 67 (1) provides that "fares shall be deemed to be accepted and tickets to be issued subject to the condition of there being room available in the train for which the tickets are issued," and that in case a person to whom a ticket has been issued does not get accommodation the fare is to be refunded. Thus it appears to me that a person who purchases a ticket shows beyond reasonable doubt that he is desirous of travelling by the particular train and is anxious to secure accommodation. If he finds a compartment vacant and cannot travel by it, he is put to undue disadvantage if the vacant room is kept apart for any person who has not shown any similar desire to travel. The Trial Magistrate has remarked in his judgment with reference to third class passengers that they "are now-a-days getting little accommodation in crowded trains even though these reserved compartments are seen mostly empty". In fact the learned Magistrate goes so far as to think that even a rule, if framed, would probably be considered to be inconsistent with the Act. I am not concerned with the question whether a rule, if framed, would be consistent with the provisions of the Act, and I do not express any opinion as to that. It would be premature and improper to suggest any opinion in anticipation about a rule which does not exist. But as regards the question of fact his observation is entirely in consonance with the evidence in the case. The relevant evidence on this point is quoted in the letter of reference by the District Magistrate, and is contained in the cross-examination of the Railway Police constable and guard. It clearly establishes that the overcrowding is not a rare occurrence, while a compartment which would accommodate nearly twenty-five passengers remains practically vacant. What appears to me to be a probable result of this manner of reserving accommodation for one class of passengers is that a passenger outside that class would be unable to travel by a particular train for want of room on account of overcrowding whereas there would be room in the train for a person of that class who may not have expressed any desire to travel and who may not travel at all by that train. That is a result which according to the evidence is not uncommon. When a compartment is reserved in pursuance of general instructions leading to such results, it cannot be said to be legally reserved so as to constitute an entry therein an offence punishable under section 109. The accident that a particular train was not crowded and that there was room for the accused on that particular occasion elsewhere in the train does not seem to me to afford any answer to the real question in the case. If the evidence in this case is accepted, as it has been accepted, it shows that the exercise of this power involves the result that some passengers outside the class of passengers for whom the compartment is reserved would be left over without any accommodation in the train, whereas a passenger of that particular class at that station or any of the following stations would get accommodation, and if there be no such passenger the compartment would remain unoccupied.

EMPEROR V. NARAYAN KRISHNA GOGATE.

It is also a matter for consideration that while the average space theoretically allowed to third class passengers would be and should be the same for all, the space in fact allowed to passengers of a particular class would be much greater, when a compartment is reserved for that class; for, according to the evidence, the average number of passengers of that class would be very small, and a compartment for twenty-five passengers would be practically reserved for that small number. This also indirectly but effectively introduces an element of preferential treatment. I desire to make it clear that I do not put any technical or narrow meaning upon the word 'passenger' as used in section 109. I include within its meaning a class of passengers; but I do not think that it could include within its scope any persons representing a class or section of the public without the slightest reference to their desire or intention to travel by that train previously expressed or known to the Railway Company. I think that a reservation of that kind is apt to involve a transgression of the limitation laid down in section 42 (2) and may be shown by evidence to involve that result in a particular case. That appears to me to have been shown in this case to the satisfaction of the Trial Magistrate; and the District Magistrate also takes the same view.

I have carefully considered the reported cases on this point; and I am unable to agree with the view that such reservation for a class or section of the public is necessarily legal. It may be illegal as transgressing the limits prescribed by section 42 (2), as it has been shown in this case.

I think, therefore, that the conviction and sentence ought to be set aside. I would order accordingly. Fine, if paid, to be refunded.

Crump, J.—This is a reference by the District Magistrate, East Khandesh, in the case of Narayan Krishna Gogate, who was tried by the Magistrate, First Class, Jalgaon City, for an offence punishable under section 109 of the Indian Railways Act (IX of 1890) and fined Rs. 5.

In making this reference the District Magistrate has relied on the decision of this Court in Vishwanath Ganesh v. G. I. P. Railway Company (2). That decision proceeded on the ground that the Court had no jurisdiction by reason of section 41 of the Indian Railways Act, and the remarks cited are, therefore, obiter. There is thus no decision of this Court precisely upon the point before us. There is, however, a decision of the Allahabad High Court, Brijbasi Lal v. Emperor (1), which on the facts is indistinguishable from the present case, and a decision of the Madras High Court, Komaran, In re (3), which is also directly in point though it deals with other questions with which we are not here concerned. The first of these decisions is no doubt open to question, as pointed out in the decision of this Court already cited, but in my opinion the decision of Oldfield, J. in the Madras case contains a clear and accurate exposition of the law on the point before us, and I am content to follow it.

Stated shortly the law is as follows:—

(3) 66 Ind. Cas. 520; 45 M. 215; (1922) M. W. N. 34; 15 L. W. 207; 30 M. L. T. 134; 42 M. L. J. 21; 23 Cr. L. J. 296; (1922) A. I. R. (M.) 35.

EMPEROR V. NARAYAN KRISHNA GOGATE.

The Railway Company can deal with their rolling stock as they please subject to any duties or restrictions imposed by the Legislature. We are here concerned with restrictions imposed by the Indian Railways Act, 1900; and section 42 of that Act is the only section which falls to be considered. The question is, whether there has been "undue preference" within the meaning of that term as used in section 42 (2). The term is familiar in England, but the English cases turn almost entirely on questions of differential treatment in the matter of rates. This much, however, may be said, that there is nothing illegal in showing 'preference' so long as it is not "undue preference". Further, that it is a question of fact in each case whether the preference shown is or is not 'undue'.

The accused entered this compartment knowing that it was reserved by the Railway Company for European and Anglo-Indian passengers. He did so, because he objected to racial distinctions (see his plea and examination, dated April 8th, 1922). Prima facie his act was an offence under section 109 of the Indian Railways Act. It is open to him to show in his defence that the preference shown to the class of passengers indicated was undue preference, but that was not the meaning of his plea. That plea in no way turned on the extent of accommodation reserved for this class. If, however, the plea of undue preference is made out by the evidence, effect may be given to it.

It is reasonable to assume that the Railway Company know their own business best, and that they will not reserve for any class accommodation beyond what is reasonable. Certainly I see no reason to suppose that Railway Companies are inclined to be over-liberal in the matter of accommodation. It would not pay them. The general instruction which the Company has issued in this case is: that one compartment shall be reserved for the class of passengers in question on all long distance trains. In order to determine whether with reference to this train the preference is undue, it would be necessary to know matters on which the record is silent. I take it that there is no undue preference to A unless there is prejudice to B. To determine this question for this train, generally speaking, it would be convenient to know what is the total average number of passengers, what is the average number of this special class, and what is the accommodation reserved for this special class, and what is the accommodation available for other passengers. Here all that is known is that the compartment reserved would hold from twenty to twenty-five passengers. Without some such data as I have indicated it is (in my opinion) impossible to say that, generally speaking, there is any undue preference. As to this general aspect of the question, the evidence on the record gives little assistance. That this compartment is often empty does not go far unless it is shown that the other passengers have not sufficient accommodation. The only evidence of overcrowding is contained in the statement of the Guard which is as follows:— "Except on bazar days the passenger trains are not overcrowded."

With reference to the day of the alleged offence the evidence is against the plea set up. The accused did not complain that he was in any way prejudiced. The Guard says that the accused complained that the board indicating the reservation of the compartment was "an insult" to him. That view of the matter is quite understandable, but it has nothing to do with the question of undue preference. Indeed it shows plainly enough that the accused's grievance would have been equally acute, had the accommodation reserved been adequate for one passenger only. I fully appreciate that aspect of the question, but I am not concerned with it. It does not affect the legal aspect of the matter. For the rest both the Guard and Constable, Khandu, say that on this day there was ample accommodation elsewhere. This being so, I fail to see how the plea of undue preference can be made out. Had it been established that owing to this reservation the class indicated find accommodation while other passengers cannot find accommodation the case might be different but there is no evidence to that effect, nor indeed is there any evidence worth the name of overcrowding in general.

I would decline to interfere and direct the record and proceedings to be returned.

JUDGMENT.

Marten, J.—In this case I enjoy the advantage of having before me the judgments of my brothers Shah and Crump, as well as those of the two learned Magistrates. I will not, therefore, recapitulate the facts, but will state my own conclusions.

In my judgment it is clear that by virtue of section 109 of the Indian Railways Act, 1890, the Railway Company has a general power of reserving compartments for the use of passengers. I am further of opinion that this power of reservation may be exercised either for actual passengers who have already booked their seats, or for prospective passengers who, the Company anticipate, will travel. I further hold that the Company are entitled to reserve either individual seats, or whole compartments. Thus they may reserve compartments for females travelling first or second class, or for smokers or non-smokers; or for members of a theatrical company or for a cricket or football team. I say females travelling first or second class, because section 64 only makes it compulsory on the Company to reserve accommodation for females travelling in the lowest class of carriage in the train. So, too, they may, in my opinion, reserve compartments for a large particular traffic, expected at some particular station, whether it be a terminus or an intermediate station. For instance, they could reserve such accommodation for pilgrims or other passengers expected to visit a particular religious festival or fair. Or, again, for persons attending some large political or other gathering, or race meeting. The fact that the particular passenger traffic thus to be catered for may consist of some particular caste or section e.g., Hindu or Muhammadan pilgrims, is not, I think, a bar to the exercise of this general power of reservation. [See Komaran, In re (3).]

In short the general discretion in these cases must rest with the Railway Company, for they are the statutory managers of the Railway. As such managers it is for them to issue the requisite orders for the reservation of passenger accommodation; and speaking generally it is for each passenger to obey those orders, believing that thereby he will best promote the general comfort of his fellow passengers, and also of the Railway staff, and incidentally of himself. If, on the other hand, each passenger is to be a law unto himself, chaos can be the only result. In this respect I cannot do better than quote from the judgment of Lord Halsbury in Perth General Station Committee v. Ross (4) some sentences, which are, I think, typical of the common sense which that learned Judge always showed. He says at page 483:—

"But I should be sorry to throw any doubt on the absolute right of the Railway Company in the first instance to regulate their own traffic in their own way... I do not believe that any actual inconvenience to the public can result from the recognition of the right of the Railway Company to carry on their business in their own way. Their own interest is the best security that their strict legal right will not be abused."

The above then being the general powers of the Railway Company in the matter of reservation of passenger accommodation, I further hold that under section 42 (2) they must not exercise such powers as to give an undue preference or to cause an undue prejudice to any particular passenger traffic, whether individual or collective. In this connection, and with all respect to the learned Judges of the Allahabad High Court who decided Brijbasi Lal v. Emperor (1) I find myself in agreement with the view which Sir Norman Macleod and Sir Lallubhai Shah expressed in Vishwanath Ganesh v. G. I. P. Railway Company (2) as to the effect of section 42. That being so, it is, in my opinion, a question of fact in each case whether the Railway Company has shown an undue preference. And, in my judgment, under the ordinary rules of evidence, the onus of proof will lie on the person who alleges such undue preference. [See Indian Evidence Act, section 102, Illustration (b); and section 103.]

What then are the facts here? The accused declined to call any evidence.

(1) (1897) A. C. 479; 66 L. J. P. C. 81; 77 L. T. 226.

EMPEROR V. NARAYAN KRISHNA GOGATE.

Consequently, all we have to go upon is the cross-examination of Khandu Vithu, the Constable on duty at Jalgaon station, and of W. B. Shaw, the Guard, of the train between Pachora and Jalgaon. Now, the train in question is the No. 11 North East Down Passenger, which is one of those very slow trains—happily not met with in England—which meanders through the country for hours and days at the stately average speed of about 15½ miles per hour. It leaves Bombay at 7 A. M. and reaches Pachora about 10 P. M. and Jalgaon about 11-30 P. M., Pachora being about 232 and Jalgaon about 261 miles away from Bombay. Its ultimate destination appears to be Delhi, some 957 miles away from Bombay, which it reaches in about two and a half days.

But as to what was the passenger traffic by this particular train on this particular day, or indeed on any other day during the 15 hours and 232 miles between Bombay and Pachora, we have no evidence whatever. Khandu Vithu, the Constable was only on duty at Jalgaon. Shaw, the Guard, was obviously not on continuous duty for 16½ hours, viz., between Bombay and Jalgaon. I am entitled to presume this under section 114 of the Indian Evidence Act. But it also so happens that I have recently had to investigate closely the running of the two sister trains, viz., the No. 13 N. E. Down Passenger and the No. 12 N. E. Passengers between Bombay and Pachora. I refer to the G. I. P. murder case (Emperor v. Morris and Donnison) which was tried before myself and a special Jury at the Bombay Criminal Sessions last November. There the two murders were committed in train No. 13 between Deolali and Manmad and discovered at Pachora; but the two murderers escaped back from Manmad to Deolali by train No. 12. Some of the Guards had then to give evidence, and to produce the way-bills. What they said in that case is not evidence in this, but the working knowledge I thus gained as to the particular portions of the line worked by the various Guards of these slow trains, and, consequently, as to the ordinary course of business of the Company in this respect, all goes to fortify the above presumption which I should draw apart from such working knowledge.

There being then no evidence as to the state of the passenger traffic between Bombay and Pachora, I hold that the accused has failed to discharge the onus of proof that there was any undue preference shown by the Railway Company in attaching this reserved compartment to the train at its start from Bombay, or in keeping it so attached. For all I know the compartment in question may have been full for many hours from Bombay of the class of passengers for whom it was intended. And for all I know it may have filled up again, or once more emptied many times during the remaining forty-two hours of its journey between Jalgaon and Delhi; for there is no evidence as to what happened after Jalgaon, any more than there is of the state of affairs before Pachora.

And even the evidence as to what happened between Pachora and Jalgaon is by no means conclusive. It is quite clear that there was ample room for the accused elsewhere in the train, if he had chosen to go there. Neither in his oral nor in his written statement does he even suggest that he would have been left behind if he had not entered this reserved compartment, or that he would have suffered any discomfort by over-crowding or otherwise if he had gone to an unreserved compartment. He really bases his defence—such as it is—on his alleged right to enter what compartment he pleases, and on the alleged inability of the Railway Company to reserve lawfully a compartment for any particular community, no matter what the actual condition of the passenger traffic may be.

In my judgment, he is wrong in both these contentions. And, as regards the evidence of Khandu Vithu, it at most amounts to this, that this compartment was generally empty between Pachora and Jalgaon, while other compartments were full. Shaw, on the other hand, says that except on bazaar days this train was not overcrowded. But this is not the sort of evidence on which I can find a Railway Company guilty of undue preference, for it only relates to some one and a half hours of the journey, while the total journey takes some two and a half days. Nor can one reasonably expect the Railway Company to be constantly detaching or attaching particular compartments at various places on this long journey, merely because local conditions may happen to vary either generally or on any particular day.

The conclusion then which I have arrived at is that on the evidence in this particular case, the accused was rightly convicted by the Trying Magistrate. Not I do see any reason to interfere with the fine of Rs. 5 which he has been ordered to pay. If I could have spared this middle aged man this indignity of a conviction and a petty fine, I should have been glad to do so. But this is not the case of a passenger in an overcrowded and stalling compartment who ventures into an adjoining empty compartment which is apparently reserved for some non-existent person. In that case I can well understand the passenger feeling a natural irritation. The present case is nothing of that sort. The accused had ample time for reflection both at Pachora and Jalgaon, and in the view I take he was out to give trouble, and succeeded in doing so both at Pachora and Jalgaon. In my judgment the subordinate Railway Officials must be protected in the discharge of their duties to the general public from conduct such as this; and if the accused considers he had any grievance against their employers on the ground of undue preference, the remedy open to him under the Act is to apply to the Governor-General-in-Council under section 28 to have the complaint determined by a Railway Commission appointed under section 26. The accused's Pleader did indeed inform me that that course had already been adopted by some Association in Jalgaon, and that the matter was still under consideration by His Excellency in Council. If that is so, there was all the less reason for the accused to take the law into his own hands while the matter was being investigated by the proper authorities. It must be remembered that the proper running of a Railway requires expert and detailed knowledge of its traffic and its general requirements, and that is why both in India and in England the Railway Commission consists of one Law and two Lay Commissioners. Thus in England it is the Railway Company Commissioners who determine such disputed matters as alleged undue preference in the matter of rates, etc., and normally those matters would not come before the High Court, and much less so before a Police Court. So here, it is hardly a matter for the ordinary law Courts to determine matters of disputed Railway policy, and in the present case the requisite expert evidence is wholly wanting.

In conclusion I will again quote from Perth General Station Committee v. Ross (4) and this time I will cite what Lord Watson, another great Judge, said in that case at page 489* :—

“ But the Legislature has not committed to the ordinary Tribunals of the country the duty of determining whether the implied obligation of giving accommodation to the public has been duly fulfilled. When a member of the public having the right to use a Railway or a station has a reason, or without reason thinks fit, to complain that some facility which he ought to have, has been withheld from him, and that an undue preference had been shown to others in the same position, a Court of Law can give him no remedy. He must resort to the Tribunal which the Legislature has constituted for that purpose, the Railway Commissioners; and, until they have decided in his favour, he is not in a position to say, and no Court would be justified in holding, that he stands possessed of the right which he asserts.”

I agree that this was a finding in a civil suit, and in the present case I have to deal with a criminal prosecution. But with reference to the argument in the case just cited that the respondent ought to have been prosecuted before the Magistrates, Lord Watson observed at page 482* : “ To have this point decided by a Magistrate would have been most inconvenient.” What Lord Watson held was that the proper Tribunal was the Railway Commissioners; and that in fact was the decision of the House of Lords in that case.

I, accordingly, decline to interfere in revision in the present case, and I direct the record and proceedings to be returned.

Order accordingly.

Chatterjee, for the Petitioners.Babus Dasarathi Sanyal, Hemendra Nath Sen and Nanda Gopal Banerjee, for the JUDGMENT.—In this Rule the Deputy Commissioner has been called on to show cause why the order passed under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, should not be set aside. The Rule was issued on two grounds only. The first was, that the order is without jurisdiction, inasmuch as, according to the Settlement papers, the land in dispute is a joint property in which the petitioners were co-sharers. It appears that the dispute between the parties is as to the possession of certain land on which there are sal trees and this land is situated in a jote in which the parties are co-sharers.

But the first party claims the sole possession of the land about which the dispute has taken place, and it has been found by the Magistrate that he was in sole possession of this land. That being so, the Court had jurisdiction to make an order under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code.

The second ground on which the Rule was granted was, that the allegations of the first party do not show such a dispute as was likely to cause a breach of the peaceand the proceeding is, therefore, without jurisdiction. It appears that the Magistrate in this case acted on a petition filed by the first party and that the first party was not examined on oath nor was any Police report called for. Our attention has been drawn to the case of *Sreeman Kumara Tirumalraja Bahadur, Raja of Karvetnagar
v. Sowcar Lodd Govind Doss Krishna
Doss* (1). We agree with what is there said that where there is no Police report the statement of interested parties ought to be received with great caution. But we are unable to hold that, if the Magistrate has reason to believe such a statement, he acts without jurisdiction in taking proceedings under this section. In the present case when this petition was filed by the first party the Magistrate had already some knowledge of the facts of the case from the previous proceedings between the parties with reference to the same dispute. That being so, we think he may have had good reason to believe the statement that a breach of the peace was probable, and we certainly cannot hold that he acted without jurisdiction in acting on such belief.

We, therefore, discharge this Rule.

JOYTUN BIBI v. SOLIMUDDIN.

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE NO.

1494 OF 1920.

February 16, 1922.

Present:—Mr. Justice Newbould.

JOYTUN BIBI—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT—
versus

SOLIMUDDIN CHOUKIDAR AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Co-sharers—Stranger in possession on behalf of one co-sharer—Adverse possession—Notorious exclusion.

In a suit for recovery of possession on declaration of title to a property belonging to a Mohamedan who had died 40 years before the date of the suit, the plaintiff and defendant No. 2 were his daughters and defendant No. 1 was the husband of defendant No. 2. The plaintiff was out of possession since a few years after her father's death and the defendants were in possession for over 12 years before suit. The question was whether the principle that possession by a co-sharer is not ordinarily adverse to the other co-sharers applied to the facts of the case:

Held, that though defendant No. 1 was not a co-sharer with the plaintiff, before he could be treated as a stranger it must be shown that he was possessing the land asserting his own right. If he was in possession openly asserting his own right and not that of his wife for a period of 12 years in such a manner as to amount to what is called notorious exclusion, then the plaintiff's case would fail. But if this defendant possessed the land without any such assertion of title in himself and the facts were such that the plaintiff could not be expected to know that he was not possessing it on behalf of the plaintiff's sister, then the plaintiff's suit would not be barred by limitation.

Appeal against the decree of the Additional Subordinate Judge of Backergunj, dated the 26th of February 1920, reversing the decree of the Munsif 7th Court at Barisal, dated the 24th of May 1919.

Moulvi A. K. Fuzul Huq, for the Appellant.—The plaintiff claims one-third share in four plots of land. The possession by the defendant No. 1 cannot be regarded as adverse to the plaintiff, as there is no finding that the defendant No. 1 was possessing it in assertion of his own right. This defendant possessed the land without any assertion of the title in himself. So, in the absence of the findings of the Court below to clear up the situation, how can the plaintiff's suit for declaration of title fail. It is a settled rule of law that possession by a co-sharer is not ordinarily adverse. And on this principle my client takes her stand.

Babu Sures Chandra Talukdar, for the Respondent.—I beg to submit that the finding of the lower Appellate Court is clear and cannot be attacked in this Court. The plaintiff has been out of possession of the land for many years, and the defendant No. 2 has been in possession for upwards of twelve years. The learned Subordinate Judge has come to a distinct finding that the defendant No. 1 is not a co-sharer of the plaintiff. Defendant No. 1 was openly in possession of the land.

Mr. Huq briefly replied.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff and the second defendant in this suit are the daughters of one Kalamaddi. The first defendant is the husband of the second defendant. The plaintiff brought the suit for declaration of her title to $\frac{1}{3}$ rd share in four plots of land and for recovery of possession thereof claiming as one of the heirs of Kalamaddi. In the First Court the plaintiff got a decree declaring her title to $\frac{1}{3}$ rd share of plots Nos. 1 and 4 and her suit was dismissed as regards plots Nos. 2 and 3. On appeal by the defendants her suit has been dismissed entirely.

The findings are that the plaintiff has been out of actual possession of the land in suit since a few years after the plaintiff's father's death which took place about 40 years ago and that the second defendant has been in possession of the land for over 12 years.

The appeal turns on the question whether the principle that possession by a co-sharer is not ordinarily adverse applies to the facts of the present case. Though, as the learned Subordinate Judge points out, defendant No. 1, the husband, is no co-sharer with the plaintiff, before he could be treated as a stranger it must be shown that he was possessing the land asserting his own right. The finding of the Munsif was that he must be held to have possessed the land as a manager for the whole of the family. The finding has been reversed on appeal, and I must accept that finding that he was not the manager on behalf of the plaintiff as well as his wife. But the fact that he was looking after the land would not be adverse to the plaintiff unless it is found that he was possessing the land asserting his own right and not as a manager of his wife's property. If defendant No. 1 was in possession openly asserting his own right and not that of his wife for a period of 12 years in such a manner as to amount to what is called notorious exclusion, then the plain-tiff's case would fail. But if this defendant possessed the land without any such assertion of title in himself and the facts were such that the plaintiff could not be expected to know that he was not possessing it on behalf of the plaintiff's sister, then the plaintiff's suit would not be barred. The findings of the learned Subordinate Judge are not sufficiently clear to ascertain whether his decision on the question of limitation is right or not.

The appeal is accordingly decreed and it will be remanded to the lower Appellate Court for a fresh decision having regard to the above remarks.

Costs will abide the result.

Construction of document—Sale of land—Agreement to re-transfer—Mortgage—Registration—Registration Act (XVI of 1908), s. 17.

A plot of land was sold by a registered sale deed. On the very day of the sale, the purchaser executed a document which after referring to the previous sale-deed. "There are terms the parties wished to include in the said deed, but which they left out. They are as follows:—That the creditor shall receive and enjoy the profits, rent and crops, and shall pay the land revenue in full satisfaction annually; that the creditor shall transfer with outright possession, if the owners of the lands redeem them for the principal sum within three years; and that if the owners of the lands could not redeem the same at the expiration of three years, they shall have no further right to possession and enjoyment, and forfeit the same to the creditors." This document was unregistered. The seller sued for specific performance of the agreement embodied in the document:

Held, that the intention of the parties was that the transaction should be a mortgage and that, therefore, the document required registration.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for specific performance of an agreement in writing to sell the land in suit to plaintiff's assignor. The agreement is Exhibit A.

Maung San Min and Ma Lun were the original owners of the land in suit. On the 10th March 1920 they conveyed the land to Maung San In by a registered deed of sale for consideration stated therein, viz., Rs. 500. That deed is marked Exhibit B. On the same day San In by the agreement, Exhibit A, agreed to let Maung San Min and Ma Lun have the land back if, within three years, they paid Rs. 500.

The plaintiff is the assignee of the rights under these two documents.

San In admitted Exhibit B, but denied Exhibit A.

Both the lower Courts held that the document, Exhibit A, created a mortgage of the land, and, therefore, required registration. The document not being registered, the suit was dismissed.

The plaintiff appeals to this Court, and contends that Exhibit B, read with Exhibit A, shows that Exhibit A gave San Min and Ma Lun a right to purchase the land, and that in that view of the matter, Exhibit A did not require registration.

On behalf of the respondents it is contended that the Exhibit A made the whole transaction a mortgage by conditional sale, but not a sale with a right of re-purchase, and that, even if Exhibit A only gave San Min and Ma Lun a right to re-purchase the land, it would still require registration, inasmuch as it must be held that it created an interest in immoveable property.

Exhibit B is an ordinary conveyance showing an outright sale.

The material portions of Exhibit A are as follows:—

"Under registered deed
... .. a peice of paddy land
... .. has been conveyed with outright possession by Maung San Min and Ma Lun to Maung San In for Rs. 500."

CHANG KYWAN v. MA OO.

"There are terms the parties wished to include in the said deed, but which they left out. They are as follows:—That the creditor shall receive and enjoy the profits, rent and crops, and shall pay the land revenue in full satisfaction annually; that the creditor shall transfer with outright possession, if the owners of the lands redeem them for the principal sum of Rs. 500 within three years; and that if the owners of the lands could not redeem the same at the expiration of three years, they shall have no further right to possession and enjoyment, and forfeit the same to the creditors."

Plaintiff's Counsel placed reliance on Bhagwan Sahai v. Bhagwan Din (1). This is a Privy Council case. There were two documents. The first was an outright conveyance, and under that the property passed into the possession of the vendors. In the second document the following passage occurs:—

"However, I have as a matter of favour, mercy, kindness and indulgence executed the deed, and do hereby stipulate that, if all these vendors will within a period of ten years from the date of this deed pay in a lump sum and without interest the whole amount specified above, I shall accept the same and cancel this valid sale. During the aforesaid term I shall remain in possession, collect the rent and enjoy the profit and be liable for loss; the vendors shall have no concern whatever. I shall not claim interest from the vendors, nor will they demand profits from me after the expiry of the term. In case the whole of the principal is not paid according to the terms of this document, the vendors shall not be able to cancel the sale by payment of the principal." The Allahabad High Court held that, on a proper construction of the two documents read together, the relationship of the mortgagor and mortgagee existed between the vendors and the vendee. On appeal their Lordships of the Privy Council held that it was clear that this case was not one of mortgagor and mortgagee, but one of an absolute sale with a right of re-purchase within a period of ten years. For the contention that it was a case of mortgagor and mortgagee, reliance was placed upon the presence of the term "principal" in the second document.

In Kinuram Mondol v. Nitye Chand Sirdar (2) there were two contemporaneous documents, one of which purported to be a deed of sale, and the other provided that on the vendor re-paying the purchase-money mentioned in the deed of sale with costs within a fixed period, the vendee would return the land, and, in case he did not do so, the vendor would deposit the money in Court and take possession. It was held that the two documents together did not constitute a mortgage. In that case the Privy Council case already cited, and another Privy Council case Balkishen Das v. W. F. Legge (3) were referred to, and it was contended that, by reason of the second Privy Council case, the authority of the first had become somewhat weaker. But the learned Judges distinguished the two cases by saying that in the latter case there were terms clearly showing that the intention of the parties was a mortgage, and not an out-and-out sale with a right of re-purchase. The learned Judges observed that such indications were lacking in the case before them, and that on the contrary they were in the opposite direction. In particular they said:—"The money was paid by the grantee, and it was a proper value of the property at the time. The purchaser was let into immediate possession; he received the rents. There is no provision as to the payment of any interest, and the purchaser was to pay the expenses of preparing the deeds. These features indicate that the intention of the parties was that the transaction should be an out-and-out sale with a right of re-purchase within seven years." Although they said that it was not necessary to decide it finally as there was no "certain date" of payment within the meaning of the definition of a mortgage by conditional sale, they expressed their opinion that it is an essential element of a mortgage by conditional sale.

HAFIZAN U. AKHALESWARI PRASAD,

In the first Privy Council case cited the only term used as indicating a loan was the word "principal," and in the second document in that case this word came last. In itself it was not sufficient to indicate that the intention of the parties was to create a mortgage and it was stated that the length of time allowed for taking the land back militated against the intention being to effect a mortgage.

In the Calcutta case there was not a single term used indicating a loan in the second document. In Balkishen Das v. W. F. Legge (3) there were terms in the second document indicating the redemption to be for principal and interest.

In the case before me the terms "creditor," "principal" and "redemption" are used. The term "interest" is not used. The reason for that is obvious. The land had gone into the possession of the vendee under Exhibit B, and it is stated in Exhibit A that he was to enjoy the profits until the redemption is made within three years. Therefore, it was not necessary to mention any interest, for it might well have been that the parties intended that the interest should come out of the profits of the land. The only thing that is lacking in Exhibit A is the statement that, though Exhibit B purports to be a deed of sale, it was intended really as a mortgage. If there was that statement, there would, of course, be no difficulty in construing these two documents. In my opinion sufficient has been said in Exhibit A to indicate that the intention of the parties was that the transaction evidenced by Exhibit B was not really what it purported to be, but a mortgage.

The case before me is clearly distinguishable on the facts from the Privy Council case first cited. In the view I have taken of the point involved, Exhibit A must be held to require registration, and the lower Courts were, therefore, right in dismissing the suit.

This appeal is dismissed with costs.

Appeal from a decision of the Subordinate Judge, Second Court, Patna, dated the 6th October 1920, reversing a decision of the Munsif, Bihar, dated the 31st July 1919.

Mr. Ragho Prasad, for the Appellant.

Mr. Sivanandan Rai, for Mr. Gangadhar Das, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the plaintiff against the decree of the Subordinate Judge of Patna, reversing the decree of the Munsif of Bihar, in a suit brought by the plaintiff for rent from 1323 to 1326 in respect of a share in Mauza Naubatpur Lotan. This share was in lease to the father of defendant No. 1 for a number of years. After his death defendant No. 2, mother and guardian of defendant No. 1, took a fresh lease of the share from 1312 to 1318. In 1319 the lease was renewed verbally for one year and there was a further registered lease from 1320 to 1326. Rent has been paid up to 1322 only.

The suit was contested by defendant No. 1, who alleged that he attained his majority on the 9th of May 1918, that he had no concern with the property in suit, that the lease was not taken for his benefit and that he had derived no advantage from it, and the leasehold property was not in his possession. The Munsif decreed the suit but the Subordinate Judge held that it has not been shown that the lease was for the benefit of the minor and he, therefore, dismissed the suit.

It was contended on behalf of the appellant that the Record of Rights shows that the defendant No. 1 was the lessee of the share and that, as he had not repudiated the lease on attaining his majority, the suit ought to have been decreed; and that there ought to have been a decree, if not against the defendant No. 1 personally, at all events against the leasehold property. It was further contended that as the suit was not defended by defendant No. 2 there ought to have been a decree against her. On the finding that the defendant No. 1 was the lessee, and as the lease was taken by the defendant No. 2 not on her own behalf but as guardian of her minor son, the defendant No. 1, it is clear that there could be no decree against defendant No. 2 in this case. The Subordinate Judge has held that the lease was not for the benefit of the defendant No. 1; consequently, he cannot be bound by it. A decree against the leasehold property would be of no advantage to the plaintiff and could not be given, because the finding in effect is that in law there is no lease; and, therefore, there can be no leasehold property to proceed against. Reference was made on behalf of the appellant to the decisions in Mir Sarwarjan v. Fakhraddin Mohamed (1) and Murugesam Pillai v. Gnana Sambanda Pandara Sammadhi (2), but these decisions have no bearing on the present case. The appeal is dismissed with costs.

Appeal against a decree of the District Judge, Birbhum, dated the 13th November 1919, reversing the decree of the Munsif, Second Court at Rampurhat, dated the 14th February 1919.

Babu Mohesh Chandra Banerjee, for Babu Pramatha Nath Banerjee, for the Appellants.—The plaintiff is the appellant. The appeal arises out of a suit for rent in kind. The defence was that rent had been commuted under section 40, Bengal Tenancy Act, and is payable in cash. First Court held that the commutation was bad. On appeal it has been held that the rent has been validly commuted. My point is that the commutation was ultra vires, inasmuch as all the landlords had not been served with notice. No reasons were assigned for the order commuting the rent. Refers to section 40 (5), Bengal Tenancy Act, Chowdhry Raghu Nath Saran Singh v. Dhodha Roy (1), Jadu Nath Manna v. Pran Krishna Das (2).

Babu Brojo Lal Chakraborty (with him Babus Kshiltish Chandra Chakraborty and Panchanan Ghosal), for the Respondents.—The application did not contain all the names of the landlords. There was a previous suit for rent and this question was raised. I submit that decision would operate as res judicata.

REILY V. GOLAP KHAN.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the plaintiffs in a suit for recovery of arrears of rent on the allegation that the rent is payable in kind. The tenant defendants urged that rent was payable not in kind but in cash, and in support of this contention they relied upon a mutation order made by an Assistant Settlement Officer on the 17th July 1922, and amended on the 2nd September 1922. The plaintiffs thereupon assailed the validity of the mutation order on a variety of grounds. The Court of first instance came to the conclusion that the order was ultra vires and afforded no defence to the claim. Upon appeal the District Judge has held that rent has been validly commuted by an order under section 40 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, which cannot be successfully impeached by the appellants. On the present appeal, we are invited to consider which of these conflicting views is correct.

It is plain from the materials on the record that no notice of the application for commutation was served upon the plaintiffs who are some of the landlords of the tenants defendants. The plaintiffs contend accordingly that the mutation order is not operative as against them. Section 40, sub-section (2), provides that an application may be made to one of the Revenue Authorities mentioned therein for commutation. In the present case, such an application was made by the tenants. Although the section does not state explicitly that no order for commutation is to be made till opportunity has been afforded to the party liable to be affected thereby to appear and contest the application, it is obvious on first principles that no order should be made till notice of the application has been served. The object of the application for commutation is to secure an alteration of the most essential element of the tenancy, namely, the rent. It is of the utmost importance to the party whether the rent is to be paid in kind or cash and if the rent is to be paid in cash, what sum should be taken as the proper amount payable in lieu of rent previously paid in kind. An order of this description cannot justly be made without notice to the party affected. We must consequently hold that the order was made without jurisdiction. This is not a case where proceedings properly initiated have been notified to the parties concerned, but there has been an irregularity in the service of notice. Here the Revenue Authorities assumed jurisdiction over persons who would be affected by their order without any notice served upon them. In such circumstances, the order must be regarded as ultra vires. As was observed by Willes, J., in Cooper v. Wandsworth Board of Works (3), "a Tribunal which is by law invested with power to affect the property of one of Her Majesty's subjects, is bound to give such subject an opportunity of being heard before it proceeds; that rule is of universal application and founded upon the plainest principles of justice." There can be no dispute that an order under section 40 made by a Revenue Officer without jurisdiction does not bind the Civil Court; see Jadu Nath Manna v. Pran Krishna Das (2).

The result is that this appeal is allowed, the decree of the District Judge set aside and that of the Court of first instance restored with costs both here and in the lower Appellate Court.

• Babu Surendra Chandra Sen (with him Babu Sachindra Sen Prosad Ghosh) for the Petitioner.—The defendant is the petitioner. The facts out of which this matter arises are shortly these. I obtained a decree against the opposite party. In execution of the decree there was satisfaction of the decree out of Court which was not accepted by the Court. Thereupon the opposite party brought a suit for a declaration that the decree had been fully satisfied and also for injunction. The lower Court has refused injunction but has stayed execution of the decree on taking security from the plaintiff opposite party. I submit O. XXI, r. 29 is controlled by section 47 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The suit is not maintainable. See Azizan v. Matuk Lal Sahu (1); and Deno Bundhu Nundy v. Hari Mati Dassee (2). I submit the Court below having no power in law to grant either perpetual or temporary injunction, was wrong in staying execution of my decree which amounted to an injunction.

Babu Benoyendra Nath Ganguli (with him Babu Probodh Chandra Chatterjee), for the Opposite Party.—The order under O. XXI, r. 29 is appealable under section 47, Civil Procedure Code. Supposing this order is set aside, the order in the execution case will remain. They admit having received the decretal amount. Our case in the plaint is that they agreed that this amount should be paid off in satisfaction of the decree. They have credited the amount to rents for subsequent periods. I submit it is competent for a Court to stay execution of decree in a case where the judgment-debtor has brought a similar suit against the decree-holder.

Babu Surendra Chandra Sen in reply :—
[CHATTERJEE, J.—What is meant by

"holder of a decree of such Court" in O. XXI, r. 29.]

It means a decree of the same Court in which the subsequent suit is brought. See Kassa Mal v. Gopi (3). O. XXXI, r. 1 has no application. The only question is whether I have right to execute the decree. That question has no concern with their suit.

JUDGMENT.—This Rule was directed against an order passed under O. XXI, r. 29, Civil Procedure Code. The petitioner obtained a decree against the opposite party and in execution realized a part of the decretal amount. He again applied for execution of the decree and the opposite party, therefore, set up an agreement for satisfaction of the decree. The alleged satisfaction of the decree, however, was not notified to the Court of execution within the time allowed and that Court accordingly refused to recognise the satisfaction of the decree. A suit was, therefore, instituted by the opposite party for declaration that the rent-decree had been fully satisfied and for a perpetual injunction restraining the petitioner from executing the decree and also for a temporary injunction. There was a further prayer that it might be declared that the petitioner was bound to refund a certain amount deposited by the plaintiff.

The Court below has held that a suit for perpetual injunction restraining the defendant from executing the rent-decree and for a declaration that the decree had been adjusted, was not maintainable and that, therefore, the prayer of the plaintiff-opposite party for a temporary injunction could not be granted. The learned Judge, however, held that he could under O. XXI, r. 29, Civil Procedure Code, stay execution of the decree on taking security from the plaintiff.

In the case of Azizan v. Matuk Lal Sahu (1), it was held by Pigot and Macpherson, J.J., Banerji, J., differing, that "section 244 is not limited by section 258 and that the suit was not maintainable. Where a decree is satisfied by an agreement out of Court and such satisfaction is not certified to the Court, a subsequent suit on the agreement is not maintainable if the object of the suit is to restrain the decree-holder from executing his decree in contravention of the agreement." Piggot, J., observed. "Section 244, Civil Procedure Code, does not absolutely bar a suit, but prohibits in a separate suit between the same parties to a decree any relief being granted which interferes with the conduct of the execution proceedings by the Court executing the decree." See also the case of Dino Bundhu Nundy v. Hari Mati Dassee (2).

That being so, whatever other relief may be granted by the Court in such a suit, it cannot restrain the decree-holder from executing the decree.

O. XXI, r. 29 provides that "Where a suit is pending in any Court against the holder of a decree of such Court, on the part of the person, against whom the decree was passed, the Court may, on such terms as to security or otherwise, as it thinks fit, stay execution of the decree until the pending suit has been decided."

The language, no doubt, is very wide and if the rule stood alone, the Court would have the power to stay execution of a decree, as provided in the rule. But section 47 of the Code lays down that all questions relating to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree shall be determined by the Court executing the decree and not by a separate suit: and under O. XXI, r. 2 (3) the Court cannot recognise any uncertified payment or adjustment of a decree.

We must give effect to the provisions of section 47 and O. XXI, r. 2 (3) as well as to O. XXI, r. 29, Civil Procedure Code.

Now, if the Court has no power to make a declaration that the decree has been satisfied by an uncertified adjustment or payment out of Court and if the Court cannot grant, a permanent injunction restraining the decree-holder from executing the decree, we do not see how the Court can stay execution of the decree for a period during which the suit may be pending, although it cannot grant the same relief by its final decree. The Court below also has held that a temporary injunction cannot be granted. But the stay of execution of a decree practically stands on the same footing as a temporary injunction; and, as stated above, the Court cannot grant relief for a temporary period which it cannot decree by its final judgment. The provisions of O. XXI, r. 29 must, therefore, apply to cases not coming under O. XXI, r. 2 (3) read with section 47 of the Code. We think, therefore, that the provisions of O. XXI, r. 29 are inapplicable to a case like the present.

The order of the Court below must be set aside and we direct accordingly.

The Rule is made absolute with costs one gold mohur.

Let the record be sent down without delay.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), s. 147 A—Compromise decree—Provisions of section not complied with—Decree, whether nullity.

A compromise decree passed in a suit between a landlord and a tenant without compliance with the provisions of section 147A of the Bengal Tenancy Act is a nullity and no effect can be given to it.

Surjug Saran Lal v. Dukhit Mahto, 18 Ind. Cas. 809; 17 C. W. N. 496, referred to.

Appeal from a decision of the Subordinate Judge, Patna, dated the 8th October 1920, confirming that of the Munsif, Bihar, dated the 5th May 1920.

Mr. D. N. Sirkar, for the Appellant.

Mr. S. N. Rai, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the plaintiff against the decree of the Subordinate Judge of Patna, confirming a decision of the Munsif of Bihar, in a suit brought by the plaintiff for rent. The rate of rent claimed was Rs. 5-4-0 a bigha for 2 bighas 2 kathas and 18 dhurs. This is a part of the defendants' original holding of 10 bighas 2 kathas and 18 dhurs falling to the plaintiff's share on partition which is recorded in the Record of Rights as held at a rental of Rs. 27-13-6. The plaintiff relies for proof of the rate of rent claimed upon a compromise decree passed in Suit No. 49 of 1911. This suit was instituted by the plaintiff for bhowli rent and was compromised on the terms that the rent of the defendants' holding should be Rs. 5-4-0 a bigha. The Courts below have decreed the suit at the rate of rent admitted by the defence and the plaintiff takes three points on appeal.

The first is, that by the compromise there was not an unlawful enhancement of rent; the second is, that as the compromise is embodied in a decree of the Court which has not been set aside, it must be given effect to; and the third is, that the provisions of section 147-A and of section 29 do not apply, because the rent of the holding was a produce rent. On the first point reliance was placed on the decisions in Sheo Sohay Panday v. Ram Rachia Roy (1) and Nath Singh v. Damri Singh (2). These decisions are authorities to show that "an agreement embodied in a kabuliyat to pay a certain amount of rent agreed upon by the parties in settlement of difference between them as to what had been the amount and character of the rent, and to avoid further litigation, is not within section 29 clause (b)". These decisions were distinguished in the later case of Probat Chandra Gangapadhya v. Chirag Ali (3) where it was held that "the ratio decidendi in these cases was, that there was no certainty as to the initial rents; there were disputes as to what the initial rents were," and, therefore, the settlement was good. In the present case the rent was recorded in the Record of Rights as a cash rent of Rs. 27-13-6. The learned Vakil for the appellant lays great stress on the fact that there is no express finding by the Courts below that this was the true rent. He says that the plaintiff claimed produce rent; that there was a bona fide dispute which was settled by the compromise. Now, the entry in the Record of Rights must be taken to be correct until it is disproved and the Courts below went on this assumption.

It is true that they have not expressly stated that the rent of the holding was a cash-rent, but this is implied in the decisions of both the Courts. The Munsif, after stating that the defence in Suit No. 49 of 1911 was that the rent was a cash-rent, says that the judgment does not show that the agreement was arrived at in bona fide settlement of any dispute. The Subordinate Judge also says that, "it does not appear that the parties were on fighting terms during the Survey operation and that (it was) in order to settle their long-standing bona fide dispute" that they came to terms. He points out that, "the mere statement in the petition that in order to avoid dispute and having regard to the quality of the land and its out-turn the jama of Rs. 44-8-0 was considered to be fair and equitable, will not be considered as sufficient ground for holding that the rent was settled on account of a bona fide dispute." It is clearly implied in both the judgments that the rent was a cash-rent and that there was no bona fide dispute as to settlement. The Munsif puts it in this way that there was enhancement under the cloak of compromise. If the rent was as stated in the Record of Rights (and it must be taken to have been so until this was disproved) then it necessarily follows that the compromise was not good.

As to the second argument, it has been found by both the Courts below that provisions of section 147-A were not complied with. The result of that is, that the compromise decree is a nullity, as was held in Surjug Saran Lal v. Dukhit Mahto (4), and no effect can be given to it. The fact that the rate of rent recorded in the compromise was also recorded in the partition proceedings, which is relied upon as showing that the compromise was acted upon, can make no difference. The rate of the rent is now in dispute and unless it is on a legal basis the plaintiff cannot get a decree at the rate claimed.

As to the last point, that sections 147-A and 29 do not apply, this rests on the assumption that the rent was bhowli. If the rent was bhowli there can be no question that the Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), s. 27—Hindu Law—Joint family—Agreement by manager to purchase immovable property—Specific performance, whether can be enforced against surviving co-parceners—Minor, specific performance against—Necessity—Proof.

The Specific Relief Act is an exhaustive Code and section 27 thereof defines every class of persons against whom specific performance may be enforced, and under that section contracts for purchase are not included among the contracts which can be enforced against persons other than the contracting party himself. [p. 43, col. 1.]

An agreement for purchase of immovable property entered into by the manager of a joint Hindu family cannot, after his death, be specifically enforced against the surviving co-parceners, inasmuch as the latter do not, in such a case, fall within the class of persons defined in section 27 of the Specific Relief Act. A Court will not decree specific performance against a minor unless it is satisfied that such act is for the benefit of the minor. It is not sufficient to show that it is not detrimental to him; if there is any possibility of there being a detriment, the Court will require to be satisfied that the possibility no longer exists before it takes action. [p. 45, col. 1.]

Under the Hindu Law there is no presumption that every purchase of immovable property is for the benefit of the family. It is a question of fact in each case which must be proved by evidence by the party relying upon it. [p. 44, col. 1.]

A member of a joint Hindu family does not inherit under his father but takes by survivorship, for on his birth he obtains a right in the whole family property and not merely in a portion of it. No doubt, when one member of the co-parcenary dies, his share passes to the others, but it is more a question of lapse of the title of the deceased person rather than an acquisition of title in the survivors, for even before the death of the deceased co-parcener they had a right in the whole of the property, including the share of the deceased member. JUDGMENT.

Phillips, J.—In this case the plaintiff entered into a contract with the first defendant for the sale of his lands and brought this suit for specific performance of the agreement. The first defendant, who agreed to purchase the property, pleaded that the contract had been rescinded, but died shortly afterwards, and his sons, defendants Nos. 2 to 4, the fourth defendant being a minor, were impleaded, and a decree for specific performance was prayed for as against them. These defendants adopted their father's written statement so far as it was not opposed to their interests, and also pleaded that the suit was not maintainable against them. The Subordinate Judge has found that the contract was not rescinded and this finding is accepted in appeal. He has also found that defendants Nos. 2 to 4 are liable to perform the contract entered into by their father. He has come to this conclusion on broad grounds which he sums up as follows: "The price is not inadequate. The assent was not obtained by questionable means. Plaintiff has a clear and marketable title. It would cause no hardship on the defendants. Plaintiff has gained no unfair advantage by the transaction. Viewed from any aspect, the contract for specific performance can be enforced against defendants Nos. 2 to 4, who are bound to execute the contract in place of their father who is now dead." In coming to this conclusion, he has made no reference to section 27 of the Specific Relief Act, which specifies the persons against whom specific performance of a contract can be enforced. The Specific Relief Act is an exhaustive Code, for it is an act "to define and amend the law relating to certain kinds of specific relief obtainable in civil suits," and, consequently, we must read this section 27 as defining every class of persons against whom specific performance may be enforced. Unless, therefore, defendants Nos. 2 to 4 can be brought under this section, there will be no right to enforce specific performance against them. The plaintiff in this case has not claimed damages for breach of covenant, and consequently we need not consider against whom he can bring such a suit for damages.

It is argued for the appellants that the defendants, who are members of an undivided Hindu family, do not come under any of the definitions in section 27. The two clauses of the section which it is contended for respondents are applicable are (b) and (c). Clause (b) reads as follows:—

"Any other person claiming under him by a title arising subsequently to the contract." Here it is suggested that the sons, defendants Nos. 2 to 4, do claim under their father, first defendant, by a title arising subsequently to the contract. It is, however, well settled that a member of a joint family does not inherit under his father but takes by survivorship, for, on his birth he obtains a right in the whole family property and not merely in a portion of it. No doubt when one member of the co-parcenary dies, his share passes to the others, but it is more a question of lapse of the title of the deceased person rather than an acquisition of title in the survivors, for even before the death of the one co-parcener they had a right in the whole of the property, including the share of the deceased member. It is, therefore, difficult to hold that, even as regards their father's share defendants Nos. 2 to 4 claim under him by a title arising subsequently to the contract. No doubt in Venkaleswara Aiyar v. Raman Nambudri (1) Courts-Trotter, J., appears to have accepted the contention that a co-parcener in a joint Hindu family does come under the definition in section 27 (b) and treated the matter as a question of Hindu Law without discussing the meaning of the words of the section, but he also held that, in order to enforce a contract against a co-parcener, it must be shown to be beneficial or necessary and this principle has been adopted in all cases of necessity, in which cases the co-parcener would probably come under clause (c), because the contracting party has a right to displace his title in cases of benefit or necessity.

Coming to the definition in section 27(c), we find that it includes, "any person claiming under a title which, though prior to the contract and known to the plaintiff, might have been displaced by the defendant." This clause undoubtedly would apply, as suggested above, to the many cases in which a decree for specific performance has been given even against a minor member of an undivided family when the contract was for sale of land for family necessity. In such a case, the manager of the family has a right to displace the title of the other members in the family property when it is requisite to do so for purposes of family necessity. Cases of this kind are reported as Shunmugam Chetty v. Subba Reddi (2), Ramachandra Aiyar v. Sundaramurthi Mudali (3) and Krishna Aiyar v. Shamanna (4) and there are many others. The Courts have not in all cases referred in terms to section 27 (c) as covering the case, but have based their decision on the proposition that, if a contract when executed would be binding on the minor members of the family, it is incumbent on them to fulfil it after the contracting party's death. However, in all these cases the co-parceners come within the definition in clause (c).

It is now contended for the plaintiff that the same principle must be applied to the present case and that, this being a case of purchase of immoveable property, the contract can be enforced against the co-parceners, because the purchase must be deemed to be for the benefit of the family. This argument is based on an alleged presumption that every purchase of immoveable property must be for the benefit of the family, for no evidence has been let in on this point. There is no such presumption in law, and if we look on it as a presumption of fact, it must depend upon the circumstances of each case. Here the defendants are a trading family whose interests might be better served by the investment of any surplus cash in their trade rather than in purchase of immoveable property. There are many other conceivable circumstances in which a purchase of land would not be for the benefit of the family. We cannot, therefore, in the absence of evidence, make any such presumption, and consequently it is necessary for plaintiff to prove this benefit by evidence, if he claims a decree on that ground.

Returning to the question of whether defendants Nos. 2 to 4 come within the definition of clause (c), we have to consider what is the title under which they can be said to claim. It is, I think, clear that the title referred to there is title to the property, which is the subject-matter of the contract. Here the property is merely a sum of money which the father had promised to pay. It is not in evidence that there was any definite sum of money lying in his hands nor the manner in which the father was going to obtain it. He might have intended to obtain the money by begging, borrowing, or even stealing, in which case these co-parceners could not possibly claim under a prior title. It is argued that the purchase money must eventually come out of the family property, or at least out of the father's share of the property and that, therefore, the title in question is the title to the family property. As I pointed out above, it is not necessary that the money should come out of any family property but might have been obtained by the father from some outside source. In this view defendants Nos. 2 to 4 would not claim under any title to it. If that is so, it would appear that these defendants do not come within the definition in clause (c). Looking broadly at section 27, it would appear that contracts for purchase are not included amongst the contracts which can be enforced against persons other than the contracting party himself. Section 23, which specifies the persons who can enforce specific performance, includes "the representatives-in-interest of the parties to the contract, and is consequently very much broader than section 27 which makes no mention of such representatives. As regards contracts for purchase, it is not difficult to suggest a reason for their exclusion from contracts of which specific performance can be decreed, for it is of no special benefit to the vendor to get his money from the contracting party rather than from some one else, and, even though the price from the other persons may be less than the agreed price, he always has his remedy against the contracting party in damages, so that he will suffer no loss from the reduction in price. On the other hand, when the property to be transferred is land, nothing else can adequately be substituted for it, and consequently a suit for the specific performance of a contract to sell land is more freely allowed, as no other remedy would be adequate. However this may be, I think it is quite clear that we cannot bring defendants Nos. 2 to 4 within the definition in section 22 (b) or 27 (c). If that is so, no decree for specific performance can be given against them. I now refer to some cases cited, firstly, to the Full Bench decision reported as Rangayya Reddy v. Subramanya Aiyar (5). There the real question at issue was not identical, but Wallis, C. J., and Sadasiva Iyer, J., were both of opinion that co-parceners could not be compelled to perform a contract entered into by another co-parcener. There is a case in Bhagwan v. Krishnaji (6), in which a Bench of the Bombay High Court has held that section 27(c) does include the members of a joint Hindu family, and this decision appears to be based not on the language of the section itself, but from the illustrations to clause (c), the reason given being that, unless those illustrations are to be made applicable to a joint Hindu family, the large majority of Hindus would be excluded from the benefits of the section. With all respect I am unable to agree with this view, as it seems to me impossible to bring co-parceners within the definition in either clause, except in the cases I have referred to, namely, when the contract is by a manager as such for necessity or for the benefit of the family.

It is next argued for the plaintiff that defendants Nos. 2 to 4 are liable under the pious obligation imposed by Hindu Law to re-pay the father's debts, and that the father's liability to pay the purchase-money must be considered to be a debt. Even if the obligation undertaken by the father can be said to be a debt, and I do not think it can, for it was at best a potential debt, we are not here concerned with their liability to re-pay it, but with the question whether they can be made to perform a particular contract, for this suit is not one for damages, in which other circumstances might possibly have to be considered.

There is yet another broad principle of equity upon which the refusal to allow specific performance can be based, and that is that when one of the parties is a minor a Court will not compel him to do anything unless it is satisfied that such act is for the benefit of the minor. It is argued that it has not been shown that this contract would be detrimental to the minor, but that is not sufficient, for, if there is any possibility of there being any detriment, the Court will require to be satisfied that the possibility no longer exists before it takes action. For this reason also, I think, the contract could not be enforced against the fourth defendant.

In this view the appeal must be allowed and the suit dismissed with costs throughout.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 120—Suits for village profits—Limitation.

Limitation for a suit by a person claiming to be a joint owner against the managing proprietor for his share of the village profits is six years.

Appeal against a decree of the District Judge, Amraoti, in Civil Appeal No. 77 of 1921, dated the 24th October 1921.

Mr. M. B. Kinkhede, R. B., for the Appellant.

Mr. M. Gupta, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—It is not disputed that the plaintiffs would be entitled as co-sharers to sue for village profits and claim them for six years but it is argued that, as a matter of fact, they have not sued for village profits but only for mesne profits. Reference is made to Amritrao v. Govind (1) and it is argued that a suit for mesne profits does not lie until the plaintiffs have got possession and further that the suit is governed by Art. 109, First Schedule, Limitation Act.

The contention that the suit is one for mesne profits is based on certain expressions in paragraphs 2 and 3 of the plaint. The plaintiff's title is based upon a Will. They have brought a suit for partition and possession of the property bequeathed and obtained a decree on the 28th June 1912. This suit is for the profits of 1914-15 to 1919-20. In paragraph 2 of the plaint the plaintiffs state:—

"Accordingly, 25 acres of home-farm and of the izara was to be partitioned, but defendant No. 1 did not partition the same and wrongly cultivated it and enjoyed the produce thereof."

In paragraph 3 the plaintiffs estimate the profits of their share for six years at Rs. 3,400 and state:—

SHEIK MUHAMMAD ROWTHER v. SUBBA NAICKER.

"Accordingly, the defendants should have paid the amount of the plaintiffs' share to them, but they did not pay it and wrongfully appropriated it to themselves."

Stress is laid on the use of the words 'wrongly' and 'wrongfully' and it is contended that the claim is made against the defendants as trespassers.

I am not inclined to agree with this contention. The suit is in substance one by a person claiming to be a joint owner against the managing proprietor for his share of the village profits. In the passages quoted above all that the plaintiffs mean to assert is that the defendant No. 1 refused to effect a partition and put the plaintiffs in possession of their share and withheld their share of the profits which she had no right to do. In this view of the plaintiffs' claim, neither of the two contentions of the appellants can prevail.

Ground 5 puts forward an argument based upon an interpretation of the ruling in Bakwant v. Deorao (2) which is not justified. The argument is something like this. The three years' limitation period prevailing in Berar was altered to six years by the ruling in order to bring the Berar law in conformity with the law in the Central Provinces. Therefore, now that the period in the Central Provinces is curtailed to three years, the three years' period which prevailed in Berar before the ruling should be restored. It is needless to state that the ruling could not, and did not, profess to alter the law in Berar but only declared what it actually was.

The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Messrs. B. Sitarama Rao and S.R. Muthusami Iyer, for the Appellant.

Messrs. K. V. Krishnaswami Iyer and A. Ramaswami Iyer, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—We have considered the evidence and find no reason to disturb the learned Subordinate Judge's finding that the petitioner was kept in ignorance of the sale of his property which took place on the 25th October 1917, till application was made by the counter-petitioner for possession to be delivered to him in December 1919.

The want of resemblance between the signatures on Exhibits 1 (a) and 1 (b) and the petitioner's admitted signatures and the counter-petitioner's failure to explain how the figures of Rs. 2,500 in Exhibit A was arrived at and how certain words came to be struck out and others put in, confirms the conclusion which the rest of the evidence leads to on the question of fraud. This finding does not necessarily involve a finding that the process-servers were parties to the fraud in serving notices on the petitioner.

It is argued that fraud anterior or subsequent to the act complained of will not save limitation. In the present case there was a continuing fraud which commenced with the counter-petitioner's failure to serve judgment-debtor with the notice of the intended sale and was kept up after the sale by the execution of Exhibit A. This justifies the application of section 18 of the Limitation Act, the active concealment from petitioner of the knowledge of his right to object to the sale having continued till the fraud first became known to him when an application was made for delivery of the property that was the subject of the sale.

The application was thus in time and the circumstances of Pasurmarti Payidanna v. Ganth Lakshminisaraamma (1) and Beeju Bee v. Moorthiya Sahib (2) are distinguishable.

Mesne profits, suit for—Plaintiff's failure to establish right to immediate possession, effect of.

In execution of a decree for recovery of possession of a land on declaration of the plaintiff's title thereto it was held on objection by the judgment-debtor that the decree was incapable of execution on the ground that it was so vague that it could not be determined what the land was of which possession was to be given to the plaintiff. There was no appeal against the order of the Executing Court with the result that the plaintiff was never put in possession. Thereafter the plaintiff decree-holder instituted a suit against the judgment-debtor for recovery of mesne profits in respect of the land:

Held, that the plaintiff must show that he was entitled to possession of the land which had yielded the mesne profits that he claimed and as he was unable to do that in view of the decision in the execution proceedings, he was not entitled to a decree for mesne profits. [p. 48, col. 2.]

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Second Court, Howrah in Zillah Hooghly, dated the 7th of October 1920, affirming the decree of the Munsif First Court, Howrah, dated the 4th August 1919.

Dr. Jadu Nath Kanji Lal (with him Babu Narendra Nath Chaudhury), for the Appellant.—The defendant is the appellant. Plaintiff at first sued for establishment of title and recovery of possession. He claimed a portion of the entire land. He gave the boundaries of the entire lands. The decree being incapable of execution, possession was not given. He then brought the present suit for recovery of mesne profits of the lands which he could not take possession of. I submit he cannot claim mesne profits of unascertained lands. The decree must be self-contained. It was to the effect that plaintiff was entitled to one bigha out of a two bigha plot. Refers to Kangal Chandra Ruj v. Kanye Lal Ruj (1). In the execution case the Appellate Court had held that the decree was incapable of execution. Refers to Lep Singh Khasia v. Nimar Khasia (2). Unless he gets possession he is not entitled to mesne profits.

Babu Gopendra Nath Das, for Respondent.—The appeal is concluded by findings of fact. Title being with plaintiff, he is entitled to possession, and hence to mesne profits also. My title was found in the suit. The decree is sufficiently clear. The judgment of the Execution Court, of course, merely holds that I cannot enforce the decree. Refers to Elahi Buksh Mandal v. Ram Narayan Ghose (3). I submit the present suit is maintainable, although I got no possession. The decision in Lep Singh Khasia v. Nimar Khasia (2) is clearly distinguishable. There the title of the plaintiff was not found nor was he in possession. I submit possession has not got to be looked into where plaintiff has title. See Dwarkaram Misser v. Jogessur Lal (4).

Dr. Kanji Lal replied in brief.

JUDGMENT.

Walmsley, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit for mesne profits. The story is rather a curious one. It appears from the Munsif's judgment that the defendant, who is now the appellant, brought a suit for partition of his land against the predecessor of the present plaintiff-respondent.

SADASIVA MUDALIAR v. HAJEE FAKKEER MAHOMED SAIT & SONS.

He failed on the ground that the area in the occupation of the defendant was distinct and separate from the land claimed by the present plaintiff. Then there was a proceeding under section 145, Civil Procedure Code, which ended in favour of the defendant. This was followed by a suit instituted by the plaintiff in which he asked for his title to be declared to a piece of land measuring one bigha 10 cottas odd out of a larger plot measuring two bighas seven cottas odd. He gave the boundaries of the larger plot but did not give the boundaries of the smaller plot. He asked also for recovery of possession. He obtained a decree in both Courts, then proceeded to put his decree into execution. On objection by the judgment-debtor, that is, the present defendant, the lower Appellate Court held that the decree was incapable of execution on the ground that it was so vague that it could not be determined what the land was of which possession was to be given to the plaintiff. There was no appeal against that order of the lower Appellate Court with the result that the plaintiff has never been put in possession. Thereafter, the plaintiff instituted the suit from which this appeal arises asking for mesne profits for a period of some three years. The Courts below have given the plaintiff a decree for mesne profits amounting to Rs. 308 odd and, in the judgment of the Court of first instance, the details are given. The point which is pressed before us on behalf of the defendant is that the plaintiff was not entitled to a decree for mesne profits on the ground that he was not entitled to immediate possession of the land during the period for which mesne profits were claimed. The learned Pleader on behalf of the plaintiff-respondent has endeavoured to meet this argument by showing that the Courts below have been able to determine what particular trees were on the portion of the land claimed by the plaintiff. But to do this is to go behind the judgment of the Appellate Court in the execution proceedings. He has further tried to argue that, as the plaintiff's title has been declared, he is qualified to maintain a suit for mesne profits. The fallacy of this argument, I think, lies in this that the identity of the land is not established.

The plaintiff must show that he is entitled to possession of the land which yielded the mesne profits that he claims and, in view of the decision of the Appellate Court in the execution proceedings, he is unable to do that. The result is that effect must be given to the argument advanced on behalf of the appellant and the appeal decreed and the plaintiff's suit dismissed but without costs in any Court in view of the peculiar circumstances of the case.

JUDGMENT.

Sir John Edge.—This is an appeal from a decree, dated the 25th March 1919, of the High Court at Madras, which varied in the plaintiff's favour a decree, dated the 11th August 1917, of the Subordinate Judge of the Nilgiris in Civil Suit No. 67 of 1916. The suit relates to a contract which was made and to be performed in the Presidency of Madras.

The defendants, who are the appellants here, are P. M. Sadasiva Mudaliar, defendant No. 1; P. M. Gurusamy Mudaliar, defendant No. 2, and P. M. Pasupathy Mudaliar, defendant No. 3. They and their youngest brother, who is a minor and is not a party to this suit, constitute a joint Hindu family. When this suit was instituted on the 4th October 1916, defendant No. 1 was 40 years of age, defendant No. 2 was 35 years of age, and defendant No. 3 was 22 years old. They were sons of P. Marudachala Mudaliar, who died in 1906. This joint family carried on business as owners of lands and house property in the Nilgiri District, and in the purchase and sale of hides, and as commission agents for the sale of beer brewed at the Rose and Crown Brewery, of which brewery the father had been a Director. In the office of Director of that brewery the father was on his death succeeded by his son the defendant No. 1. The joint family business was carried on under the names of P. M. Marudachala Mudaliar and Sons and P. M. Sadasiva Mudaliar and Brothers. In the father's lifetime he had acted as the manager for the joint family with the assistance of his eldest son, and since the father's death the defendant No. 1, with the assistance of the defendant No. 2, managed the family business.

On the 8th April 1915, the plaintiff firm obtained against persons who constituted the firm of Rangayya Goundan and Company a decree for sale of two breweries, known as the Nilgiri Brewery of Ootacamund, and the Castle Brewery of Aruvanghat, in default of payment of Rs. 1,81,429 odd, interest thereon and costs. The plaintiff firm, claiming that more was due to them in that suit, appealed to the High Court. While that appeal was pending these defendants Nos. 1 and 2, on the 6th December 1915, agreed (Exhibit H) with Rangayya Goundan, one of the judgment-debtors of the 8th April 1915, to purchase the two breweries, free from all encumbrances, for a sum of Rs. 3,70,000, of which Rs. 1,83,000 were to be paid into Court on or before the 3rd January 1916, in satisfaction of the decree of the 8th April 1915. These defendants Nos. 1 and 2, not having the money with which to pay the Rs. 3,70,000 applied to the plaintiffs' firm for financial assistance, and on the 31st December 1915, an agreement (Exhibit AA) was drawn up as between these three defendants and their minor brother through his guardian, who were described as the mortgagors (that term to include them and each of their heirs) of the one part and the plaintiff firm of the other part, whereby the plaintiff firm agreed to advance to the mortgagors four lakhs of rupees at 12 per cent. per annum interest on the security of the two breweries, and of other property which was property of the joint family. The four lakhs of rupees were to include a bonus of Rs. 30,000 to the plaintiff firm for their assistance. The four lakhs of rupees were to be paid as follows:—To the mortgagees, the plaintiff firm, Rs. 1,83,000 or thereabouts, in satisfaction of their decree of the 8th April 1915; to the mortgagors, Rs. 51,000 or thereabouts; to Mr. Branson in satisfaction of a decree obtained by him against Rangayya Goundan and Company, Rs. 86,000 or thereabouts; an undefined amount to be kept in reserve pending the decision by the High Court of the appeal by the plaintiff firm in the suit against Rangayya Goundan and Company, and Rs. 30,000 the bonus. The agreement was signed by the defendants Nos. 1 and 2, and by the defendant No. 1 as the guardian of their minor brother. The defendant No. 3 was at the time absent from his home at Ootacamund he was in some country district, and did not sign the agreement, nor was he consulted about it.

It was found that the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 were not in a position to grant a mortgage of the two breweries, owing to the illness of Rangayya Goundan and to the widow and son of Nanjayya Goundan refusing to join in a conveyance of the breweries until certain claims which they made had been satisfied, and on the 5th January 1916, the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 gave to the plaintiff firm the following letter:—

“(Exhibit BB.)

“To Messrs. A. R. Hajee Fakher Mahomed Sait and Sons,

“We beg to inform you that we are unable to carry out at once as agreed upon the terms of our finance agreement of the 31st December 1915 (hereinafter referred to as the agreement), on account of the delay in obtaining a proper conveyance of the Brewery properties from the vendor and all necessary parties.

"In the event of our not being in a position to execute the mortgage for Rs. 4,00,000 referred to in the agreement within two months from this date, we agree to take a transfer of the decree obtained by you against Rangayya Goundan and others on the 8th day of April 1915, in Original Suit No. 28 of 1910 on the file of the Sub-Court upon which the sum of Rs. 1,82,145-14-2 is now due and also any further decree that may be passed in your favour by the High Court on an appeal now pending from the said decree.

"In consideration of your making us an advance of Rs. 50,000 on our pro-note on this date (Rs. 20,000 having been paid in cash and Rs. 30,000 being the bonus already paid by us to Mahomed Hashim Sait for his services for arranging the loan of Rs. 4,00,000 referred to in the agreement), we hereby agree to execute in your favour a legal mortgage of our properties set out in the agreement to secure the said sum of Rs. 50,000 and interest thereon, as provided for in the agreement, as and from the 5th day of January 1916.

"As to the transfer of the said decree amounting to Rs. 1,82,145-14-2 as aforesaid we agreed to execute a legal mortgage in your favour of our properties set out in the agreement as well as the said decree to be so transferred to secure the said sum of Rs. 1,82,145-14-2 with interest as provided for in the agreement as and from the 3rd day of January 1916.

"As to any further amount that may be decreed on appeal by the High Court, we will execute a legal mortgage in your favour of our properties set out in the agreement and any excess amount so decreed and to be transferred as aforesaid to secure the excess amount decreed on appeal with interest as provided for in the agreement as and from the date of the appellate decree.

"Should the agreement to purchase the Breweries fall through, the agreement shall be restricted to the present advance of Rs. 50,000 and the amounts of the decree of the Sub-Court of the Nilgiris and of any further decree to be passed on appeal by the High Court.

"(") P. M. Sadasiva Mudaliar.

"(") P. M. Gurusamy Mudaliar.

"(") P. M. Sadasiva Mudaliar, guardian for Rajabahadur Mudaliar."

It will be observed that one of the signatures to the letter is in one of the business names of the joint family. The Solicitor who acted for the plaintiff firm probably thought that by way of precaution the letter had better be also signed by the members of the family. The defendant No. 3 did not sign that letter of the 5th January 1916, nor was he consulted about it. He was at that time still absent from home. The plaintiff firm agreed to the terms of that letter, and gave to the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 Rs. 50,000 by cheque, which was duly paid, and received from them the following promissory-note:—

"(Exhibit CC.)

The defendants Nos. 1 and 2 were unable to come to an arrangement with the widow and son of Nanjayya Goundan, and consequently could not grant the mortgage of the two breweries. The two breweries were finally sold to the United Breweries Company. That Company, by payment of the amount due under the decree of the 8th April 1915, discharged that decree.

The defendants Nos. 1 and 2 in December 1915, entered into possession of the two breweries under their agreement with Rangayya Goundan, of the 6th December 1915, and carried on the business of brewing at the breweries. They obtained in the name of P. M. Sadasiva Mudaliar and Brothers the necessary Government Abkari licence for the official year 1915-16. That licence was hung up in a prominent place in the brewery office. The business of brewing was carried on until the breweries were sold to the United Breweries Company.

According to the evidence of defendant No. 3, he first became aware, in February 1916, that the two breweries were being carried on by the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 and of the terms on which they had acquired an interest in the breweries. That may, in their Lordships' opinion, be accepted as a fact. It appears that he had been advised by an uncle of his that the two breweries should not be treated as business of the joint family, and that on his return to Ootacamund in March 1916, he informed his brothers the defendants Nos. 1 and 2, that he objected to the breweries being joint family business. As a matter of fact, the owning and carrying on of breweries was not business which had been carried on by the joint family, and was outside the scope of the business of the joint family. If that was his opinion, as it may be assumed it was at that time, he should have avoided taking any part in the management of the breweries, and in the sale of the beer brewed there. Probably he came to the conclusion that the breweries were or would be a profitable concern for him to have an interest in as a proprietor. Whatever his motive may have been, he acted at Ootacamund in the management of the two breweries from June until October 1916. In October 1916, a depot for the sale of the beer brewed at these breweries was started at Madras, and the defendant No. 3 took charge of that depot, which was carried on in one of the trading names of the joint family. Some of the cheques which were received at the depot in Madras in payment of money due for beer were endorsed by him in the name of P. M. Sadasiva Mudaliar and Brothers, and were paid by him into the account of the joint family with their bankers. Their Lordships will later express their opinion as to what are the inferences to be drawn from the acts of the defendant No. 3 in and after June 1916, at Ootacamund and in Madras. It has not been suggested that he acted in the position of a paid manager or paid clerk.

This suit was brought on the 4th October 1916, on the basis of the letter of the 5th January 1916, the offer contained in it having been accepted by the plaintiff firm. The plaintiff-firm claimed in their plaint Rs. 77,303-13-7, which represented the Rs. 50,000 which were advanced on the 5th January 1916, and interest on that sum; interest on the sum of Rs. 1,82,145-14-2, the amount of the decree for sale of the 8th April 1915; interest on Rs. 37,336-7-5 the additional amount which was allowed to them by the Appellate Court in the appeal from the decree for sale; and interest on the total amount of that Appellate Court decree by way of prospective damages; and the plaintiff-firm prayed for a decree against the defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 3 personally and against their family property in the hands of the defendants excepting the share in it of their minor brother. The defendants severed in the defences, the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 filed one written statement, and the defendant No. 3 filed two written statements. The defences pleaded, so far as they are now material, were, briefly, that the agreements of the 31st December 1915, and of the 5th January 1916, were not completed contracts, as they were not executed by all the parties intended to be jointly bound by them and could not be enforced against any of the defendants. That in view of the facts, as will later appear, was an untenable defence. It was further pleaded by the defendant No. 3 that the agreements were not for the benefit of the joint family, and were not within the powers of the manager of a joint family to make. The defendant No. 3 also specially pleaded that he was not consulted about the agreements and was not bound by them. The defendants Nos. 1 and 2 in their written statement, admitted their liability to pay Rs. 20,000 of the Rs. 50,000.

The learned Subordinate Judge who tried the suit and heard the witnesses giving their evidence, observed in his judgment:—

"The facts of the case not being complicated, and covering as they do a comparatively short period, the oral evidence in the case is, on the whole, short: the questions in issue are in the main questions of construction and questions of law. Despite, however, the essential simplicity of the facts, there has been in the case an unusual amount of hard swearing on the part of the four parties to the suit that have been examined; a most regrettable feature of the case, having regard to the fact that the plaintiffs and the defendants occupy a very leading position in their respective communities."

The four parties to the suit who gave evidence were the defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 3, and the managing member of the plaintiff firm. As regards the defendant No. 3, the Subordinate Judge also said in his judgment:—

"As regards Pasupathy Mudaliar, I do not think he is speaking the truth when he tries to dissociate himself as much as possible from the brewery business which was actually being carried on in the name of the family firm and in which he actually took part between June 1916 and January 1917, in Ootacamund and in Madras. He has tried hard to fight shy of even an ocular acquaintance with the contents of the licence in the name of the firm that was hung up in the brewery. I cannot agree with him when he pretends that he was an independent member of his joint family on the same footing as his senior brothers. I do not believe him when he says that he told his elder brother in September 1915, that he would not be bound by their forming a syndicate to buy the breweries." and:—

"As already indicated in the summary of facts, the third defendant after July 1916 took an active, though subordinate, part in the brewery business which defendants Nos. 1 and 2 wanted to acquire for the family. The reasonable inference to be drawn is that he ratified those acts of the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 under which they bound themselves to acquire the breweries, e.g., the agreements H and J and those acts under which defendants Nos. 1 and 2 obtained authority from the Board of Revenue to carry on the brewing business and to open a depot in Madras. But this does not indicate that he ratified those acts of defendants Nos. 1 and 2 which are referable to the particular method of acquisition which the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 wished to adopt; and I may say that there is absolutely no evidence whatsoever which shows that the third defendant ratified Exhibits AA, BB or CC except to the extent of the sum of Rs. 20,000 which forms a portion of the consideration of the Exhibit CC promissory-note. I make this exception as, in the absence of the account-books of the family, I must presume that this sum of Rs. 20,000 actually received by defendants Nos. 1 and 2 has passed into the family accounts, and on the ground that the implied authority given by the third defendant to defendants Nos. 1 and 2 by way of ratification to acquire the breweries necessarily implies an authority to borrow the required money under ordinary conditions; and the borrowing of Rs. 20,000 only at 24 per cent. for the purpose of making up Rs. 5,70,000, the sale price of the breweries, prima facie amounts to borrowing under ordinary conditions."

In conclusion, the Subordinate Judge, disallowing all plaintiff company's claims except as to Rs. 20,000, made the following decree:—

"It is ordered and decreed that the defendants Nos. 1 to 3 do pay to the plaintiffs the sum of Rs. 21,800 (being principal—Rs. 20,000 and interest thereon at the rate of 12 per cent. per annum from 5th January 1916, to date of suit, 4th October 1916,—Rs. 1,800) out of the amount sued for, with interest on Rs. 20,000 at the rate of 12 per cent. per annum from 5th October 1916 to this date, viz., Rs. 2,040, and with further interest on the aggregate amount of Rs. 23,840 at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum from this date to the date of realization, and that the defendants Nos. 1 to 3 do also pay to the plaintiffs the sum of Rs. 682-2-0 on account of the proportionate costs of the suit, with interest thereon at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum from this date to the date of realization, subject, however, to the reservation that the third defendant's liability is restricted to his share in the family property only.

"It is further ordered that the defendants Nos. 1 to 3 will not get their proportionate costs on the amount disallowed to the plaintiffs and do bear their own costs."

It is not clear why the Subordinate Judge did not decree payment of the Rs. 50,000 instead of Rs. 20,000 only. If he had been consistent, he would have decreed payment of the larger amount.

From the decree of the Subordinate Judge the plaintiff company appealed to the High Court. The leading judgment in the High SADASIVA MUDALIAR v. HAJEE FAKHER MAHMED SAIT.

Court was delivered by Abdur Rahim, J. In his judgment, he said :—

“The main question argued both in the lower Court as well as before us is whether the agreement, Exhibit BB, was a contract at all, that is to say, whether the agreement was to be regarded as complete and binding since the third defendant in the suit, Pasupathy Mudaliar, did not sign it. It is signed by ‘P. M. Marudachala Mudaliar and Sons’—that is the name of the family firm of the Mudaliars—and also by the first defendant, Sadasiva Mudaliar, the second defendant, Gurusamy Mudaliar, and by Sadasiva Mudaliar as guardian for Rajabahadur Mudaliar, minor brother of the defendants. I have no hesitation whatever in accepting the evidence of Mr. Walker that the parties expected that the third brother, Pasupathy Mudaliar, also would execute the agreement. The promissory-note, Exhibit CC, is signed only by Sadasiva Mudaliar and Gurusamy Mudaliar, first and second defendants. The question with respect to both the documents is whether they are to be regarded as completed transactions or whether it was the intention of the parties that there was to be no binding contract until the third defendant, Pasupathy Mudaliar, joined in executing Exhibit BB. The learned Subordinate Judge has held that the agreement was conditional, that is, it was not to take effect until it was executed by Pasupathy Mudaliar. It seems to me, however, that the admitted and clearly established facts of the case point to an opposite conclusion. There can be no doubt whatever, as already stated, that both the parties intended that Exhibit BB should be binding on the entire family. At the same time, it is equally clear to me that the parties intended that, if all could not be bound, at least those who signed in their individual capacity, would be bound. The Sait had left the matter in the hands of their legal adviser, Mr. Walker, and the evidence also shows that the Mudaliars were represented by a Pleader, Mr. Rama Row, who, however, has not been examined in the case. There was considerable discussion between different parties and their lawyers as to what should be the exact nature of the arrangements. The result of the evidence amounts to this—that since there was difficulty, as mentioned in Exhibit BB itself, as to getting the necessary parties to join in the conveyance of the breweries to the Mudaliars, the expedient that they hit upon was that the Mudaliars should take a transfer of the decree of the Sait. With that decree in their hands they expected that there would be no great difficulty in securing the breweries. The Mudaliars wanted the breweries for the benefit of the entire family, which consisted of three adults and one minor brother, but the lawyers of the parties thought that difficulty might arise in binding the entire family, as questions might be raised as to whether the transaction was a proper one for the benefit of the family. Mr. Walker’s evidence makes it clear that under the circumstances he thought it expedient and advisable that the agreement should be signed not only by the firm or in the firm’s name, but by the Mudaliars individually. The plaintiffs’ object in that was that if it so happened that the transaction did not come within the scope of the family business which consisted mainly in plantations, the members of the family who signed the agreement would be bound by them. The third defendant was at the time not in Ootacamund, and that was the reason why he did not actually sign Exhibit BB, but he was expected to sign it, and the evidence is that the first defendant, who is the head of the family, being the elder brother, undertook to obtain the signature of Pasupathy Mudaliar. Mr. Walker positively swears that it was never suggested or understood that Exhibit BB would not come into operation unless or until Pasupathy signed it. There is not the slightest reason to doubt the bona fides or accuracy of his statement. And it clearly could not have been the intention of the parties that Exhibit BB was to have no effect whatever until the third brother signed it.”

Their Lordships agree with all that the learned Judge said on that subject. As to the liability of defendant No. 3, he said that :—

“It cannot be disputed that at least from June 1916, he took a very active part in the business of the breweries. He was in charge of the depot in Madras for some time according to the arrangement with the Excise Authorities (their licence); he received monies from the family to funds (with which to carry on the business), and paid the profits of the business into the family account with the Bank. He also signed cheques in the name of the family firm of Marudachala Mudaliar and Sons and Sadasiva Mudaliar and Brothers, and there cannot be the least doubt that he regarded the business as much his own as that of the first and second defendants."

Their Lordships are not aware that the defendant No. 3 ever signed any cheque in the name of either of the joint family firms, if that is what the learned Judge meant in the passage quoted; but he probably meant that the defendant No. 3 had endorsed some cheques in the name of the firm, and with that explanation their Lordships agree with the finding quoted. Further on, the learned Judge found "the evidence clearly shows that he (the defendant No. 3) treated and adopted the whole transaction as one in which he was interested as much as the first and second defendants," and he also found that the defendant No. 3 ratified and adopted the transaction of the 5th January 1916, by his subsequent conduct, and made himself liable by adopting that contract. Spencer, J., in a short judgment, agreed with Abdur Rahim, J., and said: "I also agree in thinking that the third defendant, by his subsequent conduct, ratified and acquiesced in the agreement when he joined with his brothers in managing the brewery business in 1916." The result was, the High Court gave the plaintiff-firm a decree for Rs. 76,159-5-7, which included the Rs. 54,359-5-7, which had been decreed by the Subordinate Judge, and with some future interest at 6 per cent.

From that decree of the High Court this appeal has been brought. Their Lordships agree with the findings of the High Court, which they have quoted from the judgments delivered in that Court. There can be no doubt the business of owning and carrying on breweries was not a business of the joint family, and that the minor brother, when he comes of age, can repudiate the contract of the 5th January 1916, so far as he and his interest in the joint family property are concerned, and that his interests in the joint family property cannot be affected by this suit. The contract of the 5th January 1916, cannot be regarded as a contract of the joint family of which the minor brother is a member, but defendant No. 3 accepted that contract as binding on him, and derived benefits under it and consequently accepted it, with liability to perform it; the money which was advanced under it by the plaintiff firm was money which was required for the starting and carrying on of the brewing business. It appears to their Lordships that it is a contract which is binding on those members of the joint family, the defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 3, who were parties to it or accepted it as a contract, and that they cannot escape their liability to perform it or to pay damages for the non-performance of it by showing that they have no property except that which is property of the joint family in which their minor brother is equally interested with them. If it were the law that some members of a joint family could escape from liability to perform contracts entered into by them on the grounds that their contracts were not such as would bind the joint family, and that they had no property other than that which was the property of the joint family, it would be necessary for every person with whom they sought to make a contract to assure himself that the business to which the proposed contract would relate was business of the joint family, and that no member of the joint family was a minor. Under such circumstances, it would be difficult to carry on business with persons who happened to be members of a joint family of the Province of Madras. What might be the position in other Provinces it is unnecessary to consider. The decree in this suit cannot be executed against the minor's interest in the joint property of the family.

Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that this appeal should be dismissed with costs.

The term 'Jalkar' is ambiguous. It may mean either a grant of a mere right of fishery or it may mean the grant of a sheet of water together with the sub-soil. The question whether what was intended to be granted in a particular case was restricted to a right of fishery or included a grant of a sheet of water together with the sub-soil must depend upon the construction of the original grant if available or must be determined with regard to the subsequent history of the property. The misconstruction of a document which is the foundation of a suit and which is in the nature of a contract or a document of title, is allowed to be a ground for a second appeal. [p. 56, col. 2.]

A special appeal does not lie because some portion of the evidence may be in writing and the Judge makes a mistake as to the meaning of it. For instance, a writing supposed to contain an admission may be put in as part of the evidence, but a mistake in its meaning is not a misconstruction of a document upon which a special appeal will lie, if it is connected with other evidence, affecting its construction. Nowbut Singh v. Chutter Dharee Singh, 12 W. R. 222, referred to.

Appeal against the decree of the Additional District Judge, Pabna and Bogra, dated the 22nd August 1919, reversing the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Bogra, dated the 28th of March 1917.

Babu Sarat Chandra Roy Chaudhury (with him Babu Indu Bhushan Roy), for the Appellant.—I submit that the Courts below have erred in law in finding title to the lands in dispute with the plaintiffs against the weight of evidence in favour of my clients. Our contention is that the land is not comprised within the permanently settled estate of the plaintiffs but has accreted to the adjacent permanently settled estate held by us. The land at the time of the Permanent Settlement was covered with water. The predecessors of the plaintiffs got only the right of fishery and the bed of the jalkar remained with the Crown. Wrong inference from facts can be assailed in second appeal, and my point is that the Courts have erred in estimating the value of evidence in the case. The Courts have misconstrued the documents. Jalkar has not been thoroughly understood by the learned Judge. Mahananda Chakravarti v. Mongala Keotani (1). I am ready to prove that the plaintiffs got only the right of fishery and nothing more. The grant does not include the sub-soil. There are different pieces of evidence to which proper weight and consideration has not been given. I contend that merely fishery right was granted.

Babu Dwarkanath Chakravarti (with him Babus Sasadhar Roy and Jatindranath Sannyal), for the Respondents.—I submit that the appeal is concluded by findings of fact and so my learned friend cannot challenge the Appellate Court's judgment in second appeal. Your Lordships cannot go into different pieces of evidence as if it was a first appeal. In this connection reference can be made to Nowbut Singh v. Chutter Dharee Singh (2). There is no question here of the construction of document as the original grant cannot be had. As regards the meaning of the word jalkar, I do not desire to go into legal subtleties, as the findings of fact arrived at by the Court of Appeal below and by the learned Subordinate Judge are unassailable.

Babu Sarat Chandra Rao Chaudhury, briefly replied.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the defendants in a suit for recovery of possession of land on declaration of title. The case for the plaintiff's is that the disputed land is comprised within a permanently settled estate held by them within the Collectorate of the District of Bogra and known as Mahal Dehi Adgola. The defendants contend that the land is not comprised within the permanently settled estate of the plaintiffs but lies outside its ambit and has accreted to the neighbouring permanently settled estate held by themselves. They further contend that the claim of the plaintiffs is barred by limitation. The Court of first instance found upon the question of title in favour of the plaintiffs but dismissed the suit on the ground of limitation. Upon appeal the District Judge has affirmed the conclusions of the Subordinate Judge upon the question of title, but has reversed his decision upon the question of limitation. The result has been that the suit has been decreed.

On the present appeal the decision of the District Judge has been assailed on the ground that his conclusion upon the question of title is erroneous in law. It is not disputed that the land in suit formed at one time the bed of a Beel, called Beel Narail, known also as 'jalkar Sat Simulia'. The plaintiffs assert that at the time of the Permanent Settlement the bed of this 'jalkar' was settled with their predecessors as included in the permanently settled estate granted to them. The defendants do not controvert the position that the land was, at the time of the Permanent Settlement, covered with water, but they contend that what was settled with the predecessors of the plaintiffs was nothing beyond the right of fishery and that the bed of the 'jalkar' remained with the Crown. The grant made at the time of the Permanent Settlement has not been produced and consequently no question arises as to the construction of the fundamental title-deed. The plaintiffs, as also the defendants, have accordingly been constrained to rely upon subsequent documents which disclose various transactions connected with the disputed land or with the 'jalkar' and the Courts below have thus been called upon to ascertain from the subsequent history of the disputed land the nature of the initial grant. Prima facie this does not raise a question of law which can be investigated in second appeal. It was pointed out by Sir Richard Couch, C. J., in Nawbut Singh v. Chutler Dharce Singh (2) that a special appeal does not lie, because some portion of the evidence may be in writing and the Judge makes a mistake as to the meaning of it. For instance, a writing supposed to contain an admission may be put in as part of the evidence, but a mistake in its meaning is not a misconstruction of a document upon which a special appeal will lie, if it is connected with other evidence affecting its construction. The misconstruction of a document which is the foundation of the suit, which is in the nature of a contract or a document of title is allowed to be a ground for a second appeal. As we have already stated, the original grant is not available and, consequently, no question arises as to its legal construction.

The appellants have, however, attacked the judgment of the District Judge on the ground that he has lost sight of a very important distinction in connection with the meaning of the expression 'jalkar'. We are of opinion that this charge cannot be justified. It is well-known that the term 'jalkar' is ambiguous. It may mean either a grant of a mere right of fishery or it may mean the grant of a sheet of water together with the sub-soil. This is pointed out in a long series of decisions from Bissen Lal Dass v. Rane Khyrunnissa Begum (3) to Mahananda Chakravarti v. Mongala Keotani (1). Amongst the intermediate decisions, the more important are those in Radha Mohun Mundul v. Neel Madhub Mundul (4), David v. Grish Chunder Guha (5) and Rakhai Churn Mundul v. Watson and Co. (6). The distinction is also emphasised in the decision of the Judicial Committee in Radha Gobind Roy Saheb v. Inglis (7). The question whether what was intended to be granted in a particular case was restricted to a right of fishery or included a grant of a sheet of water together with the sub-soil must depend upon the construction of the original grant if available or must be determined with regard to the subsequent history of the property. In the present case the Subordinate Judge has pointed out that the entries in the two Registers known as A Register and B Register maintained under the Land Registration Act, 1876, undoubtedly support the contention of the plaintiffs. The B Register shows that the 'jalkar Sat Simulia' alias Beel Narail is one of the Mouzahs comprised in the permanently settled estate, Mahal Dehi Adgola, and that the area of the Mouzah is 1051 acres and 13 poles. It is improbable that there should be a reference to the area if the right which the proprietors received from the Crown was a right of fishery. The entry in the A Register supports the conclusion that the grant includes the sub-soil. That entry shows that Rs. 5,504-6-0 was the amount of land revenue payable for the entire estate; that is, in respect of all the Mouzahs comprised in the estate inclusive of the jalkar Mouzah. This conclusion is borne out by the Revenue Survey map which shows that the area of the jalkar Mouzah which, at the date of the Survey in 1854, was all water, corresponds also with the area as subsequently shown. The Thak Survey which preceded the Revenue Survey resulted in a map which supports the same conclusions. The Courts below were, however, pressed with the proceedings of the Collector under Act IV of 1840 which supports the contention of the defendant. We are not concerned in second appeal with the weight to be assigned to the different pieces of evidence on the record and it is not open to us to examine whether the Courts below have properly given preference to the documents which we have mentioned first. But, apart from all this, the outstanding fact remains that if the grant made at the time of the Permanent Settlement was in respect of the fishery right alone, the Crown has not taken steps to resume the land after the Beel had dried up and to assess the land with revenue. The fact that the Beel has dried up has been known to the Revenue Authorities and they have for more than a quarter of a century allowed the plaintiffs to remain in occupation through their tenants of a large tract of land. Consequently, we cannot justly hold that what was granted was a franchise or an incorporeal right of fishery and not a territorial right. Evidence of a conclusive character would be required to justify the theory that in respect of a Mouzah comprised within the ambit of a permanently settled estate there was no grant of the sub soil to the grantee and that what was granted was a mere fishery right, the right to the sub-soil remaining in the Crown. Such a conclusion would be opposed to the decision of this Court in Mathura Nath Chattopadhyay v. Sib Chandra Bose (8).

It is plain that the defendants have no title whatsoever in the disputed land, it is not comprised within their permanently settled estate; nor can we conceive by what possible means they may have acquired title by accretion. The land never formed the bed of a public navigable river, it has not been claimed as land which has emerged from recession of a river, it has been made culturable because the Beel has dried up. In these circumstances, it is impossible to conceive how the defendant can successfully claim title by accretion. The only chance of the defendants was to prove title by adverse possession; in this they have failed according to the judgment of the District Judge. Upon the question of title, there is the concurrent decision of two Courts in favour of the plaintiffs; that decision has not been challenged on grounds admissible in second appeal.

The result is that the decree of the District Judge is affirmed and this appeal dismissed with costs.

Appeal against a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Kheri, dated the 8th April 1922, reversing a decree of the Munsif, Kheri, dated the 20th June 1921.

Mr. Bisheshar Nath, for the Appellant.
Mr. Haider Hussain, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a claim for damages for defamation and malicious prosecution. The defendant is the Munim and general agent of a firm styled Brahaman Prasad-Parshotamdas carrying on cloth business at Maigalganj, a Railway station in the Kheri District. The Station-Master at that place was Niaz Hussain, the maternal uncle of the plaintiff. The defendant purchased some cloth from the shop of Govind Ram-Mokand Ram at Cawnpore and got it despatched by Railway to the shop of Brahaman Prasad Prashotamdas at Maigalganj. The consignment consisted of three bundles which reached Maigalganj in due course. Some time before the 4th May 1920 Maiku Lal, a servant of the firm, took delivery of the goods and on opening the bundles and comparing their contents with the invoice, found that about 20 pieces of cloth were missing. The bales appeared to be all right from outside; but on opening them, the bethan, or the inner covering, was found cut suggesting that the upper covering was opened and, after the bethan was cut and some of the contents removed, re-sewn. Maiku Lal informed his master and the consignors about the same.

The date on which the consignment actually reached Maigalganj is not stated. Maiku Lal had to pay some demurrage for the same. He suspected that the Railway employees at the Maigalganj station were responsible for the theft: and hearing that the plaintiff was going to Sitapur with some pieces of cloth on the 10th May 1920 for getting them sewn, he secretly followed him to Sitapur. The bundle of cloth, which the plaintiff had with him and which he had brought from the house of the Station Master, was suspected to contain some of the missing pieces. The plaintiff entered a shop in the Sitapur Market. The defendant left him there and went to Seth Aisi Lal, a friend and partner of his master, and spoke to him about the whole affair. Both these men went to the Police Station at Sitapur where they made a report and, taking a Policeman with them, came to the shop where the defendant was sitting and got his bundle opened. It was found to contain some wearing apparel and some unsewn pieces of cloth. The defendant identified the unsewn pieces of cloth as a part of the property, which had been stolen from his consignment. The plaintiff remained under arrest while the Police investigation went on for about a week and had to be ultimately discharged, as the pieces of cloth found in his possession, bore no numbers or identifying marks. At the time of his arrest he admitted that he had obtained the wearing apparel and the pieces of cloth from Niaz Hussain, the Station Master of Maigalganj. The houses of Niaz Hussain and the plaintiff were searched but nothing incriminating was found.

The Trial Court was of opinion that the defendant had acted in good faith in making a report to the Police and that there was reasonable and probable cause for taking steps to get the plaintiff arrested. The lower Appellate Court, however, held that the occasion was not privileged and that the defendant could not avoid liability except by proving that the imputation was true. It observed that the pieces of cloth found in the possession of the plaintiff were not proved to have been stolen property, and that, though what the defendant said might possibly have occurred, it was his duty to supply all the links in the chain for bringing the charge home to the plaintiff and to prove his case affirmatively by evidence, which would be sufficient to convict the plaintiff on the criminal charge of keeping the stolen property. It further observed that there was evidence of malice in the relations between the parties, which were bitter from before the date of the alleged crime, but it was not necessary to go into it for if no occasion of privilege was established, the most honest and reasonable belief was of itself no justification for the charge. The claim of the plaintiff for damages for malicious prosecution not having been pressed, the rest of the claim for damages for defamation was accordingly decreed.

The view of the law taken by the learned Subordinate Judge is obviously insupportable. As a rule, an action lies for the malicious publication of statements, which are false in fact and injurious to the character of another within certain limits, and the law considers such publication as malicious, unless it is fairly made by a person in the discharge of some public or private duty, whether legal or moral, or in the conduct of his own affairs in matters where his interest is concerned. In the latter class of cases the occasion prevents the inference of malice which the law draws from unauthorised communications; and a qualified privilege attaches to the statements so made, if fairly warranted by any reasonable occasion or exigency and honestly made or made in good faith for the common convenience and welfare of society. There are three elements necessary to make the defence of qualified privilege good, namely, the occasion must be fit, the matter must have reference to the occasion and it must be published from right motives (Clerk and Lindsell on Torts, 7th Edition, page 580). Indeed, it is a duty which every one owes to society and to the State to assist in the investigation of any alleged misconduct and to promote the detection of any crime. When it comes to the knowledge of any one that a crime has been committed, a duty is laid on him as a citizen of the country to state to the authorities what he knows respecting the commission of the crime; and if he states only what he knows and honestly believes, he cannot be subjected to an action of damages merely because it turns out that the person, as to whom he has given the information, is, after all, not guilty of the crime. For the sake of public justice, charges and communications which would otherwise be slanderous, are protected, if bona fide made in the prosecution of an inquiry into a suspected crime (Orders on Libel and Slander, 5th Edition, page 272). In Brojo-nath Roy v. Kishen Loll Roy (1) it was accordingly held that every man, who considered that a criminal offence had been committed against him, had a right to make a complaint to the Police or before the Magistrate and his failure in proving a bona fide charge so made by him did not make him liable to an action for damages for defamation. In Raghavendra v. Kashinathbhat (2), where a person whose property had been stolen informed the chief Police Constable entrusted with the enquiry, that he suspected the stolen property to be concealed in the house of the plaintiff and the house of the plaintiff was accordingly searched and its floor dug up and the plaintiff was placed in confinement for a time but no property was found, it was held that the onus lay on the plaintiff to prove the absence of reasonable and probable cause against the defendant for the information given by him to the Police and that in the absence of such proof the defendant was protected in respect of the information given by him to the person in charge in the discharge of a public or private duty. As observed in Abdul Hakim v. Tej Chandar Mukerji (3), it is not essential that before a person can be held entitled to the privilege of having made a statement in good faith for the protection of his interest, he should establish that every word he has spoken or written is literally true if, having regard to the facts and circumstances within his knowledge, he might, as an ordinarily reasonable and prudent man, have drawn the conclusions which he has expressed in defamatory language for the protection of his interest, he may fairly be held to have made out his good faith.

SATISH CHANDRA V. FIRM RAJ NARAIN PAKHIRA-RASIK LAL PAKHIRA.

There is clear evidence in this case to show that some of the stolen pieces of cloth contained in the consignment were missing. There is also evidence to the effect that the inner bethan or covering was found cut. The consignment had remained at the Maigalganj Railway Station for some time after its receipt and the defendant had to pay the demurrage for the same. The plaintiff admittedly obtained some cloth from the house of the Station Master and took it to Sitapur to get it sewn, followed by the defendant. There was no ill-feeling which could have prompted the defendant in following the plaintiff within six days of the delivery of his consignment, when the latter was on his way to Sitapur. The loss of some of the pieces of cloth had already been reported by the defendant to the consignors at Cawnpore. The pieces of cloth found in the bundle carried by the plaintiff tallied in description, though not in length, with the larger pieces which the consignment is proved to have contained. There is no proof of malice; and the suggestion that the Station Master had charged the defendant and some of his men with being in the habit of travelling without tickets is clearly an after-thought, for no evidence has been offered to show that at any time the defendant or any of his men was caught travelling without tickets or any penalty was ever levied from them. The defendant denies that he had ever been so caught or made to pay the penalty. The learned Subordinate Judge acknowledges that what the defendant says might possibly have occurred. It cannot be said in the circumstances that the story told by the defendant was without reasonable and probable cause or that the report made to the Police was not prompted by good faith. The defendant was acting for the protection of his own interest and for the investigation of a crime, in the detection of which he was interested. The occasion was clearly privileged and that privilege is not controverted by any evidence of malice.

The learned Counsel for the plaintiff respondent contends that the defendant made the slanderous statement in the presence of the Police and several other persons present in the market at the time of the search; but a person does not lose his privilege by reason of the casual presence of one or even of several uninterested by-standers who happen to be present at the time of the search or arrest. If the occasion is privileged and the matter complained of has reference to the occasion, the only remaining question is whether the occasion was used without malice. That it was so is proved in this case.

The appeal is, therefore, allowed and the claim of the plaintiff dismissed with costs here and hitherto.

JUDGMENT.—These two appeals arise out of proceedings under the Provincial Insolvency Act.

An application was made by one of the creditors for declaring the debtors (who are four out of five members of a firm, the fifth being a minor) insolvent. Some of the other creditors opposed the application on various grounds. The learned District Judge dismissed the application on several grounds. After the application had been disposed of, four of the debtors made an application for being declared insolvents. This also was rejected by the Court below on the ground, among others, that they had not proved their inability to pay their debts. These two appeals are against these two orders. We propose to deal first of all with Miscellaneous Appeal No. 378 of 1922 which deals with applications of the four debtors to be declared insolvents.

It appears that one of the debtors, Rasik Lal, was examined and he stated that the debts amounted to over Rs. 1,06,600 and that they were unable to pay their debts; and there is a report of the Receiver which states that the value of the Rice Mill would be about Rs. 30,000 only.

The learned District Judge, however, in arriving at the conclusion that the debtors were not unable to pay the debts, relied upon a statement in an affidavit sworn to by one of the debtors in 1920 in some other suit to the effect that the Mill was worth Rs. 95,000.

It is contended on behalf of the appellants that the Court below has not enquired into the present value of the Mill and other properties; that the Receiver was not authorized to go into the question of the value of the Mill; and that that the learned

Judge has not considered the fact that one-fifth share of the properties belong to the minor brother of the debtors who is not an applicant for insolvency.

The affidavit stated the value of the Mill as it was two years ago. What the Court below ought to have considered was the present value of the Mill and the other properties which are available for meeting the liabilities of the debtors and no inquiry has been directed to that point.

We are of opinion that the Court below should inquire into the present value of the properties and decide whether, having regard to the proviso (a) to section 24 of the Act, the debtors have proved inability to pay their debts.

A question, however, has been raised before us on behalf of the respondents, viz., that a joint application could not be made by four of the debtors for being adjudicated insolvents.

It is unnecessary to refer to the cases decided under the former Insolvency Act (III of 1907). Section 79 of the present Provincial Insolvency Act (V of 1920) provides that the High Court may make rules for carrying into effect the provisions of this Act.

Sub-section (2) lays down that such rules may provide (among others) for the procedure to be followed where the debtor is a firm.

The High Court has framed rules under section 79 of the Act.

Rule 19 provides, "where any notice, declaration, petition or other document requiring attestation is signed by a firm of creditors or debtors in the firm name, the partner signing for the firm shall also add his signature, e. g., Brown & Co., by James Green, a partner in the said firm."

Rule 22 says: "Where a firm of debtors file an insolvency petition, the same shall contain the names in full of the individual partners, and if such petition is signed in the firm name, the petition shall be accompanied by an affidavit by the partner who signs the petition showing that all the partners concur in the filing of the same."

Rule 24 lays down, "In cases of partnership the debtors shall submit a schedule of their partnership affairs, and each debtor shall submit a schedule of his separate affairs."

HIRACHAND MOTICHAND v. HANSABAI GANPATRAO.

It appears, therefore, that where the debtor is a firm, the application must be in the name of the firm and the manner in which such an application is to be signed, is laid down in the rules quoted above.

In the present case the application for insolvency was made by Rasik Lal, Janaki Nath, Surendra Nath and Satis Chandra, and although it was stated that they were jointly carrying on business under the name and style of Raj Narayan Rasik Lal Pakhira, the prayer was to the following effect:—"Your petitioners humbly pray that your Honour may be pleased to adjudge your petitioners insolvents, &c.," and it was signed by the four persons without the name of the firm.

We have gone through the statements made in the petition, and it seems that in substance it was an application by the four persons as representing the firm; but, as stated above, it was signed not in the firm name but by the four persons, not even describing themselves as representing the firm. Whatever the intention was in form, it was not in compliance with the provisions of the rules made under section 79 of the Provincial Insolvency Act.

It is contended on behalf of the appellant that, if the application is defective in form, they may be allowed to amend it.

We think that this may be done. We accordingly direct that the case (Miscellaneous Appeal No. 378 of 1922) be sent back to the lower Court in order that the appellants may apply for amendment of the petition so as to comply with the requirements of the rules framed under section 79 of the Act. The respondent will be allowed an opportunity of taking such objections as he may be advised to take with respect to the amended application. The application for amendment must be made within 10 days of the arrival of this order in the lower Court. The Court will then proceed to dispose of the case according to law.

Costs—three gold mohurs—to abide the result.

Miscellaneous Appeal No. 291 of 1922 arises out of the application made by one of the creditors. The firm appears to have been described as the debtor in that application, and the objection of the respondent as to the form of the application, therefore, does not apply to it, though other objections have been raised in that case. If, however, the question of the inability of the debtors to pay their debts is decided in their favour in the case in which they are the applicants it would not be necessary to consider those objections. The Miscellaneous Appeal No. 291 of 1922 will, therefore, stand over until the disposal of the proceedings in the lower Court in connection with M. A. No. 378 of 1922. The parties will mention the matter after the disposal of the latter case in the lower Court.

RULE NO. 604-M. OF 1922.

The stay order granted on the 15th December 1922 in connection with Miscellaneous Appeal Nos. 291 and 378 of 1922 will be discharged on expiry of 10 days from the arrival of this order in the Court below. It, however, will be open to the debtor or any of the creditors at any time to apply to the Court below for the continuance of the services of the Receiver pending the inquiry directed by us and the Court below will then consider the matter and pass such orders as it thinks fit.

Let the record be sent down as soon as the order and decree are signed.

of 1920, confirming the order passed by the Subordinate Judge, at Baraamati, in Darkhast No. 655 of 1919.

Mr. S. R. Bakhale, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—A question arises in this appeal which does not appear to have been decided in any reported case. The plaintiff obtained a decree against one Sagunabai. It was an ordinary money-decree, and, therefore, he could not seek to execute the decree against the immoveable property of the judgment-debtor who was held to be an agriculturist. But the plaintiff might have applied to the Court under paragraph 2 of section 22 of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act to direct the Collector to take possession, according to the terms of that paragraph, of any immoveable property of the judgment-debtor, to the possession of which he was entitled, and which, in the opinion of the Collector, was not required for her support and the support of the members of her family dependent on her. The judgment-debtor having died, this darkhast was filed against her daughters as her heirs; and it is now contended that the Court has jurisdiction to direct the Collector to take possession of the immoveable property which has come to the daughters as heirs of the original judgment-debtor. Both Courts have dismissed the darkhast, and we think they were right. If it had been intended that in the case of the death of a judgment-debtor who was an agriculturist, his property in the hands of his heirs could be taken possession of by the Collector under the directions of the Court, then that ought to have been specifically stated in the second paragraph of section 22. We cannot accede to the argument that we should read into the section the words "or his heirs" after the word "judgment-debtor" with the various consequential alterations which would have to be made in that paragraph. That would be, so far as I can see, entirely contrary to all canons of construction, and if the Legislature thinks that a creditor should have the remedy provided by section 22, paragraph 2, not only against the judgment-debtor, but also against his heirs, then it is for the Legislature to make the necessary amendments in the Act. The appeal will be dismissed.

Some of several joint executors of a Will cannot maintain a suit against a debtor of the estate. The mere fact that the executors who are suing hold a power-of-attorney from the other executors will not cure the defect unless the suit is on behalf of all the executors. [p. 64, col. 1.]

If a defendant is sued by one only of two persons with whom he has contracted or by one only of two persons who have a joint cause of action against him, he has a right to have the action dismissed unless the other is joined [p. 64, col. 1.]

If a defendant takes objection to the non-joinder of necessary parties at a proper time he has a right to have them joined as plaintiffs, and if after objection has been taken the plaintiff proceeds with the suit without taking steps to add the person or persons whose non-joinder has been objected to, and the Court finds that the objection is well founded, the suit must be dismissed. [p. 64, col. 1.]

Some of several executors under a Will holding a power-of-attorney from the others brought a suit on behalf of the estate in their own names. Objection as to non-joinder of the remaining executors was taken by the defendant at the earliest opportunity but no application was made by the plaintiffs to have the remaining executors added as parties. The suit was decreed by the Courts below which held that the plaintiffs by reason of the power-of-attorney could sue in their own names without joining the other executors. On second appeal:

Held, (1) that the action was wrongly conceived and must fail for non-joinder of necessary parties in spite of the provisions of section 99 of the Civil Procedure Code. [p. 64, col. 1.]

Second appeal against a decree of the District Court, North Arcot at Vellore, in A. S. No. 5 of 1920, preferred against the decree of the Court of the District Munsif, Ranipet, in O. S. No. 664 of 1917.

Mr. P. S. Narayanaswami Iyer, for the Appellant.

Messrs. T. Narasimha Aiyangar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

Schwabe, C. J.—This is an action by the executors under a Will which appointed twelve executors. The Will has been admitted to Probate. Three executors have been removed and there are at present nine. Seven have given a power-of-attorney to the other two, which, in effect, authorises the two to execute all the duties of the executors in collecting and managing the estate; but, in my view, that does not authorise those two executors to sue on behalf of the estate in their own names. It might have been sufficient authority to these two to take proceedings in the names of the nine. But that is a point which must turn on the construction of the power-of-attorney and it is unnecessary to decide it here, because it is not what has been done. Therefore, in my view, this action is wrongly conceived and must fail for non-joinder of necessary parties.

MOHNAVELU MUDALIAR v. ANNAMALAI MUDALIAR.

Under section 99 of the Civil Procedure Code no decree is to be reversed on account of any misjoinder of parties not affecting the merits of the case or the jurisdiction of the Court, and it has been held,—how far correctly I am not prepared at present to say—that “misjoined” in that section includes non-joinder. See Eakkannatha Eachara Umni Valia Kaimal v. Manakkat Vasunni Elaya Kaimal (1). But if a defendant is sued by one only of two persons with whom he has contracted or by one only of two persons who have a joint cause of action against him, he has a right to have the action dismissed unless the other is joined. This is not merely technical. It may be of great importance, because, as was pointed out in Ramsebuk v. Ramlal Koondoo (2), he ought to be in a position to recover his costs if he succeeds, as against all the parties. If there are many executors some of whom are solvent and some insolvent it might be to the prejudice of the person against whom the estate has some claim that particular executors should be able to sue him with the result that, if he succeeded and got the suit dismissed with costs, he might find no one against whom he can execute his decree for costs, and so it is correctly stated in Woodroffe and Amir

Ali's Civil Procedure Code, Second Edition at page 543, that if the defendant takes the objection at a proper time it is his right to have all the proper persons joined as plaintiffs, and if after the objection is raised, the plaintiff proceeds with the suit without taking steps to add the person or persons whose non-joinder has been objected to, and the Court finds that the objection is well founded, the suit must be dismissed. In this case the objection was taken at the earliest stage in the written statement. It was argued before the District Munsif and before the District Judge, and both those Tribunals held, and in my view wrongly, that these two executors by reason of the power-of-attorney could sue in their own names without joining the others. No application was made to either of those Courts to amend the plaint by joining the other executors, but probably if an application had been made to the District Munsif he would have permitted such amendment on terms as to costs. The position of the District Judge might have been more difficult, although, there too the position is not so difficult as it is in this Court on second appeal, where one is conscious of the working of the rule against appeals on questions of fact, because if we allow the amendment now, it might put the defendants in a worse position than they would have been if the amendment had been allowed in the first instance; and that may be the defendants' objection to further plaintiffs being added at this stage even if the consent of these proposed plaintiffs were obtained. I think there is no course open to us but to dismiss the suit with costs of both defendants here and in the Courts below—two sets. The appeal will be allowed with two sets of costs, one to the appellant and the other to the second respondent payable by the first respondent. The first respondent's memorandum of objections must be dismissed and the second respondent's memo. of objections must be allowed both without costs.

Wallace, J.—I agree and have nothing to add.

MOFEZUDDI v. EMPEROR.

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.

CRIMINAL APPEAL NO. 248 OF 1922

July 5, 1922.

Present :—Mr. Justice Walmsley and Mr. Justice Suhrawardy.MOFEZUDDI AND ANOTHER—APPELLANTS versusEMPEROR—RESPONDENT.Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 297—Jury trial—Supplementary trial—Charge—Reference to former trial—Trials, original and supplementary—Punishments; uniform, principle of, application of.

Where there are two trials—one original and the other supplementary—the duty of the Judge at the supplementary trial is to warn the Jury that the accused must have a perfectly fair trial; and that they are not to be biased by the result arrived at in the previous trial. It is neither necessary nor desirable for him to tell the Jury the offences of which the first batch of the accused were convicted. [p. 66, col. 1.]

It is impossible to apply the principle of uniformity in convictions and punishments in all cases where there are two trials—one original and the other supplementary—one batch of prisoners being tried by one Judge and one Jury and the other batch by a different Judge and different Jury. [p. 66, col. 2.]

Babu Dasarathi Sanyal (with him Babus Suresh Chandra Talukdar, Aswini Kumar Gupta and Lalit Mohun Sanyal), for the Appellants:—There are certain misdirections in the learned Judge's charge to the Jury which had vitiated the entire case and so I would contend that there ought to be a re-trial. The learned Sessions Judge should have, in all fairness to the accused, told the Jury the offences of which the first batch of the accused had been convicted about a year ago. This omission on the part of the learned Judge has prejudiced my clients. As regards the first batch the Hon'ble High Court found them guilty under the rioting section (i.e., section 148, Indian Penal Code). Their conviction under section 302, read with section 149, Indian Penal Code, was set aside on appeal to the High Court. The Jury should have been informed of this. Again, the evidence of Jabanulla has been wrongly interpreted to the Jury. The learned Judge should have used, in addressing the Jury, the precise word spoken by Jabanulla in Bengali so that the Jury would have a clear notion. The word mara in Bengalee means kill as well as beat. But the Judge interprets it as kill and not beat, whereas, as a matter of fact, this witness used the word beat and the charge also states to beat so and so. The Jury were evidently misled in finding out the intention of the accused. There has been a double use of the principle of constructive guilt. Where a prisoner is constructively guilty of murder, it is doubtful if he can be said to have committed the offence of murder within the meaning of section 149, so as to make other prisoners, by a double construction guilty of murder. Vide Empress v. Jhubbun Malhotra (1). Moreover, I beg to submit that there ought to have been uniformity in the convictions and punishments. It is a principle which all learned Judges should respect.

Mr. Orr, for the Crown, submitted that, in any event, there can be no doubt that there was voluntary grievous hurt caused to Nehal-ud-Din by dangerous weapons or means. Of course, the learned Judge was in error in speaking of a conspiracy to kill Nehal-ud-Din.

Mr. Talukdar replied briefly.

JUDGMENT.

Walmsley, J.—The two appellants, Mofezuddi and Aizuddi, were placed on their trial before the learned Sessions Judge of Backerganj and a Jury on charges of rioting and other offences. The Jury found both the accused guilty of offences under sections 148, 302, read with 149, and 302, read with 34, of the Indian Penal Code. In addition, Mofezuddi was found guilty under section 323 and Aizuddi under section 324, Indian Penal Code, and the learned Sessions Judge, accepting the unanimous verdict of the Jury, has convicted and sentenced the accused.

The case was a very serious one which resulted in the death of a man named, Nehal-ud-Din. Eleven of the accused's party were placed on their trial more than a year ago, and were convicted in the Sessions Court. On appeal to this Court, their conviction under section 302, read with section 149, Indian Penal Code, was set aside and they were all sentenced to undergo three years' rigorous imprisonment under section 148, Indian Penal Code.

MOFEZUDDI V. EMPEROR.

The objections taken to the learned Judge's charge in the present case on behalf of the appellants are as follows: It is said, in the first place, that the learned Judge was wrong in omitting to tell the Jury the offences of which the first batch of accused had been convicted. What he said was this: "In considering the case against our two accused, I must ask you to put out of your minds the fact that eleven men have already been convicted for their part in the affair and you should take this case entirely on its own merits on consideration of the evidence which has been produced before you." I think that as a proper direction. If the Judge had gone further and told the Jury the offences of which the first batch of accused had been convicted and the sentences that had been passed upon them, I fancy objection might very likely have been taken. His duty at that moment was to warn the Jury that the present accused must have a perfectly fair trial and that the Jury were not to be biassed by the result arrived at in the previous trial.

Secondly, it is said—and this is the principal objection—that the Judge has treated the evidence of Jabanulla wrongly. He referred to the evidence of this man three times, and, on each occasion, he said that Jabanulla over-heard some members of the accused's party proposing to kill Nehal-ud-Din. The common object stated in the charge was "to beat Nehal-ud-Din," and our attention is drawn to the fact that, in his examination-in-chief, Jabanulla used the word "beat" while, in cross-examination, he used the word "kill." The Bengali word which the witness actually employed is not given by the learned Judge. It appears to me that, in addressing the Jury, the Judge ought to have told them that Jabanulla did not say "kill" each time; or that he used a word which is capable of a more innocent meaning. I think it is quite possible that this error misled the Jury in finding that the intention of the party was to kill Nehal-ud-Din. Supposing, however, that the Judge had reminded the Jury that the witness used the word "beat" on one occasion, the Jury would, I infer, have come to the conclusion that the common object of the party was to cause grievous hurt to Nehal-ud-Din.

The third objection is this: It is said that Mofezuddi did not himself inflict any injury on Nehal-ud-Din and that, therefore, in finding him guilty under section 302, read with section 149, Indian Penal Code, there has been a double use of the principle of construction. It is said that those who caused the death of Nehal-ud-Din are guilty by construction and, therefore, in applying section 149, there is a second use of the principle. Our attention has been drawn to certain remarks in the case of the Empress v. Jhubboon Mahton (1). To my mind, the question in this case is perfectly simple. All the particular individuals who struck Nehal may all inter se be equally guilty by virtue of section 34, Indian Penal Code. But the commission of a murder is an act which is quite independent of section 34, and if a murder is committed by any member or members of an unlawful assembly in prosecution of its common object, all the members become guilty by virtue of section 149. On that ground, therefore, I think it is quite wrong to say that there has been a double use of the principle of constructive guilt.

Lastly, it has been urged before us that there ought to be uniformity in the convictions and punishments. With that general principle, of course, I agree. But it is impossible to apply this principle in all cases where there are two trials—one original and the other supplementary—one batch of prisoners being tried by one Judge and one Jury and the other batch by a different Judge and different Jury.

These are the objections which have been raised against the charge of the learned Judge in the present case. The only one to which I think effect should be given is the second, and, taking the view I do that the learned Judge was in error in repeating three times that Jabanulla talked of a conspiracy to kill Nehal-ud-Din, I think the conviction under section 302, read with section 149, Indian Penal Code, and similarly the conviction under section 302, read with section 34, must be set aside. On the facts, however, I have no doubt that the Jury would have arrived but for such misdirections at the finding that the accused committed an offence under section 326, read with section 149, Indian Penal Code. I, therefore, find both the appellants guilty under section 326, read with section 149, and direct that they do undergo rigorous imprisonment for seven years each. The convictions under sections 148, 323 and 324, Indian Penal Code, with the sentences passed under those sections will stand—the sentences to run concurrently.

Suhrawardy, J.—I agree.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 225 B—Arrest on civil warrant—Rescue from custody—Surrender next day—Offence, if complete

Where a person is arrested on a civil warrant and while in the custody of the peon, he is rescued by a number of friends, though without offering any resistance himself and disappears until he surrenders himself the next day, he is guilty of an offence under section 225 B. of the Penal Code, as he took advantage of his release from custody and got out of the way of the peon.

Revision of the order of the Western Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Rangoon, directing the applicant to pay a fine of Rs. 20, or to suffer six days' rigorous imprisonment.

Mr. Auzam, for the Applicant.

Public Prosecutor, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—I accept the findings of the learned Magistrate. They are as follows:—

A warrant was issued for the arrest of the applicant. The process-server, after showing the warrant seized him by the arm, when a number of men interfered by assaulting the peon with the result that the applicant was released. There is nothing to show, or to suggest, that the applicant struggled or made any resistance himself. A large crowd collected, and the applicant was not seen again until he surrendered himself on the following morning. In spite of the evidence of the process-server, it cannot safely be held that the applicant ran away.

The question for consideration is whether the applicant escaped from the custody of the process-server. He has been convicted of that offence under section 225B, Indian Penal Code.

The essential facts found are that the applicant was in the lawful custody of the process-server when he got released, and that thereafter he was not seen again until he surrendered himself.

It has been argued that it was due to no fault of his that he was released, and that he had no intention to escape from the custody of the process-server, because he surrendered himself on the following morning. In my judgment it is immaterial whether he surrendered himself or not as alleged. It is clear that he was rescued by a number of his friends from the lawful custody of the process-server, and that he took advantage of this and disappeared, and thus got out of the way of the process-server. I think it must be held that the applicant escaped within the meaning of the section under which he was convicted.

In Queen-Empress v. Muppan (1) the respondent was convicted under section 224, Indian Penal Code, for escaping from the lawful custody of a Police Constable. Having been legally arrested, he was subsequently left unguarded; and escaped. He was then re-arrested and tried and convicted under that section. The law was stated in the following terms:—

“A man legally arrested for an offence must submit to be tried and dealt with

(1) 18 M. 401; 1 Weir 203; 6 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 625.

EUSAF ALI AHMAD v. EMPEROR.

according to law. If he gains his liberty before he is delivered by due course of law, he commits the offence of 'escape.' It has been long established that, even when the escape is effected by the consent or the neglect of the person that kept the prisoner in custody, the latter is no less guilty, as neither such illegal consent nor neglect absolves the prisoner from the duty of submitting to the judgment of the law (1 Russ, 5th Edition, page 567; Roscoe, 11th Edition, page 453; and Bishop's Criminal Law, 7th Edition, section 1104)."

In Public Prosecutor v. Ramaswami Konan (2), a case where a prisoner escaped after he was arrested owing to the neglect or consent of the person who had him in custody, the learned Judges approved of the law stated in Muppan's case (1), and they observed that the fact that the person who had the custody of the accused went to sleep did not, in any way, put an end to the custody, or affect the accused's duty to submit to the judgment of the law.

These two cases were followed by a Bench of the Madras High Court in the Public Prosecutor v. Sennimalai Goundan (3), and they pointed out that the ground of distinction made by Krishnawsami Iyer, J., Public Prosecutor, In re, (4) was not sound. In the latter case the learned Judge refused to follow those two cases, on the ground that they had no application to a case of arrest in execution of a civil process. They also observed that under the terms of the warrant before them the process-server was only authorised to release the judgment-debtor on actual receipt of the decretal amount.

I agree with the learned Judges. Whether the warrant is issued by a Magistrate or other officer empowered to do so, or by a Judge of a Civil Court, the requisition is the same, viz., that the person named in the warrant is to appear before an authority empowered to enquire into a case made against him.

The case before me is stronger than any of the cases above cited. The applicant took advantage of his release from

In a proceeding under section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code as regards a dispute concerning land, a Magistrate acts in excess of his jurisdiction if he deals with a larger area of land in his order than what is included in the proceeding, and his order is liable to be set aside.

JUDGMENT.—The only point urged in support of this application is, that the Magistrate has dealt with a larger area of land than is included in the proceedings drawn up in the case, and has, therefore, exceeded his jurisdiction: as was held in Amriteshwari Debi v. Darpa Narain Das (1). The proceedings were drawn in respect of 5 bighas 10 kothas and 18 dhurs. The Magistrate deals with 7 bighas of land settled by Karnoul Factory with certain persons. He then proceeds to deal with the land of each of these persons. He says that the first party does not claim the lands of Khobhari and Dukhni (1 bigha 10 cottas in each case) and he confirms these persons in their possession. He then says that the second party do not contest the possession of first party of 1 bigha of Dhan's land. This reduces the area in dispute to 3 bighas and he deals with these three bighas and confirms the first party in possession. It is, therefore, clear that he has passed orders about the possession of at least 6 bighas. It is said on behalf of the opposite party that there was no dispute about the lands of Khobhari and Dukhni and the real dispute was only about 4 bighas and, therefore, the Magistrate has not gone beyond the land dealt with in the proceedings. But he has in fact passed orders about 6 bighas, and it is impossible to be sure with regard to any of the really contested area whether that was included within the proceedings or not.

The whole order is, therefore, bad and must be set aside.

Bombay Public Conveyances Act (VII of 1920), s. 2—Public conveyance—“Plying for hire,” meaning of—Conveyance kept for letting out on hire, whether public conveyance.

The essential idea of a conveyance being used for the purpose of plying for hire is, that it should be available at some public place, or on some regular route for any one who wishes to travel by it. A conveyance, therefore, which is kept for letting out on hire to particular persons, does not become by such user a public conveyance within the meaning of section 2 of the Bombay Public Conveyances Act.

Criminal Reference made by the Sessions Judge, Poona, to reverse the conviction and sentence passed by the Cantonment Magistrate, First Class, Poona.

Mr. S. S. Patkar, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.

Macleod, C. J.—This is a reference under section 438 of the Code of Criminal Procedure by the Sessions Judge of Poona in the matter of the conviction of one of Nasarvanji Bomanji by the Cantonment Magistrate of Poona under section 22 of Bombay Act VII of 1920.

The offence charged was that the accused has let his tonga for hire without a license. It would appear from the judgment that the only evidence against the accused was that a Lieut. Flitcroft was found driving in a tonga belonging to the accused and that he stated that he had hired it several times before. The accused said that he had three conveyances which he hired out to such persons as he wished, but contended that they did not become by reason of such user public conveyances. The learned Magistrate had no doubt that the tonga was a public conveyance and required a license, but he ignored entirely the definition of a public conveyance in section 2 of the Act and based his opinion on grounds which can only be considered irrelevant.

Under the Act a public conveyance is a vehicle which is used for the purpose of plying for hire for the conveyance of passengers and goods.

The word ‘ply’ has many meanings. From the Oxford Dictionary I find that the word can be used of a vessel or its master as meaning to go more or less regularly to and fro between certain places, and in the same sense it is used of a land-carriage. It is also used of a boatman, porter, hackman, to mean to wait or attend regularly, to have one’s stand at a certain place for hire or custom. Although it may be said that a ship, a boat or a conveyance plies between two named ports or places, it seems that the expression “ply for hire” is more correctly used only with reference to the act of the individual who controls the ship, boat or conveyance. However that may be, the essential idea of a conveyance being used for the purpose of plying for hire is that it should be available at some public place or on some regular route for any one who wishes to hire it or travel by it. This is made clear by section 26 (ii) which says that the driver of a public conveyance cannot refuse without reasonable cause to carry any person desiring to hire the conveyance. There seems to be a very distinct difference between "letting for hire" and "plying for hire." If A keeps motors at Poona in order to let them out to clients who wish to go to Mahabaleshwar, the motors would not become on that account public conveyances; it would be otherwise if A kept a motor-bus which plied regularly between Poona and Mahabaleshwar. If it is considered desirable that conveyances which are kept for letting out on hire should be licensed, then the Act must be amended. In my opinion, the Sessions Judge was right, the conviction must be quashed and the fine, if paid, refunded.

Mr. S. K. Mitra, for the Petitioners.

JUDGMENT—This is an application against an order of the Sub-Deputy Magistrate of Chatra, affirmed on appeal, on the petitioners to pay Rs. 40 to the opposite party as compensation under section 22 of Act I of 1871. The first ground taken is that the petitioners were not examined under section 342 at the trial and, consequently, the proceedings were vitiated. This ground is, in my opinion, a good ground and the order, consequently, cannot stand. It is further urged that no compensation was claimed in the petition of complaint and that no allegation was made as to the loss caused by the seizure of the cattle. For this reason also the Magistrate was not justified in awarding compensation which was not prayed for. The third ground that the person under whose orders the cattle were seized is not liable to compensate the complainant is, in my opinion, not a good ground. He is equally one of the persons who seized the cattle with those who directly seized them under his orders. But on the first two grounds the application must succeed. The order for compensation is set aside. The fine, if paid, will be refunded.

Rule against the order of the Deputy Commissioner, Sylhet.

Babu Pronath Dutt, for Babu Hemendra Kumar Das, for the Petitioners.—The only ground upon which I obtained the Rule is that the judgment of the learned Additional District Magistrate is not in accordance with the law. He merely writes:—I agree substantially with the judgment of the lower Court. The provisions regarding the contents of a judgment are contained in section 367, Criminal Procedure Code, a reference to which will convince your Lordships of the absolute justice of my ground. The judgment does not contain the points for determination, the reasons for the decision at which the learned Magistrate has arrived and these are fatal defects.

Babu Lalit Mohun Sanyal, for the Crown, submitted that it is not obligatory upon the Magistrate to set out all the facts and circumstances and record all his reasons in detail. He might have as well dealt with the appeal in a summary way. The First Court's judgment is sufficient to understand what the learned Appeal Court meant by saying—"I substantially agree with the judgment of the lower Court."

Mr. Dutt was not called to reply.

JUDGMENT.—This Rule was issued upon the Deputy Commissioner of Sylhet calling upon him to show cause why the judgment of the Additional District Magistrate on appeal should not be set aside, and an order passed directing that the appeal be re-heard. The learned Magistrate might have dismissed the appeal summarily. Had he done so, it might have been impossible to criticise his action. He did not, however, dismiss it summarily. He gave a hearing to the Pleaders of the parties and wrote a judgment and all he said was that he was satisfied that the judgment of the Trial Court was substantially right. Such a judgment is not in accordance with the provisions contained in section 367, Criminal Procedure Code, and, on looking at the contents of the First Court's judgment, I think it is most inadequate. The result is, that the Rule is made absolute, the judgment of the lower Appellate Court is set aside and the case is remitted to that Court to be heard afresh and disposed of in accordance with law.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 323, 325—Alteration of conviction by Appellate Court—Prejudice to accused.

The petitioners and one K were convicted by the Trial Court under section 325, Indian Penal Code, for having broken the knee-cap of the complainant. The Appellate Court found that, so far as the injury to the knee-cap was concerned, that had been caused by the accused K and it came to the conclusion that the petitioners had been guilty of the offence under section 323, Indian Penal Code, inasmuch as they had inflicted other injuries on the complainant:

Held, that the alteration of the conviction of the petitioners from section 325 to section 323 by the Appellate Court was unauthorised, inasmuch as they had not been given any opportunity of answering the charge in the first instance of inflicting injuries other than the injury to the knee-cap. [p. 72, col. 1.]

Babu Manmatha Nath Mukerjee (with him Babu Ramani Mohun Chatterji), for the Petitioners.—My ground before your Lordships is that the accused for whom I appear have had not a proper trial, inasmuch as they were not required to meet the charge of inflicting any other injury or injuries on the complainant than the one inflicted on the knee-cap. So the learned Sessions Judge should not have altered the conviction from section 325, Indian Penal Code, to section 323, Indian Penal Code, without giving my clients an opportunity of answering the charge under section 323, Indian Penal Code. Under these circumstances, the conviction is bad in law and cannot be sustained.

MARMADUKE PICKTHALL, In re.

Babu Atulya Charan Bose, for the Opposite Party, was not heard.

JUDGMENT.—In this case four persons named Patal Ghose, Kanta Das, Nalini Chandra Katu alias Nolini Kalir and Gui Ram Mallik were originally convicted by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Barrackpur, under sections 458 and 325, Indian Penal Code, and sentenced under the first section to be detained till the rising of the Court and to pay a fine of Rs. 100 each in default to one month's rigorous imprisonment, and under the second section to pay a fine of Rs. 200 each and in default to two months' rigorous imprisonment. There was an appeal to the learned Second Additional Sessions Judge of the 24-Pergannas and that officer, while maintaining the conviction of Kanta Das under sections 458 and 325, altered the conviction of the petitioners Patal, Nalini and Gui Ram into one under section 323 from section 325 and reduced the fine on these three petitioners to a fine of Rs. 100 each and in default to two months' rigorous imprisonment.

The learned Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Barrackpur found that the four persons, whose names have been set out above, had been guilty under section 325 of the offence of grievous hurt, inasmuch as they had broken the knee-cap of the complainant. The learned Additional Judge by his judgment found that, so far as the injury to the knee-cap was concerned, that had been caused by the accused, Kanta Das, and he came to the conclusion that the petitioners before us had been guilty of the offence under section 323, inasmuch as they had inflicted other injuries on the complainant.

Mr. Mukherjee, who appears for the petitioners, has pointed out that the petitioners before us were not originally tried before the learned Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Barrackpur for any offence relating to the infliction of injuries other than the injury to the knee-cap and that, therefore, the alteration of the conviction from section 325 to section 323 by the learned Additional Sessions Judge of 24-Pergannas was unauthorised, inasmuch as these three petitioners had not been given any opportunity of answering the charge in the first instance of inflicting injuries other than the injury to the knee-cap. We think that this contention must prevail and accordingly we set aside the conviction and sentence passed upon the three petitioners under section 323.

The result, therefore, is that while the conviction and sentence under section 323 as regards the three petitioners before us is set aside, their conviction under section 458, Indian Penal Code, which was maintained by the Second Additional Sessions Judge remains unaffected.

Contempt of Court—Newspaper article—Apology.

Accused, being the Editor, Printer and Publisher of a newspaper, published an article in his paper which was a gross libel on the Judges of the High Court. A few days afterwards he published an apology for the offensive expressions contained in the article. In a proceeding calling on him to show cause why he should not be committed for contempt of Court:

Held, that the apology could not be accepted, as, while it might be to some extent a reparation, it could not overtake and counteract the mischief already done by the original publication. [p. 75, col. 2.]

Mr. Kanga, (Advocate-General with him Mr. S. S. Patkar, Government Pleader), for the Crown.

Mr. Thakor, instructed by Messrs. Malvi, Mody, Ranchhoddas & Co., for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

Macleod, C. J.—On November 13, 1922, a Rule was issued at the instance of the Government of Bombay against the respondent as Editor, Printer and Publisher of The Bombay Chronicle to show cause why he should not be committed for contempt of Court in respect of the publication of an article headed 'E1 Passant' containing the paragraph "Long live our Judges" in the Sunday issue of the paper of October 8th, 1922.

The respondent published an apology in the issue of the paper of October 11th, characterizing the paragraph as highly objectionable and apologizing to the Chief Justice and Judges of the High Court for the offensive expressions it contained and for the appearance of such a paragraph in his paper as the result of defective supervision due to illness. A copy of the paper containing the apology was sent to the Prothonotary for the information of the Chief Justice and Judges and came before us in due course. In his affidavit filed in showing cause against the Rule, the respondent said he knew of the publication of the article in the paper after it was printed therein. On Saturday, October 7, he was in his office till about 8 p. m. until when the proofs of the article were not received by him for perusal. He left office for dinner and in the ordinary course he could have returned to office about 10 p. m. As he felt tired and exhausted he did not go back to office. He had had a serious illness. The suggestion in the affidavit that if we had seen the apology we would not have granted the Rule was singularly ill-advised, as a copy of the apology was annexed to the petition of the Government Pleader. The offensive and objectionable nature of the allegations against the Judges in the paragraph referred to in the petition having been admitted, the only question which remains is what order should be made on the Rule. We demur entirely to the veiled suggestion in the respondent's affidavit that the publication of an apology must necessarily be sufficient satisfaction for the contempt committed. In this case, at any rate, it was necessary that the respondent should be called upon to appear before us. Then it was unfortunate for the respondent that this was the fifth occasion during the last three and a half years on which we have had to complain of matter published in The Bombay Chronicle. On the first two occasions we were satisfied with apologies without ordering the then Editor to appear before us in Court.

On June 9th 1922 a Rule was issued against the present respondent with regard to an article headed. "The Malegaon Appeals." And on June 10th, another Rule was issued with regard to an article headed "British Justice." In his affidavit on the first Rule the respondent contended that he had done nothing beyond offering reasonable criticism of the judgment of the Division Bench and pointed out what the public opinion in the country expected of the High Court for whom he never intended to show disrespect. The acting Chief Justice in his judgment of September 20th, described the article in question in the following words: Marmaduke Pickthall, In re (1).

"We have considered the article and the affidavit in the light of the argument urged before us. I am prepared to concede that the article does not constitute a personal abuse of the Judges such as we find, for instance, in Reg. v. Gray (2) or Narasinha Chintaman Kelkar, In re (3), nor does the article contain such a comprehensive condemnation of Courts including this Court and British Justice as is to be found in the recent case of Satyabodha Ramchandra, In re (4). Taking the article as a whole, and making due allowance for the style, the view point and the possible political bias of a journalist, I find it difficult to avoid the conclusion that the article does attribute improper motives and political bias to the Judges in upholding the several convictions... The article as a whole would leave on the mind of an ordinary reader the clear impression that injustice had been deliberately done on political grounds to some of the accused who were apparently innocent. In other words, it attributes judicial dishonesty to the Judges."

The Court then imposed a fine of Rs. 200 without costs.

In his affidavit on the second Rule the respondent said he knew of the publication in the Chronicle of the article complained of after it was printed therein. It was impossible for him as Editor of the paper personally to supervise everything that went into the paper every day. If he had seen the article in question he would not have passed it for publication. It was published through a mistake of the Assistant Editor and he was sorry for the publication. Neither he, nor the Assistant Editor meant any disrespect to the Court. When the Rule came on for hearing the Court considered that the statements in the affidavit afforded under the circumstances a reasonable explanation of the manner in which the extract came to be published without his knowledge and discharged the Rule.

It cannot be suggested for a moment that the Court has not treated the Editor of the Chronicle with the very greatest leniency, which appears to me, I much regret to say, to have been entirely misunderstood. The respondent charged with commenting on pending proceedings says: "you cannot expect me to supervise everything that goes into the paper" and he is discharged. The respondent accuses the Judges of judicial dishonesty and he is fined Rs. 200 without costs. The paragraph now before us evidently refers to these two proceedings for contempt, for it begins, "Speaking of contempt of Court," though there was no previous reference to the subject. The object of the writer was to convey to his readers the idea that the Judges were the creatures of the Executive. This is not a criticism on a pronouncement of the Judges in a particular case, it is a sweeping assertion of the vilest character against all the Judges in India. Entirely accepting the respondent's statement that the article in question was very far from being in accordance with his policy or views, with the remark that he could hardly have said less and might well have expressed himself more directly, still the responsibility for the publication of the objectionable matter must rest with him. The same excuse which secured his discharge in September will hardly avail him again. He had had his warning that it was eminently necessary either that he should revise the paper himself before it went to press, or that he should have some responsible person on his staff whose duty it was to put before the Editor any objectionable matter. If the impression is abroad that the grossest libels on the Judges can be published with impunity provided an apology is offered, then it is time that such an impression should be removed. An ignorant public is far more likely to believe the imputation and discard the apology.

As was said by Crump, J., on the last Rule against the respondent:

"It is impossible to permit the public to be poisoned with such calumnies as these. In a country such as this where more importance is attached to the printed word than it perhaps at times deserves, it would be difficult for the average reader to read the language used without conceiving grave doubts as to the integrity and impartiality of the Judges of the Court. Therefore, in the interests of the administration of Justice the Court cannot overlook this contempt."

The imposition of a nominal fine has been found to be useless. The ink was hardly dry on that judgment before the offence was repeated. If an individual had been libelled, a substantial sum would have been awarded for damages on the principle that a newspaper should not be tempted to increase its profits by encroaching on private rights. We are now acting in defence of public rights. The respondent must pay a fine of Rs. 5,000 and the costs of the Rule. We allow a week for the payment of the fine.

Crump, J.—So far as principles go, I have nothing to add to what I have said in my judgment of September 20th, 1922. The article now in question is plainly a contempt, and in view of the past record of this paper I agree that the time for leniency is gone. In the last case we dealt leniently with the offence because it was apparent to us that the true limitations on criticism of this nature were imperfectly understood, and we hoped that the result of our order would be that such criticism would be confined within its proper limits. The result has not been achieved. The apology in the present case cannot be accepted. It is not the first instance of careless supervision, and an apology does not remedy the evil caused by publication of the objectionable matter. If, as I have already pointed out, we act in the interest of the administration of justice it is clear that while an apology may be to some extent a reparation on the part of the offender, it cannot overtake and counteract the mischief already done by the original publication. Where the publication is due to a repetition of negligence which has been condoned in the past, an apology becomes little more than an idle form. I agree in the order proposed.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 211—False charge of offence, what amounts to.

The failure of a complainant to prove his case is not the same thing as the institution of a maliciously false case, so as to sustain a charge of an offence under section 211 of the Penal Code.

Appeal from the decision of the Sub-Deputy Magistrate, Bhabhua, District Shahabad.

Mr. S. P. Varma, for the Petitioner.

The Assistant Government Advocate, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—The petitioner laid a complaint before the Magistrate under section 379, Indian Penal Code. The Sub-Divisional Officer directed the Sub-Inspector to enquire and report. In his explanation, the Sub-Deputy Magistrate states that the case being a cognizable one was sent to the Police for investigation. What this means is not quite clear.

The Police, it appears, reported that the case was not true and then the Sub-Divisional Magistrate issued a notice on the complainant to show cause why he should not be prosecuted under section 182, Indian Penal Code. It seems from the explanation of the Sub-Deputy Magistrate that the complainant came forward and undertook to prove his case, but this is not shown in the order sheet. However, on the 24th of October 1922 the Sub-Divisional Magistrate transferred the case to the Sub-Deputy Magistrate for disposal, and thereafter on the same day the Sub-Deputy Magistrate examined the complainant and four of his witnesses and on the 27th October cross-examined the witnesses and examined the witnesses for the other side. It appears that these witnesses were produced by the Court Sub-Inspector. Thereafter on the 14th November the Sub-Deputy Magistrate drew up an order in which he found that the complainant and his witnesses had failed to prove the complainant's case and that they were not to be relied on. He found the case was false and dismissed the complaint under section 203, Criminal Procedure Code. He found that the petitioner filed a complaint against Ramsaroop Singh and Janki Singh, accusing them of theft with intent to cause injury and thereupon ordered that proceedings under section 476, Criminal Procedure Code, should be drawn up against the petitioner for prosecution under section 211, Indian Penal Code. When the Sub-Divisional Magistrate proceeded on the Police report stating the Police report to be false it was open to him to dismiss the case on the ground that it was false and then issue notice on the complainant to show cause why he should not be prosecuted. The learned Sub-Divisional Officer, however, did not dismiss the complaint but apparently gave the complainant a chance of showing that the report of the Police was untrue and that his case was a true one. But even so, the procedure before the Sub-Deputy Magistrate appears to be wrong. He has practically held a trial allowing the cross-examination of the prosecution witnesses and calling of the defence witnesses. This is not the regular procedure. The question before the Trying Magistrate was whether prima facie the complainant has made out a true case which would justify the summoning of the accused. What happened really was a trial of the complainant's case in the absence of the accused, though witnesses for the accused were called. Now, furthermore, from the order of the Sub-Deputy Magistrate and the reasons that he has given in his order it is not clear to me that his enquiry showed the case to be maliciously false. It is true that the complainant failed to prove his case, but failure to prove a case is not the same thing as the institution of a maliciously false case.

Considering the procedure followed and in view of the above reasons, I do not think that any further proceedings should be Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 133, 137, 140 (2)—Order for removal of nuisance—Application for enforcement made to successor of Magistrate—Jurisdiction to go behind order.

In dealing with an application to enforce an order under section 137 of the Criminal Procedure Code, made by his predecessor, a Magistrate acts in excess of his powers and without jurisdiction in going behind that order, and coming to a decision as to its legality.

Criminal Revision.

Babu Narendra Kumar Das, for the Opposite Parties Nos. 4, 7, 10, 11 and 13.

Babus Chandra Sekhar Sen and Paresh Chandra Sen, for the Opposite Party No. 1.

JUDGMENT.—This Rule is directed against an order of the Additional Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Chittagong refusing to enforce an order passed by his predecessor under section 137, Criminal Procedure Code. On the 29th October 1920 the then Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Chittagong made an order absolute directing the opposite party in this Rule to remove the nuisance from a tank either by re-excavating or by filling it up or by cleaning the water-weeds and giving other directions. This order was not obeyed. It is not necessary to set out all the events that happened, but on the 14th July 1922 the petitioner who has obtained this Rule, applied to the present Sub-Divisional Officer to enforce the order,

That application was refused on the ground that the order passed under section 137, Criminal Procedure Code, was an illegal order. We hold that the Magistrate was not justified in going behind the order of his predecessor and coming to a decision as to its legality.

It is pointed out that under section 140 (2), Criminal Procedure Code, the Magistrate has discretion, but this discretion must be a judicial discretion and no Magistrate has judicial discretion to sit as a Court of Appeal and decide whether an order passed by a Magistrate of concurrent jurisdiction was a proper order or not. For these reasons we hold that the Magistrate exceeded his powers and acted without jurisdiction. We have also considered whether or not the original order passed by the First Sub-Divisional Magistrate was legal or not, and we hold that on the findings arrived at by the Magistrate he had jurisdiction to pass the order which he did pass under section 133, Criminal Procedure Code, and make it absolute under section 137, Criminal Procedure Code. The learned Sub-Divisional Magistrate who doubted the correctness of this order has referred to rulings of other High Courts. It is unnecessary to discuss these, though we do not agree that they cannot be reconciled with the decisions of this Court. The decisions in the case of Bistoo Chunder Chuckerbutty, In re (1) and in the case of Indra Nath Banerjee v. Queen-Empress (2) show that the Magistrate has power to act under section 133, Criminal Procedure Code, in a case like the present.

We accordingly make the Rule absolute and set aside the order of the Additional Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Chittagong, dated 5th September 1922, rejecting the application of the petitioner under section 140 (2), Criminal Procedure Code, and we direct that the Magistrate do pass orders on that application according to law.

CRIMINAL REVISION NO. 213 OF 1922.

Present.—Mr. Hallifax, A. J. C.

BABURAO—ACCUSED—APPLICANT

*versus*MUNICIPAL COMMITTEE, NAGPUR—NON-APPLICANT.Punishment—Daily fine, sentence of—Illegality.

The infliction of a daily fine until the accused complies with the order passed against him is illegal, as no person can be punished for a thing he has not done but may possibly do in the future or is even likely to do in future.

Revision of an order, dated the 14th July 1922, passed by the City Magistrate, Nagpur, in Criminal Case No. 26 of 1922.

Mr. W. H. Dhabe, for the Accused.

Mr. M. B. Niyogi, for the Municipal Committee.

Mr. G. P. Dick, for the Crown.

FACTS.—The Municipal Committee, Nagpur, prosecuted the applicant under section 139 of the C. P. Municipal Act No. XVI of 1903 for disobeying a written notice said to have been served upon the applicant on 19th July 1917, calling upon him to remove some portion of his building built by him contrary to sanctioned plan. He was convicted under section 139, read with section 66 (1), of the C. P. Municipal Act, and sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 5 in addition to Re. 1 per day from 14th August 1922, onwards, in case he does not remove the encroachment or obtain sanction of the Municipal Committee to its continuance.

ORDER.—I do not feel called upon to state again the obvious reasons for holding that no person can be sentenced to punishment for a thing he has not done but may possibly do in the future or even is likely to do in the future. This particular order is not even more impossible than the orders of the same kind that I have met. The period of the daily fine usually begins on the day on which the sentence is passed and is ordered to end on the occurrence of some uncertain future event. In this case even the beginning of the infliction of the fine is uncertain. It is to begin on a future date subject to the occurrence of one of two events, and presumably to end also on the occurrence of one or other of them. That portion of the sentence in which it is ordered that a daily fine of one rupee shall be paid is set aside.

2. With the conviction itself I see no cause whatever for interference. There is no question of notice nor of the validity of any bye-law. On 22nd February 1916 the accused was given permission to build a house according to a certain plan, the permission being subject, under section 66 (1) of the Municipalities Act, to the written direction that he should have a free passage way in front of the building of six feet in width. He left the free passage of four feet only and thereby intentionally and indeed contumaciously failed to comply with the condition subject to which the permission had been given to him, that is: an offence punishable under section 139 of the Act.

3. A certain bye-law has been mentioned by the learned Pleader for the applicant, by which, as I understand it, the Municipal Committee binds itself, perhaps unnecessarily, to impose a minimum width of free passage in front of any building in respect of which it gives sanction under section 66 (1) of the Municipalities Act. We are in no way concerned with that. I am informed that this minimum was reduced from six feet to four feet shortly after or even before this prosecution was instituted. That may indicate that it was scarcely worth while prosecuting the applicant, though it makes by no means certain, and it is to be presumed that the Municipality considered this matter. Even if it is so, the applicant is still technically guilty, and in the circumstances a fine of five rupees may well be called only a technical punishment.

4. Reference was also made to the section 66 (1) which enacts that the Committee shall make full compensation to the owner for any loss he may sustain in consequence of the Committee requiring any land belonging to him to be added to the street. If this land has been added to the street I have no doubt the Committee is willing or could easily be compelled to make full compensation to the applicant, but I may remark that his own action has probably reduced the compensation he will get for the four feet street to something below two-thirds of what he would have got for the six-foot street. The order that the applicant shall pay a daily fine is set aside. The conviction and the sentence of fine of five rupees will stand.

JUDGMENT.—This Rule is directed against an order of the District Judge of Faridpur remanding the case to the lower Court for reconsideration of an application for sanction to prosecute. The order of the District Judge is passed on an application under section 195 (b), Criminal Procedure Code. As has been pointed out in the case of Budhu Lal v. Chattu Gope (1), the Judge acting under that section has no jurisdiction to remand a case to the subordinate Court for further enquiry. He must himself decide whether the sanction which was refused by the Munsif should be granted, and he has power for this purpose to take evidence himself; but he has no power to remand the case for further enquiry by the Munsif. The Rule is also directed against the order of the District Judge assessing costs in this matter. The learned Vakil for the opposite party does not contest this portion of the Rule.

The result is, that the Rule is made absolute. The order of the District Judge, dated the 23rd August 1922, remanding the case to the Munsif, is set aside and also his order of the 25th August assessing the costs of the application before him is set aside. The District Judge will now proceed to determine the application under section 195 (b) according to law.

EMPEROR V. SHEO RAM.

ORDER.

Dalal, A. J. C.—This matter has been heard by a Bench on a certificate by one of us under section 8 of the Oudh Courts Act. (XIV of 1891). Sheo Ram and two others were convicted by an Honorary Magistrate of Rae Bareilly of an offence under section 323, Indian Penal Code. The complainant was a servant of a zemindar and was struck with a lathi by one of the accused persons and kicked and cuffed by the others in an open public place in the village because of the accused's displeasure against the zemindar. The Honorary Magistrate after a consideration of the facts of the case came to the conclusion that the accused should be bound over under section 106 of the Code of Criminal Procedure and, as he was not empowered to do so, referred the case to the Sub-Divisional Magistrate under section 349 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The Stipendiary Magistrate fined each of the accused Rs. 5 and ordered him to execute a bond for Rs. 50 to keep the peace for three months. The convicted persons applied in revision to the learned Sessions Judge who was of opinion that neither in law nor on facts was the order under section 106 justified. He consequently submitted the record to this Court with a recommendation that the order under section 106 may be set aside.

The learned Counsel on behalf of the applicants relied on the following cases: Dubri v. Emperor (1), Maulvi Magbuhl Ahmad v. King-Emperor (2), Muthiah Chetti v. Emperor (3), Baidya Nath Majumdar v. Nibaran Chunder Gope (4) and Abdul Ali v. Emperor (5). Dubri's case (1) is distinguishable from the present case. In this case the complainant was attacked in a public place and the offence of the accused will, therefore, involve a breach of the peace. In the other Oudh case a learned Judge of this Court refused to apply the provision of section 106 to a conviction under section 504, Indian Penal Code. There is, however, a ruling by a Bench of the Bombay High Court in Syed Yacoob v. Emperor (6) where the Bench held an order requiring security after a conviction under section 504, Indian Penal Code, to be lawful, inasmuch as a breach of the peace or a probability of a breach of the peace was an ingredient of that offence. In discussing the words "other offences involving a breach of the peace" Heaton, J. observed: "To my thinking the words cover at any rate two classes of cases. The first class of cases is where there has actually been a breach of the peace. The other class is where the definition of the offence involves a breach of the peace." In the case of Tarini Charn Mundle v. Gourikant Biswas (7) a Bench of the Calcutta High Court sustained an order under section 106 against a person who was convicted of house trespass with the object of causing hurt.

Lastly, may be mentioned the opinion of Sir George Knox in Emperor v. Manik Rai (8), that an offence involving a breach of the peace mentioned in section 106 means an offence which necessarily involves a breach of the peace or of which a breach of peace forms an ingredient. He went so far as to include such an offence as in common knowledge is ordinarily or very probably the occasion of a breach of the peace, as, for example, the removal of a land mark, but it is not necessary for me to go so far for the purposes of the present case.

I am of opinion that the offence committed by the applicants was one which involved a breach of the peace. The learned Judge designates the offence of the applicants a trivial one and desires that the order for security should be cancelled on the merits of the case. Both the Honorary Magistrate, acquainted with local conditions and the Deputy Magistrate in charge of the Sub-Division have considered a security order to be necessary, and I shall be very slow to interfere in such a matter with the discretion of the Trial Courts.

For these reasons, I would not accept the reference.

Simpson, A. J. C.—I agree.

*Hindu Law—Joint family property—Alienation by one co-parcener—Partition—Allotment of alien-

Under the Hindu law, a purchaser from one member of a joint family of property which belongs to the family can enforce the sale only by a partition of the entire family property, and if in such partition the property sold can, with due regard to the interests of the other sharers, to the debts due by the family, and to the equitable allocation of the various items of family property to the shares of the several co-parceners, be wholly allotted to the vendor's share the purchaser will be entitled to the whole property which the vendor professed to convey to him. [p. 82, col. 2; p. 83, col. 1.]

This right of the alienee does not depend on whether a suit was first brought by him for a partition of the whole joint property or by the other co-parceners against him for a partition of a part. [p. 83, col. 1.]

Even in a suit brought by the son for his share of the alienated property, it would be open to the Court on the application of the alienee to decree a general partition in which this principle of equity would be applied. [p. 83, col. 2.]

The principle applies not only to a case where the alienor purports to sell the property as his own but also where he sells it on behalf of himself and on behalf of the other co-parceners. [p. 83, col. 2.]

The mere fact that the alienee knew or must have known that the alienation was not for necessities does not affect his right in equity. [p. 83, col. 2.]

Mr. A. Krishnaswami Iyer for the Appellant.—The only point in the case is, whether the District Judge was right in refusing to allot the alienated property to the alienor co-parcener whether a co-parcener has an absolute and an indefeasible right to his share of the alienated properties so as to defeat the equitable right of the alienee. The claim of the alienee is clearly an equitable claim. A purchaser for value has an equity to have such portion or so much thereof as is practicable, so allotted, if that can be done without prejudice to the interests of the other co-sharers. See Aiyyagari Venkataramayya v. Aiyyagari Ramayya (1) and also Nanjaya Mudali v. Shanmuga Madali (2). In this case there is no suggestion that such an allotment would be prejudicial to the interests of the non-alienating co-parceners. The decision of the Privy Council in Ramkishore Kedarnath v. Jainarayan Ramrupal (3) shows that an alienee is entitled to insist that he stands in the shoes of the alienating co-parcener as to the share he would come to on partition and that the Court may insist on the other co-parcener assenting to a partition so as to give effect to the rights of the alienee claiming through his alienor.

Mr. T. R. Venkatarama Sastry, for the Respondent.—It, has been settled in a series of decisions that it is open to a member of a family to bring a suit against the purchaser of part of the family property for the recovery of his share in the part alienated without claiming a division of the entirety of the family property. Ibaramsa Rowthan v.

DAVUD BEEVI AMMAL, v. RAMAKRISHNA AIYAR.

Thirumalai Muthuvegra Thir. venkalasami Naick (4).

That right of the non-alienating co-parcener cannot be defeated by a suit by an alienee for general partition nor could the co-parcener be driven by the purchaser from another share to institute a suit for general partition. The equity of the alienee, who purchases the properties from a limited owner like the manager of a joint Hindu family, cannot override or subordinate the rights of a member of a joint family. The alienee's claims are merely claims in equity. He purchased with knowledge of the invalidity of the alienation and cannot claim rights as if the alienation was perfectly good and valid. This principle of equity cannot be applicable to a case where a manager purports to sell for himself and other co-parceners. The representation in the latter case is specific and express, and the alienee who purchases on these terms cannot claim higher rights.

If in the separate suit for partition at the insistence of the other member, the other items had been partitioned, there would have been no means of the alienee working out his rights which are and must be subordinated to the paramount rights of members of joint families to a share in the family property.

JUDGMENT.

Schwabe, C. J.—By a deed of absolute sale one Ramachandra Iyer sold certain lands to the 3rd defendant purporting to act for himself and as the guardian, protector and father of his minor son, the second defendant.

The rights of the 3rd defendant are now vested in the plaintiff. The 1st and 2nd defendants are members of a joint Hindu family and the lands in question were their joint property. At the time of the sale the 3rd defendant obtained from the first defendant a security bond by which the 1st defendant gave him an indemnity against the loss that might arise by any claim of the minor 2nd defendant. That bond took the form of a charge to the extent of Rs. 6,000 on certain other lands which it appears also formed part of the joint family property. This suit is brought for a general partition of the joint family property, and it is prayed that on that partition the suit lands shall be allotted to the 1st defendant so that, whether he was entitled to alienate them or not, the plaintiff may get them as standing in the shoes of the 1st defendant.

The District Munsif of Nagapatam, Mr. R. V. Krishna Iyer, held that the sale was not binding on the 2nd defendant. He decreed partition and directed that all the joint properties shall be divided into two equal shares between the 1st and 2nd defendants and that in effecting such partition the lands sold to the 3rd defendant, should be allotted to the 1st defendant and adjourned the suit to appoint a Commissioner to effect the partition. Without the appointment of a Commissioner the 1st and 2nd defendants divided the property filing lists of properties which they had agreed to take in those lists allotting to the 1st defendant the properties sold to the 3rd defendant. It was not contended that this division of property would work any injustice to the 2nd defendant and indeed by the agreement between the 1st and 2nd defendants as to the division it is clear that it was admitted that this was not the case. The District Munsif in his judgment has stated quite clearly the principle to be applied. On the case coming before the Subordinate Judge, Tanjore, he reversed the decree stating that the 2nd defendant has a prima facie right to a half share in the specific properties alienated and that there was no reason for depriving him of that natural right in giving effect to the equity in favour of the 3rd defendant and he saw no paramount equity to be enforced in favour of the 3rd defendant or his vendee so as to override the natural rights of the plaintiff operating to his prejudice.

The principle of equity to be applied in such cases is well established and will be found clearly stated in the judgment of Bhashyam Iyengar, J., in his very learned judgment in Aiyagari Venkata-ramayya v. Aiyagari Ramayya (1) and in Nanjaya Mudali v. Shanmuga Mudali (2), and it is that a purchaser from one member of a joint family of property which that member has no right to sell, it being the joint property, can enforce the sale only by a partition of the entire family property, and if in such partition the property sold can, with due regard to the interests of the other sharers, to the debts due by the family and to an equitable allocation of the various items of family property to the shares of the several co-parceners, be wholly allotted to the vendor's share, the purchaser will be entitled to the whole property which the vendor professed to convey to him. In my judgment the learned District Munsif puts this case from the right point of view, and I shall content myself with saying that I have nothing to add to his excellent judgment which is a clear and well reasoned judgment, and that I do not agree with the judgment of the Subordinate Judge because I do not appreciate what natural rights of the plaintiff operating to his prejudice are overridden by the District Munsif's decree. But Mr. Venkatarama Sastry has contended that it is now established as far as Madras is concerned that, where family property has been alienated by one co-parcener, the others may without any general partition either claim the whole property from the alienee or may claim back their share of that property, such share being the proportion to which they would have been entitled on a partition of that specific property, and for this proposition we are referred to the judgment of a Full Bench of this Court in Iburaṃsa Rowthān v. Thirumalai Muthuveera Thiruvēnkataśāmi Naick (4). That case is, of course, binding on us sitting in second appeal, but I do not think that it was intended by that Court in any way to dissent from the principle of equity stated above and so well-established. Nor do I think that it was meant whether the alienee in such cases could get the property was to depend on whether a suit was first brought by him for a partition of the whole joint property or by the other co-parceners for a partition of a part. We are informed that there was pending, at the time of the hearing of this suit, another suit by the son claiming partition of the particular property and award to him of a half; so that if, by chance that suit had been heard first and the principle in Iburaṃsa Rowthān v. Thirumalai Muthuveera Thiruvēnkataśāmi Naick (4) had been applied, assuming it to be consistent with the equitable principle that would otherwise apply, the son would have got half of the property in question and the plaintiff one half, whereas by applying the equitable principle he would have got the whole of what had been sold. That there is no such conflict, I think, is clear from the decision of the Privy Council in Ram-kishore Kedarnāth v. Jainarayan Ram-rachpal (3). There the suit was brought by members of a joint Hindu family to set aside an alienation by their father to an adopted son whose adoption was alleged to be invalid. Their Lordships in sending back the case pointed out that the adopted son might be entitled to insist that he stood in the shoes of the adoptive father and be entitled in that suit to obtain a partition in which he could get the share which would come to the father so as to give effect to any rights to which the adopted son might be entitled claiming through the father. In my view, this is authority for the proposition that, if this suit had been a suit by the son for a share of the alienated property it would be open to the Court on the application of the alienee to decree a general partition in which the principle of equity should be applied.

It is further contended that this principle has no application where the alienor purports not to sell the property as his own but purports to sell it on behalf of himself and on behalf of the other co-parcener, his infant son. I am unable to appreciate this distinction, for it is clear that, if he had sold in his own name, then the principle would apply, and I do not appreciate how the fact that he purported to sell both for himself and for his infant son in any way reduces the interest purchased by the alienee.

It was further contended that the purchaser must have known from the statement of the consideration that the 1st defendant had no right to sell the property as managing member, because the consideration showed that the sale could not have been for necessities. The Subordinate Judge states that there was no necessity for the alienation so as to bind the minor's interest in the property. On an examination of the consideration, a considerable amount was paid in cash, but a large balance was secured by a hypothecation bond of some property of the purchaser. I am not satisfied that this fact must necessarily have shown to the purchaser that the sale could not be a proper alienation in the interest of the joint family; nor do I see, even if it were so, why I should deprive the purchaser of his rights against the alienor to obtain the alienor's interest by partition on the equitable principle which has been applied here.

It was also argued that the taking of the security-bond was evidence that the purchaser knew that the 1st defendant had no right to alienate, and also that its existence prevented the application of the equitable principle. It is a wise precaution when purchasing from a managing member to take security against possible claims of other co-parceners, and I do not think that any such significance is to be attached to the taking of this bond. If, however, the security, if resorted to by the purchaser, would result in the son being in a better position, it may be that the Court, in applying the equitable principle might take that into consideration. But that is not the case here, as the property given as security is also joint property; and there is no evidence, nor has it been suggested, that the son would in any way benefit by that security property being allotted to the father and given to the plaintiff.

For these reasons, this appeal must be allowed and the decree of the District Munsif must be restored so far as A schedule property is concerned. The plaintiff must have costs of the appeal in the Court of the Subordinate Judge and of this appeal.

Wallace, J.—I agree. On the important question of law raised in this appeal, I should like to say a few words.

1. The point for decision in this case is:—Can a co-parcener whose share in one item of joint family property has been wrongly alienated by another co-parcener, who nevertheless had the power of alienating it, resist the delivery by the Court of that share to a bona fide purchaser of it from the alienating co-parcener in the practical working out of the equity of that purchaser to have decreed to him, in his general partition suit brought for that purpose, the property purchased by him bona fide for value, apart from any consideration of the question whether any real unfairness or injustice would be done to the non-alienating co-parcener by granting the alienee the decree he seeks for?

2. The main and well-settled principles of law necessary for consideration here as laid down in this Presidency are: (a) that ordinarily no co-parcener can sue for partial partition of his share in any single item of joint family property, (b) that when a specific item of joint family property has been alienated by another co-parcener, a non-alienating co-parcener can sue for recovery of his share in the item alienated [See Sripati Chinna Sanyasi Razu v. Sripati Suriya Razu (5) and Subramanya Chetiyar v. Padmanabha Chettyar (6)]; or (c) where the alienee has been given possession of such specific item, the whole joint family may sue to recover possession: See Ramkishore Kedarnath v. Jainarayan Ramrichpal (3). As against these rights of co-parceners against the alienee from a co-parcener has to be set the right of such alienee to enforce by a general partition suit his right by purchase in and possession of the specific item purchased, if that can be done without prejudice to the co-parceners who were not parties to the alienation: Nanjaya Mudali v. Shanmuga Mudali (2), Aiyyagari Venkataramayya v. Aiyyagari Ramayya (1). This right will prevail against right (c) set out above, vide the Privy Council decision in Ramkishore Kedarnath v. Jainarayan Ramrichpal (3). The present question is whether it also prevails against right (b). Now, while it is not necessary for the non-alienating co-parcener to institute a suit for general partition, in order to recover his share in the item alienated by another co-parcener, while he may sue for partial partition, of his share in that item only. I do not find any authority for holding that, when he has so recovered that share, it is, as against his fellow co-parceners, his specified property or that the effect of his suit is to cause the recovered share to cease to be the joint family property, which it was before the suit. No more after the suit than before it, can the recovering co-parcener predicate that he has himself a particular share in that item of the joint family property. He has in my view merely recovered that share for the joint family, or rather prevented it passing as a specific item out of the joint family property, prevented that hitherto undivided share of his crystallising into a specific divided item, and so separating itself from the general property. His decree does not have the effect of dividing the alienated item by metes and bounds between himself and other non-alienating co-parceners. But, of course, an alienor co-parcener has lost his claim to share in that item at a general family partition. In my view the decree obtained in such a suit by a non-alienating co-parcener, while it is an exception to the general rule that no co-parcener can sue for partial partition, does not go further and form any exception to the rule that no co-parcener can, as against his co-parceners, predicate that he is entitled to hold and retain against them a particular share in any particular joint family property. By the very frame of the suit, the decree in it is a decree for partial partition as against the alienee, but not as against his co-parceners, and its object is to ascertain by partition the particular property which the purchaser may retain and to separate that from the joint family property. The decree in it will, no doubt, bind the alienee to this extent that he cannot contend that the non-alienating co-parcener's share must be available for recovery by him. It does not preclude him from claiming that in working out his equity, it may be available, though no doubt the existence of the decree may in certain cases raise a strong equity in favour of the non-alienating co-parcener retaining the share he had taken so much trouble to recover.

3. It follows then that, when an alienee from a co-parcener files his suit for general partition in order to work out the equity in his favour as purchaser, a non-alienating co-parcener who has obtained a decree for his share of that item, is not ordinarily in any superior position to retain that share against the alienee than a non-alienating co-parcener who has not obtained such a decree, and cannot without proof of specific prejudice to himself, set up against the alienee a claim to a particular share in the item alienated, since that share has fallen back into the general family property, or rather has really never left it. In working out the equities, it follows that the ordinary rule will apply, viz., that the alienee will be decreed the possession of the specific property purchased by him, if that can be done, without substantial injustice to the co-parceners, and no co-parcener has a right to insist, in the absence of proof of such injustice, on his being given on division a share in the alienated item.

4. None of the rulings quoted in support of respondents seems to me to affect this result. That in Iburamsa Rowihan v. Thirumalai Muthuveera Thiruvengkatasami Naick (4) deals with the equities between two alienees, each from a separate co-parcener, in which case it was held that equity could not insist on the second alienee suing for general partition but would permit him to sue for the partition of his share, corresponding to his alienor's share in the property conveyed to the first alienee. This was merely an extension of the principle that the alienee shall, so far as possible, be decreed what he purchased. This ruling did not consider the question what the effect of a suit by one of the alienees for general partition for the purpose of working out his equity would be, and it is certainly no authority for the proposition that such an equity cannot be enforced against a non-alienating co-parcener who has recovered by suit his share in the property alienated when no substantial injustice would be done to him.

5. So long as the alienee refrains from filing his suit for general partition, i.e., from insisting on the working out of his own equity, the claims of the non-alienating co-parceners will be enforced against him, on equitable terms. See Vadivalam Pillay v. Natasam Pillay (7). The principle, as I understand it, is that, until he so sues, his interest in the property is only vested and not separate, "a legal estate" not yet reduced into possession and which may never be reduced into possession. But when he has sued to carve out and reduce to possession that vested interest and has obtained a decree, then his equity to get for himself the specific property in which he purchased an interest will prevail, if no substantial injustice will be thereby caused to the co-parceners, and can be resisted by any co-parcener on no other ground than that it will do him a substantial injustice. I agree with the learned Chief Justice that in this case no substantial injustice has been proved to be likely to follow the allotment to the purchaser of the property purchased by him.

6. I have nothing to add on the other parts of the case and agree that the appeal must be allowed on the terms proposed by the learned Chief Justice.

Transfer of Property Act (I V of 1882), s. 109—Lease—Transfer of lessor's interest—Notice to lessee, absence of, effect of.

Section 109 of the Transfer of Property Act provides no penalty for want of notice to the lessee of the transfer of the lessor's interest except the loss of rent paid by the lessee to the original lessor. The want of notice does not absolutely debar the transferee from recovering rent from the lessee.

Petition, under section 25 of Act IX of 1887, for revision of the decree of the Munsif, First Class, and Judge, Small Cause Court, Delhi, dated the 27th of July 1922.

Mr. Shamair Chand, for the Petitioner.

JUDGMENT.—The lower Court has dismissed this suit for rent on the ground that defendant was never a tenant of plaintiff, for the reason that the transfer of the property by defendant's lessor to plaintiff was not notified to the defendant.

The Transfer of Property Act applies to this part of Delhi and section 109 provides no penalty for want of notice except the loss of rent paid by the lessee to the original lessor.

I accept the petition and direct the Court below to decide on the merits. The points for decision are: How long after the transfer did defendant occupy the house?

What rent, if any, has he paid to the plaintiff's transferor?

If a plaintiff is not successful in his suit for the specific performance of a contract for sale, he is not precluded under O. II, r. 2 of the Civil Procedure Code from bringing a suit to recover the earnest-money paid. The claim for the earnest-money is based upon a different cause of action from that of the claim for specific relief.

Sections 19 and 29 of the Specific Relief Act do not apply, where the claim is for the recovery of earnest-money. [p. 87, col. 1.]

Parangodan Nair v. Perumtoduha Illot Chata, 27 M. 380, referred to.

The proper Article of the Limitation Act to apply to a suit for recovery of earnest-money after a suit for specific performance of a contract for sale has failed is Art. 97 and not Art. 62. [p. 87, col. 2.]

In a suit for the recovery of earnest-money against the sons of a Hindu father with whom the contract for sale was entered into and who died prior to the filing of the suit, it is not improper to give a personal decree against the sons, inasmuch as the father having died the sons are under a pious obligation to discharge his debts. Civil revision from an order of the Judge of the Court of Small Causes at Agra, dated the 12th August 1922.

Mr. N. P. Asthana, for the Applicants.
St. C. Thompson and Mr. U. S. Bajpai, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application for revision of a judgment of the Small Cause Court at Agra.

The suit was brought by the plaintiff for the purpose of recovering a sum of Rs. 200 which he had paid as earnest-money in the following circumstances:—

On the 11th of October 1915 the plaintiff had entered into a contract with the father of the defendants for the sale of certain property. Afterwards, the plaintiff sued the father of the defendants for specific performance of the contract. That suit was dismissed finally by a judgment of this Court. The plaintiff now brings the present suit for recovery of the earnest-money paid. The father having died in the meantime the suit was brought against the sons.

Two pleas were raised in the Court below in order to defeat the plaintiff's claim. It was argued in the first place that the suit was barred by the provisions of O. II, r. 2 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The lower Court overruled this plea and, in my opinion, rightly.

The learned Counsel for the applicant bases his claim upon the provisions of section 29 of the Specific Relief Act. The lower Court in its judgment refers also to the language of section 19 of the same Act.

Section 19 enables a person who is claiming specific performance to ask in addition for compensation. Section 29 bars a subsequent suit for compensation after a suit for specific relief has been dismissed. Neither of these sections has anything to do with the present case where the claim is for recovery of the earnest-money. O. II, r. 2 has no application. The claim for the earnest-money is based upon a different cause of action from that of the claim for specific relief. I may refer in this connection to the case reported as Parangodan Nair v. Perumtodka Illot Chata (1).

The other plea raised was a plea of limitation. The defendants contended that Art. 62 was the proper Article to apply on the ground that the money advanced by way of earnest-money should be deemed to be money had and received and that the suit under this Article was barred by limitation. The lower Court rejected this plea and applied Art. 97 of the Schedule to the Limitation Act, holding that the suit was one to recover money paid on an existing consideration which had afterwards failed. The lower Court took the starting point of limitation to be the date of the judgment dismissing the plaintiff's suit for specific performance. Clearly, this was a correct decision. The case is covered by authority reported as Udit Narain Misr v. Muhammad Minnat-ulla (2). Another case which is in point is Amma Bibi v. Udit Narain Misra (3), a decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in which the judgment in Udit Narain Misr v. Muhammad Minnat-ulla (2) was upheld.

The applicant has relied on Hanuman Kamat v. Hanuman Mandur (4). That was a case where one member of a joint family governed by Mithila law had executed a sale. It was there held that an agreement for sale by a member of a joint family was not void but voidable and that the consideration only failed when the purchaser being opposed found himself unable to obtain possession. The failure of consideration did not take place when the money was paid so as to bring the case under Art. 62 of the Schedule to the Limitation Act. On page 126* of the report their Lordships say:—"If there never was any consideration, then the price paid by the appellant was money had and received to appellant's use. But their Lordships think that the sale was not necessarily void, but was voidable only if objection were taken to it by the other members of the joint family. If so, the consideration did not fail at once, but only from the time when the appellant endeavoured to obtain possession of the property, and being opposed, found himself unable to obtain possession. There was then, at all events, a failure of consideration."

And, therefore, Art. 97 applied.

JOGESH CHANDRA SHAHA V. BHIKU SAU PARAMANIK.

This is exactly the case here and I hold that the decision of the Court below is correct. It has been represented to me that the lower Court has given a personal decree against the defendants and it is said that, in the circumstances, the father having died no personal decree ought to be made against the sons. On the other hand, there is the consideration that the father having died, the sons are under a pious obligation to discharge his debt. I do not think there is any ground for interference with the decision of the Court below. The application is dismissed with costs.

Will—Testamentary capacity—Sense or consciousness, existence of, if sufficient.

The mere fact that at the time of the execution of an alleged Will the testator had sense or consciousness, or that he was able to answer a question or two put by the Doctor about his illness, is not sufficient evidence of his testamentary capacity. [p. 90, col. 2.]

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Birbhum, dated the 23rd June 1920.

Dr. Jadu Nath Kanjilal (with him Babu Jyotish Chandra Sircar), for the Appellant.—I beg to submit that the learned Judge has arrived at a wrong conclusion on a wrong consideration of the evidence addressed on behalf of my client. My client was more intimate with the testator than the objector and such is also the clear finding of the learned Judge and so it was quite natural and fit that the testator should make the Will in favour of my client. The learned Judge has misread the evidence and come to a wrong finding that the testator had no testamentary capacity when he is said to have executed the Will. The learned Judge makes much of the fact that, although there were Pleaders, Mukhtears and other respectable persons they were not called in to attest the Will. I submit that, as the testator was a Shaha—one of the depressed classes—it could not be expected that respectable men would come to attest his Will. The evidence of the Kaviraj is entitled to great respect and credence and he has said that the testator was in full possession of his senses. The Doctor also has deposed to the same effect. The evidence of Rakhal is also clear and explicit on the point. Shib Nath Saha is written as Shibu Saha by reason of abbreviation and cannot be regarded as a material discrepancy. Shaha can be spelt as Shou. The Kaviraj and the Doctors' evidence as to the testator's full possession of senses when he executed the will ought to be sufficient to cut the ground from the bottom of the learned Judge's findings and the appellant should succeed on the evidence.

Babu Amarendra Nath Bose (for Babu Manmatha Nath Mukherjee) and Babu Panna Lal, for the Respondent, not called.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal is against an order of the District Judge of Birbhum refusing to grant Probate of the Will of one Rasaraj Saha. He is said to have executed the Will on the 2nd November 1919 at about 10 A. M. He died the very same day at about 4-30 P. M.

The petitioner who propounded the Will is a distant agnate of the deceased. The objector is the first cousin (father's brother's son). He lived at a different place about 12 miles away and had no concern with the deceased. On the other hand, Rasaraj used to take his food in the house of the petitioner and was evidently more intimate with him. Under these circumstances, we think the learned Judge was right in holding that the deceased, if he had testamentary capacity when he is said to have executed the Will, would in all probability have excluded the objector and that the Will in favour of the petitioner could not be said to be unnatural.

The learned Judge, however, found that the deceased had no testamentary capacity at the time when the Will is said to have been executed and that the Will was not executed by the deceased.

Seven witnesses have been examined by the petitioner. The learned Judge has considered the evidence of those witnesses. He has pointed out certain discrepancies in the statements made by some of them and has, upon a consideration of the various circumstances mentioned in his judgment, come to the conclusion that the deceased had no testamentary capacity.

We need not consider in detail the evidence of witnesses other than Rakhal, Noor Mohamed, Dr. Monmohan and Kaviraj Brojendra Narain Sen, the last witness having been examined under orders of this Court passed by another Bench.

It appears that the Kaviraj saw the deceased once in the morning and the second time at about 10 A. M. On the first visit he prescribed Makaradhwaj and musk. At that time the patient was pulseless and weak. At that time the Kaviraj asked the deceased since when he felt so bad. He replied "from over-night." He again visited him at about 10 A. M. Rasaraj asked him if there was any chance of his surviving the disease and he told him that there was none. The Kaviraj says that he did not hear that Rasaraj was going to execute any document but that he saw some sheets of white paper and pen and ink with Jogesh (the appellant) at 8-30 A. M., when the latter came to his house for medicine. What those papers were, he could not say.

As for the Doctor, he says he does not remember the hour at which he saw the deceased, that when he saw the deceased in the morning, he was seriously ill, but that he was in full possession of his senses. He does not remember, however, what, if any, conversation he had with him. He also says that there was no talk of any Will in the morning, but that in the evening he was in the house of the deceased, Rakhal Bistoc told him that the deceased had executed a Will and he saw a piece of paper lying in the Angina.

Noor Mohamed, who is a clerk in the Birbhum Collectorate, says that on Sunday morning he heard Rasaraj was pulseless and in extremis and went to see him. He asked Rasaraj whether he was going to execute a Will in favour of Jogesh. He answered in the affirmative. That was at about 7 or 7-30 in the morning. He again saw the deceased at about 11-30 A. M. He could not speak then and made signs to express that he was not well. Sometime after that, Rakhal (one of the witnesses to the Will) came to his house and requested him to be an attesting witness. The witness said that, as the paper was not stamped, his conscience did not permit him to be a witness as requested.

The learned Judge observes that the real reason why his conscience did not permit him to be a witness was that the Will was not genuine and not that it was unstamped. He has also commented upon the fact that, although there were Pleaders, Mukhtears and other respectable persons in the neighbourhood, none of them was called to attest the Will.

It is contended before us that it is not to be expected that such persons should come in for attesting the Will of a Saha and with respect to property valued at Rs. 1,300 only. Although we do not think there is much force in the comment made by the learned Judge, there were respectable persons available for the purpose, namely the Doctor, Kaviraj and Noor Mohamed who actually came to see the deceased in his house.

Rakhal says that when the Doctor came to the deceased in the after-noon, he requested the Doctor to attest the Will, as he had heard about the Will in the morning. The Doctor does not say that he was asked to attest the Will, nor does he say that he had heard of any talk of the Will in the morning.

The fact remains, however, that Rakhal attempted to get the Will attested by the Doctor in the after-noon, just before the death of Rasaraj.

No explanation has been given as to why the Doctor was not asked to be an attesting witness, or even told of the execution of the Will either by Rasaraj or by Rakhal at the time when the Doctor saw the deceased at about 11 A. M., by which time, according to the petitioner, the Will had been executed. They could have got the Doctor as an attesting witness, and, in any case, there could have been an acknowledgment by Rasaraj to the Doctor about the execution of Will.

JOGESH CHANDRA SHAHA v. BHIKHU SAU PARAMANIK.

So far as the Kaviraj is concerned, we have already pointed out that he never heard of the Will although he went twice to the house of the deceased. He went there the second time at about 10 A. M. when the Will had already been executed according to the petitioner's case.

Noor Mohamed was also not asked by Rasaraj to attest the Will, nor was any statement made to him by Rasaraj that a Will had been executed by him, although he saw Rasaraj at about 11-30 A.M. Rakhal requested him to attest the Will sometime after that in the house of the latter. The fact that none of these three witnesses, who are respectable persons, was asked to be an attesting witness, or was told by the testator that a Will had been executed, throws great suspicion upon the case.

Moreover, the attempt by Rakhal to get the Will attested at the time when Rasaraj was dead, or about to die, and the fact that neither the Doctor nor the Kaviraj nor Noor Mohamed had seen the testator execute the Will, nor received any acknowledgment from him about the execution, also go against the case for the petitioner.

According to witness No. 4, Sasi Bhusan Saha, when the Kaviraj came, Kiron, the scribe, was writing the Will and Noor Mohamed also saw Kiron writing the Will. If so, there is no reason suggested why neither of them was asked to attest the Will and it is to be noted that neither of them says that he saw the writing of the Will.

The witness Rakhal appears to have taken a good deal of interest in the matter. He is the manager of a Kalibari in that locality and there is a provision in the Will that Jogesh, in whose favour the Will is said to have been executed, was to erect a roof for the Kalibari and a natshala.

The other witnesses are Satya, a grocer and a relation of Rakhal, Kiron, the scribe, who is a Pleader's clerk and who was called by Rakhal, and Surendra, a mason, who constructed the Kalibari.

The learned Judge points out that the name of the father of Rasaraj is stated in the Will to be Sihu Saha, whereas in the admitted documents, it was Shib Nath and that the name of Rasaraj is signed on the Will as Rasaraj Salia; whereas in the admitted document it was Rasaraj Sou; and although Saha can be spelt both ways as Sou or Saha, it is not likely that, having adopted one mode of spelling, he should sign in another way. On the whole, the learned Judge was inclined to disbelieve the signature of Rasaraj on the Will.

Upon a consideration of the entire evidence he came to the conclusion that the deceased had no testamentary capacity at the time when the Will is said to have been executed. The witnesses were before him, and, after considering all the circumstances, we are unable to hold that the Judge is wrong in the view he has taken.

It has been pressed upon us that the Doctor stated that at the time of his first visit the deceased was in "full possession of his senses" and, as the Will was in existence at about noon, it ought to be held that the deceased had testamentary capacity at about 10 or 11 A. M.

But the mere fact that the testator had sense or consciousness, or that he was able to answer a question or two put by the Doctor or Kaviraj about his illness is not sufficient.

It is stated that the Will was written out under instructions from Rasaraj who, all the time the Will was being written out, was sitting up. The evidence of the Doctor however, shows that the patient could not sit up.

It is to be observed that no question was put to the Doctor or to the Kaviraj as to whether Rasaraj had sufficient capacity at the time to execute the Will, or any question about his mental faculties. Having regard to his physical condition at the time, the plaintiff ought to have adduced evidence to show that he had testamentary capacity.

On a consideration of all the circumstances and the evidence, we think that the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

We assess the hearing fee at one gold mohur.

Expl. IV—Res judicata—Test.

Where a defendant fails to take a plea which, if established, would result in the dismissal of the plaintiff's suit and the suit is decreed, the matter becomes res judicata under Explanation IV to section 11 of the Civil Procedure Code and cannot be re-agitated in a subsequent suit between the parties.

Second appeal from an order of the Additional District Judge, Jhelum, at Gujrat, dated the 26th April 1922, reversing that of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Gujrat, dated the 6th February 1922.

Mr. Zafrulla Khan, for the Appellants.
Sir Muhammad Iqbal, Kt., and Mr. Khurshid Zaman, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs in this case are one branch of the reversioners of one Mahbub Alam, who died leaving two widows, Musammat Jawahar Bibi and Musammat Niamat Bibi and a daughter Musammat Rasul Bibi who is the child of Musammat Jawahar Bibi. Both widows have now died and the plaintiffs claim their share of the land left by Mahbub Alam, the only contesting defendant being Salam Ullah, the son of Musammat Rasul Bibi and grandson of Mahbub Alam. The suit was decreed by the Trial Court on the ground that, in consequence of the previous litigation, the pleas now put forward by Salam Ullah were governed by the law of res judicata. On appeal the learned District Judge held that Explanation IV of section 11 did not apply and remanded the case for decision on the merits; and the only point before us is whether the present defence to the claim is barred by that section.

On the death of Mahbub Alam, both widows had the land entered in the name of their son-in-law, Aman Ullah. In 1886 the present reversioners sued for a declaration that the gift by the widows in favour of this son-in-law of Mahbub Alam would not affect their reversionary rights. The suit was resisted on two grounds, that the gift was valid and that he (Aman Ullah) was a Khanadamad, but the plaintiffs succeeded and obtained a decree. Aman Ullah died in 1890 and the land standing in his name was mutated in favour of the present defendant, his son Salam Ullah, in 1895. In 1905 Musammat Jawahar Bibi died and then the reversioners brought another suit for possession against Salam Ullah. This suit was dismissed on the ground that the second widow was still alive, but the plaintiffs were given a declaration that the mutation did not affect their reversionary rights. That suit was contested by Salam Ullah only on the ground that he stood in his father's shoes. He did not urge either of the pleas which he now puts forward that he is entitled to the land as his mother's son and that the land is not ancestral. On the question whether these pleas should have been taken in the previous suit, we find that the suit would certainly have been defeated by the present pleas had they been established, or rather by the plea that Salam Ullah, as grandson of Mahbub Alam, was entitled to succeed, that as this plea was not taken it cannot be taken now and that the present defence of Salam Ullah is barred by section 11, Explanation IV.

We, therefore accept the appeal and restore the order of the Trial Court giving the plaintiffs the decree they seek. The plaintiff's costs will be paid throughout by Salam Ullah. The other defendants were merely pro forma and have not appealed.

In all cases where a plaintiff is relying upon a deed, the defendant is entitled as of course to give evidence of the circumstances under which the document came into existence. When those circumstances embrace and include an allegation of a joint fraud by both plaintiff and defendant, the particulars of that fraud must be pleaded; and it is then the duty of the Court to look into the matter, and if the Court comes to the conclusion that the parties were acting together with a view to perpetrate a fraud, and did in fact perpetrate that fraud, and that there is no difference in the degree of guilt of the plaintiff (who is asking the Court to give him some help) and that of the defendant the duty of the Court is not to assist either party; in other words, the duty of the Court is to dismiss the claim, because the Court having then in its knowledge that it has before it two persons equally guilty of fraud will not assist either of them. JUDGMENT.

Mears, C. J.—This is an interesting case which has given rise to a discussion as to under what circumstances a defendant can properly plead and rely upon facts showing that he and the plaintiff were in pari delicto.

The circumstances are as simple as they can be. Sheikh Vilayet Hussain and Musammat Imaman were, on the 12th of September 1904, indebted to various creditors. There was at least one decree outstanding which was in the course of execution. In that position of affairs they turned to Muhammad Ismail, who was a friend and who agreed with them that a fictitious deed of sale of property should be executed in his favour so that that might serve as a shield against the demands of creditors. That deed of sale was in fact executed on the 12th of September 1904 and no consideration passed from Muhammad Ismail to the ostensible vendors. Muhammad Ismail put forward a claim and got this very property released from the operation of the decree. Therefore, the contemplated fraud was successfully carried out. It is probable Muhammad Ismail collected the rents for some period, but if this was done, it was only to make the transaction of the 12th of September 1904 appear to be a genuine and valid one. Under some circumstances which are not very clear, on the death of Muhammad Ismail Vilayet Hussain and Musammat Imaman got possession of the house and began to collect the rents themselves. In this way they asserted possession and dominion over the house in question. That was in the year 1909.

On the 30th of June 1917, after a lapse of some nine years, the plaintiffs, who are the heirs of Muhammad Ismail, brought the suit to recover possession on the strength of the sale-deed of the 12th of September 1904.

It is now important to turn to the pleadings to see how the case was framed by the parties. As one would expect, the pleading in the plaint was quite simple; it was based upon a sale-deed, the death of Muhammad Ismail and the realisation of rents by the defendants. To that apparently genuine claim the defendants set up what they contended was the true story; that is to say, they drafted pleas which showed, if they were true, and as they were subsequently found to be true, that Vilayet Hussain and Muhammad Ismail were in pari delicto, that is to say, not one man but both were jointly engaged on a fraud in which each was equally culpable.

VILAYAT HUSSAIN v. MISRAN.

If that written statement was a written statement in accordance with the rules and with the procedure, then it had to be considered by the Court and proper issues framed. No body seems to have suggested that the pleading was not in any way proper and indeed there can be no question that this pleading was the proper pleading, and the points urged in it and the facts set out in it were proper to be raised and those which it was the duty of the Court to consider, and in fact the Court did consider this matter and the Court allowed the genuineness of the document to be impeached.

In all cases where a plaintiff is relying upon a deed, the defendant is entitled as of course to give evidence of the circumstances under which the document came into existence. When those circumstances embrace and include an allegation of a joint fraud by both plaintiff and defendant, the particulars of that fraud must be pleaded; and it is then the duty of the Court to look into the matter and if the Court comes to the conclusion that the parties were acting together with a view to perpetrate a fraud, and did in fact perpetrate that fraud, and that there is no difference in the degree of guilt of the plaintiff (who is asking the Court to give him some help) and that of the defendant, the duty of the Court is not to assist either party: in other words, the duty of the Court is to dismiss the claim; because the Court having then in its knowledge that it has before it two persons equally guilty of fraud will not assist either of them.

The position, therefore, of this matter is that the decision of the lower Appellate Court is the right decision and that decision must be restored. But, inasmuch as there has been considerable discussion on this matter, it may be useful, without going into great length, to mention some authorities so that there can be no question as to the propriety of pleading and entertaining any evidence of the allegations of a joint and equal fraud of plaintiff and defendant. An example of that type of pleading will be found in Taylor v. Chester (1). There, by way of a special reply, all the facts were stated which went to show that, if those facts were true, the plaintiff and defendant were in pari delicto. It may be noticed that in that case the defendant took issue on the reply and raised the precise question as to whether a pleading of this nature was a fit and proper pleading to be entertained by the Court. The Court decided that it was, went into the whole facts of the case and in the course of its judgment said: "The maxim 'in pari delicto potior est conditio possidentis' is as thoroughly settled as any proposition of law can be. It is a maxim of law established, not for the benefit of plaintiffs or defendant, but is founded on the principles of public policy which will not assist a plaintiff who has paid over money, or handed over property in pursuance of an illegal or immoral contract, to recover it back, for the Courts will not assist an illegal transaction in any respect." The Court also pointed out the further proposition that if a plaintiff can go into a Court and make out a complete case without himself disclosing any fraud, then he may be entitled to recover. In all cases, however, where a plaintiff has to produce a document, he can either by interrogatories, or when he is actually present in the box be asked questions under cross-examination which will show that his first story to the Court as regards the circumstances under which the document was executed is not a true story, and the defendant then is entitled, if he has put on record the proper pleadings; to go into the whole of the circumstances and show that each party is in pari delicto. There are many other English authorities to that effect, but the most concise summary of the law is to be found in Broom's Legal Maxims, 8th Edition, at page 561 and 562. Once it is established that the parties are in pari delicto the Court will not assist an illegal transaction in any respect, that is to say, the person who has asked the Court to do something in his favour will fail. Not only, says the learned author, in acquat jure but likewise in pari delicto, is it true that potior est conditio possidentis; where each party is equally in fault, the law favours him who is actually in possession, a well-known rule which is in fact included in that more comprehensive maxim to which the present remarks are appended. 'If' said Buller, J., 'a party comes into a Court of Justice to enforce an illegal contract, two answers may be given to his demand, the one, that he must draw justice from a pure fountain and the other that potior est conditio possidentis.'

Our attention has been drawn to the case of Sidlingappa v. Hirasa (2) and it is contended that the facts of that case are so identical with the facts of the case under consideration that we are bound by the course that that case took. If one studies that case, one will see that no attention was concentrated upon the question with which we are concerned here, which is whether a defendant can in a pleading raise facts which show that he and the plaintiff were in pari delicto. If he can raise such facts, he is entitled to prove such facts; and if he proves such facts, he can bring himself within the principle of law which has been laid down in the case to which we have referred above, and in others which are to be found appended to the notes in Broom's Legal Maxims. The Court was referred to Doe d. Roberts v. Roberts (3) but the Court does not seem to have paid any attention to the principle of in pari delicto potior est conditio defendantis and that case is certainly not in harmony with the principle of subsequent decisions of which Taylor v. Chester (1) (supra) and Herman v. Jeuchner (4) are characteristic examples and appears to us of doubtful authority. The essence of the case now under consideration is that the defendants set up the joint iniquity of Vilayet Hussain and Muhammad Ismail they were alleging through the concerted plan by which both the plaintiffs and defendant in equal degree of wrong-doing defendant had agreed to take a course which would defeat, and did in fact defeat creditors. In the case of Sidlingappa v. Hirasa (2) this point does not appear to have been urged upon the Court; at all events, it finds no place in the judgment. We have no doubt whatever that the practice is that a defendant may always allege facts, that he and the plaintiff were together jointly equally guilty of a contemplated and executed fraud. Provided the pleading contains proper facts an issue has to be found on that, and if it is established to the satisfaction of the Court that the plaintiff and defendant were jointly and equally engaged upon a fraud, it is then the duty of the Court to give no assistance to the plaintiff; the position being that the plaintiff must come into Court with clean hands.

On the question of pari delicto one has to consider all the facts, and that requires an examination of the circumstances attending the execution of the document if it be a document which is impeached. In this case the wrong-doing was in and around the 12th of September 1904. The parties who were guilty of that wrong-doing were Vilayet Hussain and Muhammad Ismail. Neither of them could have obtained any assistance from any Court after the contemplated fraud had been carried out, and that bar applies also to people claiming directly through them.

Mr. Uma Shanker Bajpai after the close of the arguments and indeed after delivery of judgment called our attention to the very recent case of Raghupati Chatterjee v. Nrishingha Hori Das (5). There the Calcutta High Court on a full consideration of all the authorities came to the same conclusion at which we have arrived.

We are, therefore, of opinion that this appeal must be allowed and the decree of the learned Judge of this Court set aside and the decree of the lower Appellate Court restored. The result will be that the plaintiff's suit will be dismissed. Each party must pay his own costs throughout.

Petition under section 25 of Act IX of 1887, praying the High Court to revise a decree of the Court of the District Munsif, Chittoor, in Small Cause Suit No. 107 of 1921.

Messrs. T. R. Srinivasa Thathachari, and Thirumalai Thathchari, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Jagadisa Iyer, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application to revise the decree of the District Munsif of Chittoor in Small Cause Suit No. 107 of 1921. The suit was brought for a sum of Rs. 28 and interest thereon Rs. 9-10-0, in all for Rs. 37-10-0, alleged to be due on account by the defendants to the Vysia community of Mogarala village in Chandragiri Taluk, as evidenced by a deed executed by the first defendant. It says: "on 3rd March 1918, I, Budavaram Narasimhulu Chetti; said at time of the death of Budhavaram Cheugalvaraya that I would pay Rs. 28 to the Mogarala Nootayibandum Nagaram Varu, as charity. Interest should be charged hereon at the rate of Re. 1 per cent. per mensem. I shall pay the amount of principal and interest thereon to the aforesaid Nootayibandum Nagaram Varu on 15th October 1918." There is clear evidence that the first defendant did undertake to pay Rs. 28 and interest to the Vysia community of the village in question.

The main objection taken by the first defendant before me is that such a claim as this could not be enforced at all, as no promise to pay any money to a fluctuating body like the Vysia community of Mogarala is legally enforceable. I may say at once that I do not look upon the document executed by the first defendant as a promissory-note or negotiable instrument; it is really only a memorandum of what he orally promised to pay at the time of the death of the deceased. Therefore, the question whether a promissory-note can be executed in the name of a community does not arise for decision. The only question is whether a person can make himself liable to a community by agreeing to pay a certain sum of money to it. The frame of the suit in the present case cannot be objected to, because leave was obtained by the plaintiff Subbaroya Chetti to sue on behalf of the Vysia community of Mogarala under O. I, r. 8, Civil Procedure Code. It has been held in several cases that an indefinite body like the Vysia community of Mogarala can own property. Vide Navroji Manekji Wadia v. Dastur Kharsedji Mancherji (1); Secretary of State v. Haibatrao Hari (2) and Sivathal Periyava Nadar v. Nana, Chuna, Velmuruga Nadar (3) and the position has also been recognised by the Privy Council in Idris v. Jane Skinner (4), where a right of pre-emption was allowed to be enforced in favour of an indefinite body like the occupancy tenants in an estate in the Punjab.

The petitioner has cited some cases from the Allahabad Reports on the authority of which he contends that the present suit should be dismissed as improperly laid. The cases cited are Yusuf Beg v. Board of Foreign Missions of the Presbyterian Church of New York (5), Panchaiti Akhara Kalan v. Gauri Kuar (6) and Muhammadan Association of Meerut v. Bakhshi Ram (7). Now, all these cases deal with suits which are brought in the name of a community or indefinite body of persons by some one individual or more without any authority being obtained by that individual or those individuals either under O. I, r. 8, Civil Procedure Code, or by getting the body registered under the Societies' Registration Act or any other Act, and it was held that such suits were not properly instituted. But these decisions do not apply to the present case, as in this case leave has been obtained from the Court by the plaintiff to sue on behalf of the community. The petitioner has also cited the case in Maharaj Bahadur Singh v. Gandaury Singh (8). That case does not seem to have any direct bearing on the present case; what was held there was that a right to hunt in a certain jungle for a day in the year cannot be acquired as an easement by 20 years' enjoyment under section 26 of the Limitation Act of 1908 by the members of a tribe such as the Sonthals or Gharwalis. It is not necessary to consider whether that is rightly decided, because here no such question is raised. The only question here is whether a body like the Vysia community of Mograla, which, I understand, consists of a very few individuals, can enter into a contract to receive money from a third party. I have no doubt that, as they can own property, they can do so just as they can enter into contracts to pay money for work done for them. I, therefore, overrule the first objection.

Another objection has been taken in this case, namely, that on the face of the document, Exhibit A (1), the promise to pay is not supported by consideration, because it was only intended as a charity as the document says. The District Munsif has considered this point and has found on the evidence given in this case that, 'although Exhibit A speaks of the payment as a matter of charity, there was consideration for the payment, inasmuch as the members of the Vysia community of Mograla helped the first defendant in carrying the corpse of his deceased brother and in having the cremation of the dead body carried out and that, instead of bargaining for payment to themselves, they asked that payment should be made to the community as a whole. I think the District Munsif is right in his view that this would form sufficient consideration for the promise to pay Rs. 28 to the community. It is not necessary that consideration should move from the person to whom the promise is made. The fact that the document does not mention this, is only a matter to be taken into consideration in weighing the evidence; it does not prevent such evidence as has been given in this case from being given. This objection also fails.

As both the points taken in the revision petition fail, the revision petition itself fails, and is dismissed with costs.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs and the defendants 2nd party are co-sharers in one of the five Touzi estates comprised in Mahal Naula, namely Touzi estate No. 1003; and the defendants 1st party are the proprietors of an adjacent estate also within Mahal Naula, namely Touzi No. 1061. The plaintiffs sued for a declaration of their title and for confirmation of possession in respect of their right of fishery in a tract having an area of 18 bighas 7 cottahs 12 dhurs. Admittedly, this land lies within Touzi estate No. 1003. The cause of action was stated to have been a criminal case in June 1919 concerning this fishery. The defendants who are proprietors of Touzi No. 1061, that is, the defendants 1st party have contested the suit as defendants in the original Court and appellants in the Appellate Court. Some of the plaintiffs' co-sharers, defendants 2nd party, appeared and filed written statements supporting the defendants 1st party. In the written statements it was asserted that the possession of the plaintiffs and defendants 2nd party of lands within Touzi estate No. 1003 had been altered since the institution of the suit by Civil Court partition, and it was asserted that the area of 18 bighas and odd had fallen within the patti of the plaintiffs' co-sharer. It was also asserted that the right of fishery in this area belonged to the proprietors of Touzi estate No. 1061 by right of prescription. I should mention here that the parties are agreed that this area of 18 bighas and odd consists of land which is cultivated for part of the year but during the rains goes under water and becomes one part of a long stretch of water called the sorhni-jalkar. The question whether the proprietors of other Touzi estates than estate No. 1003 had acquired any prescriptive rights to fish in the disputed land was directly raised between the parties in Issue No. 4 and was decided against them and the learned Munsif held that the plaintiff and the defendants 2nd party as proprietors of Touzi estate No. 1003 had the right to fish on the disputed land. It was also held that the proprietors of other Touzi estates were not necessary parties. Then the learned Munsif proceeded to decide which of the plots scheduled in the plaint and comprised in the land in dispute have fallen into the plaintiffs' patti by partition. He found that only plot No. 7448 of Khata No. 51 did not appear to have fallen into the co-sharers' patti. His order was that "the suit be decreed in part; let the title of the plaintiffs be declared in respect of the disputed land with reference to plot No. 7448 only and let them be confirmed in possession thereof. Let it also be declared that the defendants have no right in the disputed jalkar and that the order passed in the criminal proceeding dated the 15th June 1916 is illegal and inoperative."

The plaintiff did not appear but the defendants 1st party brought an appeal against the declaration decreed. The first point taken before the learned Subordinate Judge who heard the appeal was that the Court of first instance, having found that all the plots but No. 7448 had fallen in pattis of the co-sharers, and there being no evidence that this plot No. 7448 had fallen in the plaintiffs' patti, the suit should have been dismissed. The learned Subordinate Judge examined the partition papers and came to the conclusion that, whilst there was some evidence that some other plots had fallen into the plaintiff's patti, there was no evidence at all to show in what patti plot No. 7448 had fallen. The learned Subordinate Judge acceded to one plea of the appellants-defendants, namely, that the lower Court should not have made so wide a negative declarations against the defendant. The order of the Subordinate Judge was as follows: "The appeal, therefore, practically fails. But the decree of the lower Court will be modified in this way. In place of the declaration made by the lower Court it will be declared that the plaintiffs have the fishery right over such of the plots mentioned in the plaint as have fallen to their patti by Civil Court partition and that the defendants 1st party have got no fishery right over the said plots of the plaintiffs." Against this decision in the first appeal the defendants 1st party have made a second appeal. Four points have been raised of which two can be disposed of at once. It was first urged that the decree of the lower Appellate Court went beyond the pleadings, but this is obviously a mistake on the part of the learned Vakil and the point was withdrawn. The second point which I propose to dispose of at once is the contention that the suit was not maintainable unless the plaintiffs had established a right of easement. It is obvious that a person cannot have an easement in the land he owns and that the plaintiff is suing only as proprietor of the lands in suit. Two other points have been argued at length. It is contended that the decision of the lower Court was beyond the jurisdiction of an Appellate Court in so far as it interfered with the decree to which the plaintiff had submitted by not appealing. The argument had reference to the terms of O. XLI, r. 33, and the case Rangamlal v. Jhandu (1) was cited. In connection with this contention there was a subsidiary argument that the plaintiff was not at all entitled to plot No. 7448.

Now, looking at the decisions of the two Courts it seems to me that they were both moving on the same line and were both guided by the same principle in coming to their decisions. Both Courts appear to me to have held in effect that the plaintiff was entitled to a declaration of his rights in fishery in respect of those plots which fell within his batti. No doubt, it would have been better if all discussion of the proprietary rights acquired by partition had been excluded, and if the plaint had been followed and a declaration granted in respect of the whole of the 18 bighas lying within the whole Touzi estate No. 1003 subject to any subsequent modifications made in the title of the parties by Civil Court partition. But as it was, each Court not only decided that the plaintiffs must have a declaration in respect of the land of which the plaintiffs were proprietors, but also referred to the partition papers to ascertain what those lands were. In this process the two Courts seem to have disagreed and the Appellate Court intended to solve the difficulty by making a general decree of the nature of that appealed against. Now, the defendants-appellants who are proprietors of Touzi estate No. 1061, and whom I must in this second appeal regard as having no interest in the lands in suit, ask me to set aside the whole decree. I am not disposed to do this, because, in my opinion, it would be doing a great injustice to the plaintiffs, who would in the result be deprived of what they have been found entitled to. I am quoting as literally as possible the words of an Allahabad judgment reported as Jawahar Bano v. Shujaat Husain Beg (2) in which the case which I have quoted above from Rangamlal v. Jhandu (1) was distinguished. In my opinion the learned Subordinate Judge did not exceed the powers given him as Appellate Court by O. XLI, r. 33. He adopted the principle on which the decision of the First Court was based and he made an order which he considered ought to have been made on the basis of that principle. I, therefore, find no error of law in this respect.

As to the question whether plot No. 7448 falls within or without the plaintiff's khasra, the form of the Appellate Court's decree leaves the question open. It is urged that the decree in itself is indefinite, and O. XX, r. 9 was invoked. In my opinion the lands affected by the declaration are clearly indicated and there is no chance of mistake. The description is sufficient for the purpose of identification of plots when the question arises. For this reason I dismiss the appeal with costs.

essor from suing for damages—Holding over, effect of—Notice—Transfer of Property Act (I V of 1882), ss. 106, 108, 116.

In the absence of a contract to do repairs or of an obligation imposed by Statute, there is no obligation on the part of a landlord to put premises into habitable condition or to do any repairs whatever upon them, though by neglecting to do so they become uninhabitable. In fact, the landlord has no right to go upon the premises if he desire to make repairs, and if he do so in the absence of an express power in the lease he will be guilty of a trespass and may be restrained by injunction, although the non-repair may cause a forfeiture of his own lease. On the other hand, the implied obligation of a tenant from year to year is to keep the premises wind and water-tight and to make fair and tenantable repairs as by putting fences in order or replacing windows or doors that are broken during his occupation, of cleansing drains and sewers. Where a lessor is under an obligation to effect repairs and fails to comply with the request of the lessee to do so, the latter is not entitled to terminate the tenancy. Although an original lease of certain premises may be for a term of years, under section 116 of the Transfer of Property Act the effect of holding over after the expiry of the term upon payment of rent to the landlord is to create a tenancy from year to year or from month to month according to the purpose for which the property was leased as specified in section 106 of the Act. [p. 102, col. 2; p. 103, col. 2.]

A notice, though of a longer duration than 15 days, to terminate a monthly tenancy, but not expiring with the end of a month of the tenancy, is inoperative in law. [p. 103, col. 1.]

Where the term of a tenancy under which rent is payable periodically, is brought to a premature termination, the lessor is entitled to damages and not to rent for the unexpired term of the lease. Even the acceptance of surrender does not preclude the lessor from suing for damages for breach of the contract, as it does not destroy the existing cause of action. But the lessor is bound to let out the house after the lessee has vacated it and thereby to minimise the damage. [p. 103 col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the Additional District Judge, Howrah, in Zillah Hooghly, dated the 22nd April 1920, affirming the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Howrah, dated the 29th June 1918.

Babu Hari Charan Bineries, (with him Dr. Sarat Chandra Basak), for the Appellant.—The appellant was not at all bound to make any repairs to the house. There is no legal obligation on his part in that respect: See Transfer of Property Act, section 108, clauses (e), (f) and (m); also Woodfall's Landlord and Tenant, 20th Edition, p. 741. The respondent could have made the repairs himself if he thought that the appellant was bound to make such repairs to the house and then deduct the expenses thereof from the rent. This he did not do, but instead left the house without notice, at least legal notice; for the notice to be effective and legal it must expire with the end of a month of the tenancy: Transfer of Property Act, section 106. The notice being thus illegal and void, the appellant is entitled to the relief asked for.

BEJOY CHANDRA SINHA v. HOWRAH AMTA LIGHT RAILWAY CO. LTD.

Also, from the letter of the 3rd December 1914 it is clear that there was no contract by the appellant to repair the house. This is corroborated by the fact that the respondent asked the appellant to repair the house after staying over for 6 months. It is, therefore, wrong to say that the appellant by his conduct admitted that he was bound to make repairs to the house. Besides, the learned Additional District Judge was entirely wrong in making a new case for the defendant which was not suggested in the written statement or in the evidence during the trial.

Babu Mahendra Nath Roy, (with him Babu Ambika Pada Choudhry), for the Respondent.—There was an agreement to lease in respect of the 1st as well as the 2nd period, but as the letters were neither stamped nor registered they could not be taken in evidence: Boyd v. Kreig (1); Hemanta Kumari Debi v. Midnapore Zemindari Co. (2). The notice was, no doubt, bad, but that does not entitle the landlord to a decree for specific performance. There is ample evidence that the house became uninhabitable and the respondent was compelled to leave it. Your lordships sitting in equity would not force such a house on the tenant.

Babu Hari Charan Banerjee in reply.—As regards the second period I submit that it was not a present demise, for the commencing of the period of lease was postponed to a future date, that is to say, after the expiry of the first period.

[MOOKERJEE, J.—As between the parties the letters showed a complete contract and nothing remained for the parties to do in order to give effect to it. The contract would come into force automatically after a certain period].

I submit even then it would not be a present demise. But assuming that the letters required registration, I am entitled to call upon the other party to complete the transaction by the execution and registration of the document of title.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the plaintiff in a suit for specific performance of an agreement to lease and in the alternative for damages. The subject-matter of the litigation is a house on the Grand Trunk Road in Howrah. In 1912, the first defendant (The Howrah Amta Railway Co.) proposed to the plaintiff to hire this house as a residence for their staff. The plaintiff agreed and the final agreement was that the defendant should hold the house for a period of three years from the 1st November 1912 to the 31st October 1915 at a monthly rent of Rs. 190. No formal lease was executed. But after letters had been exchanged, the defendant entered into occupation of the house and continued in occupation till the end of the term of the lease. In July 1914, long before the expiry of the term, the defendant informed the plaintiff by a letter that the electric light wiring of the house was in a bad condition and required repairing. The plaintiff took no notice of this request. The result was that the defendant again wrote to the plaintiff and intimated that if the plaintiff did not make the repairs, the defendant would do the needful and deduct the costs from the rent. This made the plaintiff alert and in reply he intimated to the defendant that he was willing to repair the electric light wiring, provided the defendant would continue the lease for three years more from the expiry of the current term. The defendant agreed to this proposal by a letter dated the 8th December 1914 and the plaintiff executed the repairs in due course. After the expiry of the term the defendant continued in occupation, but no formal lease was executed. On the 30th June 1916 the defendant left the house. The Company had previously given notice to the plaintiff on the 9th June that they would vacate the house after the lapse of a month from that date. The plaintiff refused to accept the surrender and instituted this suit on the 26th January 1917. Messrs. Martin & Co., who were the Managing Agents of the Howrah Amta Railway Company, were also joined as defendants; but they contended that they had no liability in respect of the matter in dispute. The Courts below have dismissed the suit, but on different grounds. The Court of first instance came to the conclusion that the letter of the 8th December 1914 constituted the lease, and that, as it was neither stamped nor registered, it was not admissible in evidence. Consequently, the plaintiff could not claim specific performance. On appeal the District Judge has affirmed the decree of the Subordinate Judge on an entirely different ground. He does not discuss the question of the effect of the letters from the plaintiff to the defendant dated the 3rd December 1914 and the letter from the defendant to the plaintiff dated the 8th December 1914. He proceeds on the ground that when, on the 8th April 1916, the defendant called upon the plaintiff to repair the house thoroughly and the plaintiff did not comply with the request, the defendant became entitled to vacate the premises.

On the present appeal we have been invited to consider, whether the view taken by the District Judge is correct and whether the decree of dismissal could be supported on the ground assigned by the District Judge. In our opinion it is plain that the decree of dismissal cannot be supported on either of the grounds mentioned in the Courts below.

As regards the view taken by the District Judge, it is plain that the plaintiff was under no obligation, contractual or statutory, to effect the repairs of the house. In this connection reference may be made to clauses (e), (f) and (m) of section 108 of the Transfer of Property Act. Clause (e) is in these terms:—"If by fire, tempest or flood or violence of any army or of a mob or other irresistible force, any material part of the property be wholly destroyed or rendered substantially and permanently unfit for the purpose for which it was let, the lease shall, at the option of the lessee, be void; provided that, if the injury be occasioned by the wrongful act or default of the lessee, he shall not be entitled to avail himself of the benefit of this provision". Clause (f) is in these terms:—"If the lessor neglects to make, within a reasonable time after notice, any repairs which he is bound to make to the property, the lessee may make the same himself, and deduct the expense of such repairs with interest from the rent, or otherwise recover it from the lessor". Clause (m) is in these terms:—"The lessee is bound to keep, and on the termination of the lease to restore, the property in as good condition as it was at the time when he was put in possession in subject only to the changes caused by reasonable wear and tear or irresistible force." It is plain that none of these clauses entitles the lessee to call upon the lessor to repair the property. In fact, unless there is a contract to the contrary, the lessor is not necessarily bound to make any repairs whatever. This is clear from a long series of decisions of great authority.

In the absence of a contract to do repairs or of an obligation imposed by Statute, there is no obligation on the part of a landlord to put premises into habitable condition [Chappell v. Gregory (3)], or to do any repairs whatever upon them, [Gott v. Gandy (4)], though by neglecting to do so they become uninhabitable [Arden v. Pullen (5)]. In fact, as stated in Barker v. Barker (6) the landlord has no right to go upon the premises if he desire to make repairs, and if he do so in the absence of an express power in the lease he will be guilty of a trespass and may be restrained by injunction, although the non-repair may cause a forfeiture of his own lease [Stocker v. Planet Building Society (7)]. On the other hand, the implied obligation of a tenant from year to year is to keep the premises wind and water-tight [Anworth v. Johnson (8), Leach v. Thomas (9), Wedd v. Porter (10)], and to make fair and tenantable repairs [Cheetham v. Hampson (11), Gregory v. Mighell (12)], as by putting fences in order or replacing windows or doors that are broken during his occupation, of cleansing drains and sewers, Russell v. Shenton (13).

In the case before us there was no covenant to repair and the lessor could not be called upon by the lessee to effect any repairs. But even if the lessor was under an obligation to effect the repairs and failed to comply with the request of the lessee, the lessee was not entitled to terminate the tenancy. Under section 108 he could remedy the breach himself, after giving a reasonable notice to the lessor and to recover the amount expended by him together with interest either by deducting it from the rent or otherwise. It is not suggested that if a tenant had taken a house which is out of repairs, he should put it in repairs when the lease comes to an end; but he is bound to maintain and restore the property in the condition in which it was when it was leased out to him. If the building, when demised, was an old one, and there was a covenant to repair it is not necessary that the old building should be delivered up in a renewed form: Lister v. Lane (14). The position is thus clear that the lessee was not entitled to terminate the lease on the ground assigned by the District Judge.

We have next to consider the ground assigned by the Subordinate Judge. The Subordinate Judge has held that there was a completed contract for the lease and that consequently the letter of the 8th December 1914 should not be received in evidence, as it was neither stamped nor registered. In support of this proposition he has placed reliance upon the decisions in Boyd v. Kreig (1), Hemanta Kumari Debi v. Midnapur Zemindari Co. (15) and Hemanta Kumari Debi v. Midnapore Zemindari Co. (2). The letter of the 3rd December 1914 was in these terms: "I beg to inform you that I shall be glad to do the necessary electric wiring on your assuring me that you will continue to be tenant for a further period of three years after the expiration of the lease. I require this assurance, as on the present terms of the lease, I have not to do any repairs or works in the building as long as the current agreement lasts." The reply dated the 8th December was in these terms: "I am prepared to continue the lease for three years and would like sanction at once to start work on the electric wiring, as at present it is unsafe." Let us assume that the effect of this correspondence was to create a present demise, subject to the reservation that the commencement of the lease was postponed till the date of expiry of the term then current. Assume also that this document required registration. Still, that does not furnish an answer to the suit for specific performance. A suit for specific performance lies when the lease essential for the completion of the contract has not been executed, and if there is a valid enforceable contract, either party is entitled to call upon the other to complete the transaction by the execution and registration of the document of title; Puchha Lal v. Kunj Behary Lal (16), Mahomed Musa v. Aghore Kumar Ganouli (17), Maddison v. Alderson (18) and Venkayamma Rao v. Venkatanarasimha Appa Rao (19). From this point of view, the conclusion of the Subordinate Judge cannot be supported.

But we are of opinion that, in the events that have happened, this is not a case in which we should make a decree for specific performance. The condition of the house in 1916 was such that no Court of Equity would force it upon the intending lessee. The evidence makes it abundantly clear that the roofs of some of the rooms came down during the rains of 1916. We have no information as to the present condition of the house, and it is impossible for us to decree specific performance of the agreement which forms the foundation of the claim. This, however, does not justify the conclusion that the plaintiff is not entitled to any relief. As the agreement cannot be specifically enforced, the defendant Company cannot claim the position which they would have occupied if the requisite document had been executed and registered. Their position in law, consequently, was that after the expiry of the lease on the 31st October 1915 they were tenants from month to month. They held over upon payment of rent to the landlord. Hence under section 116, Transfer of Property Act, the lease was renewed from year to year or from month to month according to the purpose for which the property was leased as specified in section 106. Thus, although the original term was for three years, the defendant Company became tenant from month to month under section 116 read with section 106; Troilokya Nath Roy v. Sarat Chandra Banerjee (20). That tenancy could be terminated by a notice to quit as prescribed in section 106. Under that section a lease of immoveable property from month to month is terminable, on the part of either lessor or lessee, by 15 days' notice expiring with the end of a month of the tenancy. In the present case, the notice which was served was no doubt a notice of a longer duration than 15 days. But it did not expire with the end of a month of the tenancy. The notice was thus inoperative in law and the tenancy had not been legally terminated when the defendant Company vacated the premises. In these circumstances, the plaintiff is entitled, not to rent for the remainder of the term, but only to damages, as explained in the case of Jogendra Krishna Roy v. Kurpa Harshi & Co. (21). Where the term of a tenancy, under which rent is payable periodically, is brought to a premature termination, the lessor is entitled to damages and not to rent for the unexpired term of the lease. Even the acceptance of surrender does not preclude the lessor from suing for damages for breach of the contract; it does not destroy the existing cause of action. This conclusion is in conformity with the decision in Gray v. Owen (22). The plaintiff was bound to let out the house after the defendant Company had vacated it, even though unlawfully, and thereby to minimise the damage. We are consequently of opinion that the plaintiff is entitled to damages inasmuch as the defendant Company vacated the premises before the lease had been lawfully terminated. We assess the damages at Rs. 400.

The result is that the decree of the District Judge is set aside and the suit is decreed for Rs. 400. Each party will pay his own costs in all the Courts. Costs, if already recovered, will be refunded.

Second appeal against the decree of the District Court of Tanjore, in Appeal Suit No. 232 of 1918, presented against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Mayavaram, in Original Suit No. 67 of 1915.

JUDGMENT.

Krishnan, J.—This second appeal arises from a suit brought by the plaintiff against the late Pandarasannadhi of Vedaraniam Devastanam for money due on a bond executed by him to plaintiff's deceased grand-uncle. Plaintiff claimed a decree against the defendant personally and against the trust funds as he alleged that the money was borrowed for Devastanam purposes. The defendant raised several pleas which are not material now but did not set up any plea that the debt was not binding on the Devastanam properties.

The Subordinate Judge decreed the suit as brought in plaintiff's favour and gave him a decree for payment by the defendant personally and out of the temple funds. The Pandarasannadhi appealed, and, besides raising objections to the findings of the Trial Court, pleaded that he was not in any event personally liable. He did not specifically object to the liability cast on the temple properties. Pending this appeal the Pandarasannadhi was removed from office in another suit and the contesting 2nd respondent before us was appointed receiver of the temple properties. He was added as party appellant on his own motion and he asked for leave of Court to file a new ground of appeal, viz., that the temple funds were in any event not liable for the bond amount. Leave was given on condition that the point was to be argued as a pure question of law whether, in the absence of an express charge on the temple property for bond amounts, such property could be made liable. No question of fact was to be raised and it was to be conceded that the borrowing was for temple necessity and within the powers of the trustee and that by the contract of borrowing itself it was arranged that the debt was to be paid from the trust funds. These conditions were accepted and the new ground was allowed to be raised. There is no question now before us whether these conditions should have been insisted on; having accepted them it is not open to the Receiver now to go back upon what he did and ask for a trial on facts on the point. For the purpose of this second appeal we must take the points set out above as the basis of our decision, even though it is not very clear from the terms of the bond that the re-payment of the whole debt was to be made from the temple funds.

The learned District Judge has held that whatever the nature of the debt and of the contract regarding it might be, no decree could be given against the trust property because no express charge had been created on that property by the trustee, and he relies on Swaminatha Aiyar v. Srinivasa Aiyar (1) as the authority for his view. It is urged by the appellant-plaintiff that this view is not right.

Before considering that point it is necessary to consider the objection that the lower Appellate Court should not have allowed the new plea to be raised in appeal by the Receiver who had been added as the legal representative of the Pandarasannadhi when it had not been raised in the suit or in the grounds of appeal by the latter. In support of this contention the ruling in Inaganti Venkatarama Row v. Venkatalingama Nayanam (2) is relied on. That was a case under O. XXII, r. 3, Civil Procedure Code. It was, no doubt, ruled there that a legal representative could only ask for such amendment as the deceased or the person whose representative he is could have asked for. It is not necessary to express an opinion whether this rule should be strictly followed in all cases under r. 3 or whether there is not a discretion left in the Court to allow further amendment; for, it may be pointed out, the present case is one where an institution is represented at different stages of the suit by different representatives, one not claiming under the other and the rule applicable is r. 10 of O. XXII and not r. 3. In such a case the Court must be held to have a wider discretion to allow amendments and new pleas to avoid multiplicity of suits provided the character of the suit is not changed and the opposite side is not prejudiced and the trial embarrassed. Such difficulties do not arise here.

But even if we assume that the rule laid down in the case cited strictly applied to the present case, the leave to raise the new plea under the conditions insisted on was not improperly given; for it was open to the Court to allow the Pandarasannadhi himself to raise such a plea on appeal as a pure question of law. The objection, therefore, fails and must be overruled.

Turning now to the main question argued, whether, in the absence of an express charge on the temple properties, a decree could be given against such properties or not, it seems to me the learned District Judge's view that it could not be given is not correct on the facts of this case. He has based his judgment entirely on the ruling in Swaminatha Aiyar v. Srinivasa Aiyar (1), which I am inclined to think is not properly applicable here. In that case though the debtor was a trustee and the loan was intended and utilized for the benefit of the trust the only contract between him and the lender was contained in a promissory-note pledging only his personal credit for the debt. The learned Judges say that he (the creditor) did not obtain any charge on the property but only a promise on the part of the debtor to re-pay the debt. In other words, no obligation had been imposed on the trust funds either by contract or by deed of charge. They do not, however, consider the position where a trustee acting within his powers of borrowing for necessary purposes of the trust has created by his contract a right of resort to the trust funds for re-payment of the debt which is the case before us. The English cases cited, Strickland v. Symons (3) and, Johnson, In re, Shearman v. Robinson (4), the observations in which are relied on by the learned Judges, do not seem to be in point here. The first was a case where a trustee carried on the business of a Lunatic Asylum when the marriage settlement which created the trust only authorised the sale of it for the benefit of the wife and children of the settlor. He had borrowed moneys for the business, but the carrying on of the business itself was unauthorised. The trustee, therefore, could not have validly borrowed on the credit of the trust funds and had not purported to do so. In such a case, as the Lord Chancellor, the Earl of Selbourne, points out: "there is no principle or authority for saying that if a trustee makes himself personally liable for goods the creditor thereby obtains a lien on the trust property." There was in this case "no dedication or application of the trust property to trade purposes and no provisions that the business was to be carried on by the trustee," as the Lord Chancellor says. These observations obviously do not apply to a case like the present where the head of a temple having to carry on, in the proper discharge of the duties of his office, the worship in the temple finds himself without the necessary funds to do so and borrows with an express stipulation that the creditor should be repaid from the temple properties. The second case referred to by the learned Judges, Johnson, In re; Shearman v. Robinson (4), was one of an executor under the Will of a trader, who was directed to carry on the trade employing a specific portion of the estate for the purpose. He had incurred debts in the course of that trade and for trade purposes. It was not disputed that the executor was personally liable for those debts, the argument being only that as he was entitled to be indemnified from the estate of the testator earmarked for the trade, the creditors could also have direct recourse to such assets for payment of their debts. Jessel, M. R., held that the creditors were only entitled to stand in the place of the executors, as the debts were created on his personal responsibility, and claim payment from such assets only when the executor himself is not in default and is entitled to the indemnity. This is the principle of subrogation which obviously cannot be availed of without reference to the estate of the account between the trustee and the cestuique trust. That case again seems to have no bearing on the case before us.

On the other hand, there is a recent decision of this Court in Lakshmindra-thirtha Swamiar v. Raghavendra Rao (5) which is in point. There, as here, the debt was incurred by a Pandarasannadhi, the head of a Mutt, who is necessarily a Sanyasi and for purposes binding on the Mutt. There was no charge on the Mutt properties. It was nevertheless held that those properties could be held liable for the debt. There was no evidence there that the debt was borrowed on the credit of the Mutt properties, as we should take it there is in the present case; the learned Judges, however, presumed it from the fact that the trustee was a Sanyasi. It is not necessary to decide whether we should follow them in raising that presumption, for here we have proof that it was arranged that the debt was to be met from the Mutt funds. But it is an authority for holding that for a debt properly borrowed on the credit of Mutt funds, Mutt properties can be made liable; and to that extent I am prepared to follow it, though I should not be taken as concurring in all the observations of the learned Judges.

We have again the case of Srimath Daivasikamani Pandarasannidhi v. Noor Mohamed Routhan (6), where a decree was given against the Mutt properties for the price of articles purchased by the Mutadhipati for the use of the Mutt. There was no question raised there that the purchases were on the personal credit of the Mutadhipati, on the other hand I think it was assumed that the purchases were on the credit of the Mutt funds. The learned Judges refused to follow the rule as to executors and pointed out that the powers of a trustee or manager of a temple in borrowing were similar to those of a guardian of an infant heir following the observations of the Privy Council in Konwar Doorganath Roy v. Ram Chunder Sen (7). A debt incurred for the purpose of carrying on the worship in the temple is clearly for a necessary purpose and is, in my opinion, recoverable from the temple funds. Though doubt has been thrown on the correctness of the decision in Srimath Daivasikamani Pandarasannidhi v. Noor Mahomed Routhan (6), in Swaminatha Aiyar v. Srinivasa Aiyar (1) above cited, it has been followed by Spencer, J. in Lakshmindrathirtha Swamiar v. Raghavendra Rao (5) and I am also inclined to follow it where the debt is not incurred purely on the personal liability of the debtor.

For the above reasons I would set aside the decree of the District Judge and restore that of the Subordinate Judge with costs here and in the Court below payable out of the temple funds.

Ayling, J.—I agree.

Appeal from an order of the District Judge, Allahabad, dated the 7th July 1922.

FACTS.—The Peoples' Industrial Bank Ltd., Allahabad, having gone into liquidation, the liquidator applied to the Court to put the appellant's name on the list of contributories. A notice was served on the appellant who filed objections through a Vakil on the 11th November 1916. No date for the hearing of the objections was fixed for a long time, but ultimately the 13th August 1920 was fixed, notice of which was served on the Vakil. On the date fixed neither the Vakil nor the objector appeared, and on the 13th August 1920 the District Judge dismissed the objections ex parte. On the 22nd March 1922 the appellant applied to the District Judge for setting aside the ex parte order and for hearing the objections on the ground that in spite of his repeated enquiries, he did not come to know when and what date was fixed. The application was dismissed on the ground that time for presenting it was only 3 weeks from the date of the order (section 169 of the Indian Companies Act VI of 1882) and, therefore, the application was time-barred.

Mr. Janaki Prasad, for the Appellant.

Mr. A. Sanyal, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—We have decided that it would be in the interests of justice to set aside the ex parte order and to remit this case to the learned District Judge to hear the application on the merits. Our grounds for doing so are as follows:—It is not desirable to disturb the established practice. The learned Judge's attention was drawn to section 169 of the old Act of 1882 which governs the Peoples' Industrial Bank Ltd. in liquidation, but his attention was not drawn to the authorities, such as they are, under that section. In 1894 the Bombay High Court* decided that section 169 did not apply to an application to set aside an ex parte order. Sir George Knox decided much the same thing in the year 1893 reported in the case of Mussoorie Bank Ltd. v. Himalaya Bank Ltd. (1). In England the view taken under the same section is that a certain amount of latitude is allowed, because in these matters of winding up, the previous orders of the Court are not based upon issues which have been formulated as they are in an ordinary suit with pleadings, and the time for appealing is very short. In view of this consistent practice, we have come to the conclusion that the learned Judge, although it was a very natural view to take and we might have taken it ourselves if it had not been for the view which has been taken in the past, was wrong in holding that section 169 was an absolute bar. The costs of this appeal must abide the result of the application to the learned Judge on the merits, which should be restored to his list and be disposed of as soon as he conveniently can. The costs will include fees on the higher scale.

It would be a great hardship to bind an alleged contributor by the representation by a Vakil engaged four years before since when, presumably, everybody had forgotten all about it.

Section 11 of the Indian Soldiers (Litigation) Act applies only to those cases where the plaintiff is an Indian Soldier on the date of the institution of the suit, and has no application to a case where the plaintiff has been an Indian Soldier but has ceased to be one on the date of the institution of the suit. JUDGMENT—The land in suit formerly belonged to the plaintiff and his brother Nizam-ud-Din. In 1900 during the plaintiff's minority, his mother acting as his guardian and Nizam-ud-Din orally sold the land to the 3rd defendant and had mutation effected. The plaintiff brought his suit, challenging the validity of the sale, on the 2nd July 1921. He was born on the 4th October 1894 so that he attained majority on the 4th October 1912 but he contends that under Act IX of 1918 the time during which he was serving under War conditions is to be excluded in computing the period of limitation, that time began on the 18th March 1915 and that the suit is, therefore, not barred by limitation.

The First Court dismissed the suit, finding that it was barred by limitation as the plaintiff's War Service began on the 9th June 1916, and also that the sale was necessary and for the plaintiff's benefit.

The District Judge on appeal has differed from the First Court on both points and given the plaintiff a decree. On the point of limitation he holds that the period commencing from the 1st March 1915, the date of the plaintiff's enlistment in the army is to be excluded.

The first two defendants, who purchased the land from the third defendant, have preferred a second appeal.

The learned District Judge is wrong in thinking that the period during which the plaintiff was serving under War conditions commenced when the plaintiff joined the army. It commenced when he was ordered on Field Service, as is clear from section 3 of Act IX of 1918. So that if he were entitled to army deduction for the period during which he was serving under War conditions it would be for a period commencing on the 9th June 1916; as held by the First Court. But, as a matter of fact, Act IX of 1918 does not apply at all and no deduction can be allowed, as the plaintiff does not appear to have been a soldier at the time of the institution of the suit. Section 11, under which the period during which a plaintiff has been serving under War conditions is to be excluded, applies only where the plaintiff is an Indian Soldier. In this case the plaintiff, though he was formerly a soldier, had apparently ceased to be a soldier when he brought the suit.

The suit is barred by limitation having been instituted more than three years after the plaintiff had attained majority.

I accept the appeal, reverse the decree of the lower Appellate Court and restore that of the First Court dismissing the suit. The respondent will pay the appellants' costs throughout.

Second appeal against the decree of the Second Additional Subordinate Judge of Cawnpore, dated the 1st of August 1921.

Mr. Mangal Prasad Bhargawa, for the Appellant.

Mr. Kailas Chandra Mital, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit by some of the zemindars for possession of certain trees and the site of a house which belonged originally to a tenant named Jagan Nath and which were sold to the defendant by his widow Musammât Hiria. The Court below has found that the four trees which were in dispute belonged to Jagan Nath and that his widow had a right to sell them. In this respect it overruled the Trial Court which had decreed the entire suit. As regards the house both Courts have found that Musammât Hiria had no right to sell and have decreed the suit. The defendant Ram Nath appeals. The plaintiffs Mata Sahai, Gulzari and Darshan Singh have filed cross-objections.

The appellant set up a custom entitling tenants to sell their houses. The Courts below found that, though some instances of sale have occurred, no such custom is established. This is a finding of fact based on evidence and the appellant is not entitled to challenge it in second appeal. The pleas put forward in the memorandum of appeal are :

LAKSHMINDRA THIRTHA SWAMIAR v. VIBHUDAPRIYA THIRTHASWAMIAR.

(1), That the defendant being one of the proprietary body he has a right to purchase.

(2) That by custom the tenants have a right of transfer.

(3) That the plaintiffs alone could not sue without joining the other zemindars of the village.

(4) Estoppel under section 115 of the Evidence Act.

(5) That the plaintiffs are not entitled to sue for the share of the house sold without partition.

The second ground of appeal has already been dealt with. As regards the first plea, if the tenant has no transferable right it does not matter whether the purchaser is one of the proprietary body or an outsider. As regards the third plea, if some of the proprietors do not wish to join in the suit it does not prevent the plaintiffs from claiming joint possession.

As regards the fourth plea, it has not been shown in what way any question of estoppel arises.

The fifth plea has not been argued. All the grounds of appeal fail.

Some of the cross-objections challenge the finding that Jagan Nath was the owner of these four trees, but as the respondents are not in a position to aver that there was no evidence to support this finding it must be accepted.

It is next argued that in the absence of proof of special custom Jagan Nath, though in possession of the trees, had no right to transfer them. The lower Court relies on the ruling in Jaleswar Sahu v. Raj Mangal (1), and I agree with the lower Court that whatever views may formerly have been held the presumption now is that a tenant has a right to cut and sell trees planted by him.

Thirdly and lastly, it has been argued that the order of the Court below is not in accordance with the intention of the judgment. It appears from the Munsif's judgment that there were more than four trees in the grove but that it was admitted by the defendant's witness that only four trees belonged to Jagan Nath. The learned Subordinate Judge has also stated clearly that only four trees are in dispute, but he seems to have thought that the groves consisted of those four trees only. On a comparison with the Munsif's judgment and with the pleadings this appears to be incorrect. Accordingly, accepting the cross-objections in part, modify the decree of the Court below to this extent that the decree given by the Munsif for joint possession of the grove will hold good except to the extent of four trees. If more than four trees remain and if any dispute should arise as to the identity of these trees it will be settled in the execution department. In other respects the cross-objections are dismissed. The appeal is also dismissed with costs.

As most of the cross-objections have been dismissed the parties will bear their own costs of the cross-objections.

A shēbat or malathipathi cannot alienate mutt properties unless constrained to do so by unavoidable necessity. The same rule applies to the creation of debts binding on mutt properties, for the enforcement of such debts may result in the alienation of such properties through Court-sale. [p. 112, col. 1.]

In order to establish necessity for a debt it must be shown that the debt was incurred for a legitimate purpose and there was financial necessity to borrow to the extent to which the debt was incurred. [p. 113, col. 1.]

Appeal against a decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, South Kanara, in Original Suit No. 44 of 1919.

Mr. A. Krishnanswami Iyer, for the Appellants.—The question is whether a debt incurred by a prior Matathipathi is binding on the mutt assents in the hands of his successor. The debt was incurred during the Pariyaya period, when the head of one of the 8 Udipi mutts in his turn takes charge of the worship of the Krishna temple. The income from the mutt itself is over Rs. 15,000 and that from the temple nearly Rs. 25,000, in all Rs. 40,000 a year. The plaint debt of Rs. 15,000 and odd is alleged to have been incurred during the Pariyaya period for feeding Brahmins.

There was no legal obligation on the head of a mutt to conduct feeding on such a lavish scale and hence the purpose is not legitimate. The income itself is ample and there was no financial necessity to borrow either. A Matathipathi must bear his expenses only from the current income over which he has full powers. An alienation of the mutt properties could only be justified for unavoidable necessity, since otherwise the trust itself will be extinguished. Konwar Doorganath Roy v. Ram Chunder Sen (1),

(1) 2 C. 341; 4 I. A. 52; 3 Sar. P. C. J. 681; 1 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 508, (F. C.)

Nallayappa Pillian v. Ambalavana Pandara Sannadhi (2).

The creation of debts binding on the institution stands on the same footing. The head of a mutt cannot borrow merely for maintaining its dignity, Pasupatia Pillai v. Sundarappier (3), nor for carrying on pompous festivities, Adiraja Arsu v. Budan Sahib (4).

Their Lordships Coutts-Trotter and Ramesam, JJ., have recently held that feeding Brahmins during Pariyaya period is not a necessary purpose.

Secondly, even if the debt was for a necessary purpose, in the absence of a charge or a contract, the lender cannot have direct recourse against the mutt properties. His right is only to be subrogated to the trustees' rights of re-imbursement, if any: see Strickland v. Symons (5). The English Law is well-settled.

A specific charge is essential to render trust estate liable: see Johnson, In re, Shearman v. Robinson (6), Evans, In re, Evans v. Evans (7), Farhall v. Farhall (8). The English law has been followed in a series of decisions in this Court. Swaminatha Aiyar v. Srinivasa Aiyar (9), Ammalu Ammal v. Namagiri Ammal (10), Batchu Ramijogaya v. Vajjula Jaganmadham (11).

The provisions of section 32 of the Trusts Act also support the same principle. Byramji Rustumji Heerabai (12); see also Walling v. Lewis (13); Farhall v. Farhall (8).

LAKSHMINDRATHIRTHA SWAMIAR v. VIBHUDAPRIYA THIRTHA SWAMIAR.

Even where a document is executed by trustees as such, direct recourse can be had only against the person and not against the trust estate. Robinson's Settlement, In re, Gant v. Hobbs (14).

The case relating to the liability of mutt properties for debts contracted by heads of mutt, reported in Sundarasam Chettiar v. Viswanatha Pandarasannadhi (15), is based on the existence of a specific contract. No such contract is pleaded in the present case. The decision in Lakshmindrathirtha Swamiar v. Raghavendra Rao (16) is wrong and is opposed to principle.

Mr. T. Rangachariar:—The liability of the mutt properties and the binding character of the debts depend on the necessities of the institution which are governed by custom. An alienation or debt, if in accordance with the usage of the institution, will be binding. The test is whether the obligations are imposed by the practice of the institution. Peary Mohan Mukerji v. Norendra Nath Mukerji (17).

The powers of the Matathipathi, as recognised by the decisions, are:—

(1) to spend all income for carrying on the worship,

(2) to pledge all income present and future for the purpose,

(3) to alienate for necessary purposes ex corpore. See Prosunno Kumari Debye v. Golab Chand Baboo (18); Ramayyan-gar v. Krishnayyengar (19); Konwar Doorganath Roy v. Ram Chunder Sen (1); Pandara Sannadhi v. Karutha Ravuthan (20); Palaniappa Chetty v. Sreemath Deivast-kamony Pandara Sannadhi (21); Ram Parkash Das v. Anand Das (22).

The practice of this mutt as well as of the other seven Udipi mutts has been to feed the Brahmins on particular occasions and this practice furnishes the only guide in ascertaining the necessity of the transaction. See Srimath. Daivasikamani. Pandarasannadhi v. Noor Mahomed Routhan (23), Laksh-mindrathirtha Swamiar v. Raghavendra Rao (16). The observation in Vidyapurna Thirtha Swami v. Vidyannidhi Thirtha Swami (24); as to necessity for expenses is obiter.

The debt in this case was incurred for a purpose regarded as legitimate by the usage of all the mutts. It has been incurred for a mutt purpose, hence the debt is prima facie binding on the mutt properties.

In this case the Matathipathis accumulated the income during non-Pariyaya period and spent for Pariyaya periods. He may contemplate discharge of debt by future income. See Peary Mohan Mukerji v. Norendra Nath Mukerji (17).

The origin of the principle of giving decree only against trustee or executor personally is explained in Muir v. City of Glasgow (25) as based on the presumption of personal contracts under the English Law. The question is really one of intention of parties and construction of contracts. See Sundaresam Chettiar v. Viswanatha Pandarasannadhi (15); Regulla Jogayya v. Venkatarathnamma (26). There is no doubt that in the present case when head of one mutt executes a note to the head of another, the mutt properties are intended to be rendered liable because process against person is not contemplated. See also Srimath. Daivasikamani Pandarasannadhi v. Noor Mahomed Routhan (23).

LAKSHMINDRĀ THIRTHA SWAMĪAR V. VIBHĪUDAPRIYA THIRTHASWAMĪAR.

The judgments beginning from Swaminatha Aiyar v. Srinivasa Aiyar (9) and Ammathu Ammal v. Namagiri Ammal (10) are inapplicable to the case of mutts. Sundaraesam Chettiar v. Viswanath Pandaraannadhi (15) establishes this. The expenses are legitimate and necessary and in accordance with the usage of the institution and are, therefore, binding not only on the income in the hands of the successor but also on the corpus.

JUDGMENT.

Krishnan, J.—This is an appeal by the defendant against the decree of the Subordinate Judge of South Kanara in Original Suit No. 44 of 1919 on his file. The suit was brought by the Swami of Adamar mutt in Udipi against the present Swami of Sirur mutt to recover from the assets of that mutt the amount claimed to be under a "Samprathi-patti" or settlement of accounts signed by the late Swami and marked as Exhibit A. The defendant denied the genuineness of Exhibit A and the existence of the debt and the admissibility of the document in evidence and he further pleaded that even if the debt was true it was not binding on the mutt or its properties as it was not contracted for any necessity or benefit of the mutt, the mutt having ample income to meet all its legitimate expenses.

On these pleadings two issues were framed, namely, whether the patti sued on was true and valid and receivable in evidence and whether the debt was binding on the defendant's mutt. The Subordinate Judge found both these issues in plaintiff's favour and gave him a decree as sued for. The appellant before us has not attacked the finding on the first issue; his learned Vakīl, however, contended that the finding on the second issue should have been in the negative and in his client's favour and the suit should have been dismissed.

We have thus to consider in this appeal whether the debt sued on was borrowed by the late Swami of Sirur for a purpose binding on the mutt properties in his successor's hands. Now, it is clear law that a shebait or Matahipathi cannot alienate mutt properties unless constrained to do so by unavoidable necessity, and the same rule must apply to the creation of debts binding on mutt properties, for the enforcement of such debts may result in the alienation of such properties through Court-sale.

The rule regarding alienation is laid down very clearly by the Privy Council in the recent case of Palaniappa Chetty v. Sreemath Deivasikamony Pandara Sannadhi (21). Their Lordships refer to the previous decisions in Prosunno Kumari Debya v. Golab Chand Baboo (18), Koowar Doorganath Roy v. Ram Chunder Sen (1) and Hunoomanpersaud Panday v. Babooee Munraj Koonweree (27) and explain that the expression "benefit to the estate" as used in them, though not capable of a precise definition, meant, "the preservation of the estate from extinction, the defence against hostile litigation affecting it, the protection of it or portions from injury or deterioration by inundation and such like things" see page 718*. Here we have no question of benefit to the estate but only whether there was no necessity to incur the debt.

The position of the head of a mutt and his powers were considered by the Privy Council in deciding whether he could be described as a trustee within the meaning of Art. 134 of the Limitation Act in Vidya Varuthi Thirtha Swamigal v. Balusami Ayyar (28), and in that judgment their Lordships again affirm the proposition that, except for unavoidable necessity, the head of a mutt cannot create any interest in the mutt property to enure beyond his lifetime.

There is no doubt an observation in Sammantha Pandara v. Selappa Chetti (29) that: "Acting for the whole institution, he (the matahipathi) may contract debts for purposes connected with his matam, and debts so contracted might be recovered from the matam property, and would devolve as a liability on his successor to the extent of the assets received by him" and this passage has been quoted by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Vidya Varuthi Thirtha Swamigal v. Balusami Ayyar (28). Reliance has been placed on it by the learned Vakil for the respondent for his argument that it is sufficient that the debt is shown to be incurred for matam purposes and not for the matathipathi's private purposes to make it binding on matam properties and that it was not necessary to prove any necessity for the borrowings. In my opinion this is a clear misreading of the observation. I understand it to refer to necessary purposes connected with the matam and that is the proposition established by the authorities.

I do not think it necessary to discuss all the authorities cited to us, as these recent Privy Council rulings are clear on this point. It follows that we cannot uphold the plaintiff's claim to have the plaintiff's debt paid out of the mutt properties in the defendants' hands, unless there is clear proof of necessity for the borrowing. There are two things to be considered in this connection. The borrowing may be for a purpose which is not in itself justifiable at all; again, the purpose may be a legitimate one, but nevertheless the matathipathi having enough funds of the mutt in his hands at the time there might be no necessity to borrow at all to meet the expenses; in other words, the question may be one of the legitimacy of the purpose for the debt or of the financial necessity to borrow. Now, it was argued for the respondent that it was only the question of financial necessity which would depend upon the amount of money available to the late Swami to meet the expenses that was put in issue in the lower Court and not the legitimacy of the expenses themselves. I am unable to accept this argument. The defendant's written statement, paragraph 3, says, after pleading that the mutt had ample funds to meet all necessary expenses, that "the debts are not valid and binding against the defendant's mutt or its properties, as they were not and could not have been contracted for the benefit of the mutt," and the wording of Issue No 2 is wide enough to include both objections.

I shall now turn to consider whether debts in question are proved to have been incurred for necessary purposes. Exhibit A is a settlement of accounts of the borrowings less re-payments from July 1902 to August 1916. The total amount of debt with interest was Rs. 27,435-10-11. The re-payments with counter interest came to Rs. 11,463-6-3, leaving a balance of Rs. 15,971-10-8 for which Exhibit A was executed. A perusal of the accounts and receipts in Exhibit B shows that the most part of this balance was borrowed during what is known as Pariyaya period of the Sirur Swami and in connection with the Pariyaya expenses and for building a Bhojanasala or dining hall during that period, the previous borrowings having been mostly re-paid. To understand the case it is necessary to explain what is meant by the term Pariyaya. There are in the town of Udipi in South Kanara eight mutts presided over by eight matathipathies.

Plaintiff and defendant are two of those matathipathies. Affairs of each mutt are looked over by its own matathipathi. They are all endowed with separate properties of considerable value. Besides these mutts there is a Krishna temple in the same place in which there is an idol of Sri Krishna which is worshipped. This temple is also richly endowed; but there is no Swami or Dharmakartha to manage its affairs. Its affairs are managed by the eight matathipathies in rotation, each taking the management for two years at a time, beginning from January 15th of one year and ending in the January 15th of the third year. The turn of each Swami is fixed according to custom. This method of management is called the Pariyaya system and the Swami who is for the time being the manager is called the Pariyaya Swami for those years and the period of two years during which he is the manager is called his Pariyaya period. The tradition about the way in which these eight mutts and its temple came to be founded and the way in which their affairs are carried on is given in the South Kanara District Manual. It is obligatory on each Swami, when his turn comes, to perform the Pariyaya for the two years of his period. During that time he is entitled to get all the income of the Krishna temple which, besides the income from its lands, includes certain payments from the British and Mysore Government and also Kanikais or offerings from the devotees and pilgrims who come to the temple to worship. It is also in evidence that the Swamis are able to save every year substantial sums of money from the income of their own mutt properties after meeting their current expenditure. It would seem that the Swamis were in the habit of adding these moneys also to their income from the Krishna temple during the Pariyaya period to meet the Pariyaya expenses. It is the plaintiff's case that all these moneys are insufficient to meet the Pariyaya expenses and that it is necessary and usual for each Swami to borrow Rs. 30,000 to Rs. 40,000 to make up the deficiency for the two years. Plaintiff says that the plaintiff debt was mainly incurred in this manner to meet the Pariyaya expenses of the Sirur Swami.

It is in evidence that the income of Krishna temple from all sources would amount to about Rs. 25,000 to Rs. 30,000 a year or Rs. 50,000 to Rs. 60,000 for the two years. The income of the Sirur mutt is said to be about Rs. 10,000 to Rs. 15,000 a year, from which about Rs. 5,000 to Rs. 6,000 could be saved in ordinary years. During the Pariyaya period the Swami brings away his own idol from his mutt to the Krishna temple and the expenses of his own mutt are thus reduced. The Swami was thus in a position to utilise Rs. 10,000 to Rs. 15,000 of the income of his own mutt during the two years for the Pariyaya expenses. It is also in evidence that the Sirur Swami had about Rs. 30,000 in hand saved from his mutt income for the previous years which he added to the other moneys. As explained by this Court in Sammantha Pandara v. Sellappa Chetti (29) and other cases and accepted by the Privy Council in Vidya Varulhi Thirtha Swanngal v. Balusami Ayyar (28), the matathipathi has a large dominion over his surplus income and he is not bound to account for it and his discretion to use it as he likes is unfettered. It was thus open to the Sirur Swami to use that accumulated amount for the Pariyaya expenses. Thus it would seem that the Sirur Swami had about a lakh of rupees at least to meet the Pariyaya expenses for his term of two years. Plaintiff, however, contended that this amount was insufficient for the purpose, as the expenses came to about Rs. 1,30,000 at least and borrowing was necessary. It may be conceded that all the moneys the late Sirur Swami got from his income and his earnings and his borrowings he spent for his Pariyaya expenses, and for building the dining hall. But before we can justify his borrowing it must be shown that he was under a legal obligation to incur expenditure in the manner and to the extent that he did. The Subordinate Judge has not considered the case from this point of view at all.

There are no doubt certain Poojas and ceremonies which have necessarily to be performed and any reasonable expenditure incurred for carrying them out, will be binding on the mutt. But there is no obligation to have the ceremonies performed on the scale that the Sirur Swami did. It was argued for the respondent that the scale on which the ceremonies should be conducted must be taken to be fixed by the long continued practice of the institution. Even so, there is no evidence on which we can find that any definite and clear practice existed with regard to that. It is more likely, as one of plaintiff's own witnesses P. W. No. 4, says that there is "no rule to the effect that any particular amount should be spent for the Pariyaya, but all the ceremonies should be performed according to mamool (or usage). The different mutts are not equally wealthy, the poorer ones must necessarily perform the ceremonies on a smaller scale so long as no ceremony is omitted. One main item of expenses incurred is the feeding of the Brahmins in large numbers every day throughout the year. That evidently is a very elastic item over which much money could be spent or considerable economy exercised."

There is really no evidence in the case on which we can rely to show that it was necessary to borrow to meet the legitimate expenses of the Pariyaya. All that is attempted to be shown is that the money has been spent and that other Swamis have also been in the habit of borrowing during their time. Such evidence is quite inadequate in my view to show that there was necessity for borrowing the plaintiff debts.

As regards the Bhojanasala, the Sirur Swami not only seems to have re-built but put an upstairs to it. Surely it is not shown that there was any necessity to do all these. A sum of Rs. 1,000 of the plaintiff debt was borrowed for the construction of this dining hall, but it is not shown whether it was borrowed for the construction of the hall downstairs or for the room upstairs. There was clearly no necessity to build the upstairs as it never existed before. It follows, therefore, that for this debt also necessity is not shown for borrowing.

The failure to produce the accounts of the Sirur mutt was commented upon by the learned Vakil for the respondent and we were asked to draw from that fact an inference that the borrowing was for necessity. It is not very clear on the evidence that the defendant is in possession of those documents and is wilfully keeping them back. Secondly, it is difficult to see how these accounts will help to show that the money borrowed for the Pariyaya expenses were borrowed for necessity. In the view I am taking, for all legitimate expenses the funds in hand were sufficient.

As regards the debts borrowed just prior to the Pariyaya period there is no evidence why they were wanted. It follows that there was no necessity proved to borrow the plaint amount and the plaintiff is not, therefore, entitled to recover it from the mutt lands.

The learned Vakil for the appellant also contended that in any event plaintiff is not entitled to have direct recourse to the mutt properties for his debt, as there was no express charge or mortgage for it on them, and he relied on Swaminatha Aiyar v. Srinivasa Aiyar (9) and also certain English cases of executors and trustees such as Strickland v. Symons (5) and Evans, In re, Evans v. Evans (7), Farhall v. Farhall (8), Robinson's Settlement, In re, Gant v. Hobbs (14) and Johnson, In re, Shearman v. Robinson (6). But it has been held in India that this rule does not apply to the case of matathi-pathies; See Shankar Bharati Swami v. Venkapa Naik (30), Srimath Datvasikamani Pandarasannidhi v. Noor Mahomed Routhan (23), Lakshmindrathirtha Swamiar v. Raghuvendra Rao (16) and Sundaresam Chettiar v. Viswanatha Pandara Sannadhi (15). In the view I am taking it is not, however, necessary to decide this question.

It was finally contended that, as the debt was found to be true and subsisting, it is binding on the debtor, the late Swami, personally and a decree should, therefore, be given against his personal assets, if any. There is no express prayer to this effect in the plaint but the defendant's Vakil does not object to such a decree being passed and I think, therefore, such a relief may be given.

(30) 9 B. 422; 5 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 281;

In the result the decree of the lower Court is modified by confining it to a decree only against the personal assets, if any, of the late Sirur Swami in defendant's hands. The plaintiff will pay defendant's costs in both Courts, as he has failed in his claim against the mutt, but he will get his costs from the personal assets of the late Swami.

Ramesam, J.—The plaintiff is the Swami of Adamar mutt in Udipi (South Kanara District). The defendant is the Swami of the Sirur Mutt in the same place. He is now a minor represented by a guardian ad litem. These two and the six other mutts were founded according to the tradition by Madwacharya, the founder of the duel or Dwaita philosophy. Each mutt is presided over by a Sanyasi or Swami and has its own separate endowments. Besides the eight mutts, there is, at Udipi, a temple of Krishna with income of its own. Each Swami takes charge of the temple for a period of two years, so that the term (technically called Pariyaya) of a particular Swami recurs once in 16 years. The evidence in the case shows that the Swamis have taken to the celebration of the respective Pariyaya in recent times on a grand scale. It is said that the defendant's predecessor had borrowed from the plaintiff, among others, for the expenses of the last Pariyaya of the Sirur mutt of (January 1914-1916) and on accounts being taken, it was found that the Sirur Swami, was indebted to the plaintiff to the extent of Rs. 15,971-10-8 on the 14th August 1916, (Exhibit A). The present suit is brought to recover the said amount with interest. The Subordinate Judge gave a decree to the plaintiff and the defendant appeals.

The appellant has not pressed before us the grounds relating to the genuineness of Exhibit A. He confined himself to two points, (1) that the debt has not been shown to be for justifiable necessity and, therefore, not binding on the defendant's mutt and (2) in any event, the mutt is not liable, as the debt was not charged on the properties on the mutt.

The first point was the subject of the second issue. The evidence of the plaintiff's third, fourth and seventh witnesses shows that the Krishna temple gets a Tasdiak (or allowance) of 13 thousand rupees from the British and Mysore Governments. Rs. 500 cash and 500 muras of rice (after paying Government revenue) from its immoveable property and Rs. 10,000 or more by way of offerings from pilgrims (A mura of rice is said to be Rs. 6). The item of offerings from pilgrims is a variable figure. The income of the Krishna temple may be taken to be about Rs. 26,500 per annum in the years in question. The income of the Sirur mutt according to P. W. No. 4 is 2,200 muras of rice (out of which 1,200 muras are spent for the ordinary expenses of the mutt) and a cash rent of Rs. 7,000. There remains a net income of Rs. 13,000. Accepting these estimates, the combined income of the temple and the mutt amounted to Rs. 39,500 per annum. It is said that this income was not adequate for the expenses of the Pariyaya and the Sirur Swami had to borrow for defraying them. A list of his debts amounting to Rs. 25,000 is given by P. W. No. 4. As the Sirur Swami had in his hand savings to the extent of Rs. 30,000 he must have spent more than a lakh and Rs. 30,000 towards his Pariyaya expenses. The question is whether this expenditure can be regarded as justified so as to make the mutt in the hands of his successor liable for the amounts borrowed. It is conceded for the plaintiff, P. W. No. 4, that there is no rule to the effect that a particular amount must be spent for the Pariyaya. But all the vinayogas should be performed without omission according to mamool.

P. W. No. 3 says that two lakhs of rupees are required for the expenses. P. W. No. 4 similarly says that 15,000 muras of rice and one or $1\frac{1}{4}$ lakh of rupees are required. P. W. No. 8, the Swami of another mutt, gives details. About 15,000 muras of rice, firewood costing Rs. 6,000, plantain tree garden costing 500 muras and provision costing Rs. 62,000 are required. Of these about 12 muras of rice are required for the naivedya (see P. W. No. 4), the ceremony of dedicating food to the deity. After the formal dedication the food is distributed to Brahmins. Now, it is well-known that the religious ceremony of the naivedya can be performed at an expenses of an anna or Rs. 10,000 according to the capacity of the worshipper. This is conceded by the learned Vakils for the plaintiff. No Hindu text has been cited to show that a particular quantity of food must be offered for the naivedya. It depends on the capacity and on the charitable disposition of the worshipper, for the offering ultimately feeds the poor. Beyond the evidence that P. W. No. 8 spent a similar amount or his Pariyaya and that the deceased Sirur Swami contracted a debt of Rs. 30,000 for earlier Pariyaya there is nothing to prove a mamool or usage. The 8th witness says that at the Pariyaya festival (first 15 days of the period) about 10,000 persons were fed every day. During the other festivals about 2,000 persons are fed per day and 1,000 persons are fed daily at other times (see P. W. No. 4). It is obvious that the feeding charges have been responsible for the enormous increase in recent times of the Pariyaya expenses. It is idle to pretend that the feeding could have gone on anything like this scale in all the six centuries during which these mutts existed or even in the earlier years of the last century. When the witnesses say so many muras are required for the expenses, all that they mean and could mean is that the quantities stated are required, if the festival is to be carried on in the manner the Swamis are now doing it. In my opinion no usage or custom is proved. As their Lordships of the Privy Council pointed out in Palaniappa Chetty v. Sreemath Devaskamony Panararasannadhi (21) it would be an instance of the misapplication of the word 'custom' and of forgetfulness of the essentials of a custom which modifies the ordinary law to say that the mutts are bound by custom to feed every Brahmin that comes to the Pariyaya (as is stated in the South Kanara Manual). The numbers may increase as the years roll on and the result of carrying on the ideal of feeding every one that comes may be the destruction of the institutions themselves. The Swamis have a wide power over their income and Courts do not ordinarily scrutinize their manner of exercising it so long as they do not seek to bind their successors. If a successor is sought to be bound the borrowing must be for justifiable necessity.

LAKSHMINDRA THIRTHA SWAMIAR v. VIBHUDAPRIYA THIRTHASWAMIAR.

Privy Council observe: "It is well-settled law that the power of the Mahant to alienate debutter property is, like the power of the manager for an infant heir, limited to cases of unavoidable necessity" citing Prosunno Kumari Debya v. Golab Chand Baboo (18), and Konwar Doorganath Roy v. Ram Chander Sen (1). In these two cases, the leading case of Hunoomanpersaud Panday v. Eabooee Munraj Koonweree (27) a case of dealing with the manager of infant heir was relied on as the guide in respect of dealings with debutter property. See also Vidya Varuthi Thirtha Swamigal v. Balusami Ayyar (28). The present appeal is not a case of conferring benefits on the estate; such as the preservation of the estate from extinction, the defence against hostile litigation affecting it, the protection of it or portion from injury or deterioration by inundation and such like things. See Palaniappa Chetty v. Sreemath Devasi Kamony Pandarasannadhi In Pearcy Mohan Mukerji v. Norendra (21), Nath Mukerjee (17) the expenses in respect of which the shebait sought reimbursement, were either incurred in defending his position as shebait or performing the obligation imposed upon him by the original Will. In this case there is no proof of the obligation imposed upon the mutts at the time of the foundation. The learned Vakil for the plaintiffs relies on the following sentence in Sammantha Pandara v. Sellappa Chetti (29): "Acting for the whole institution he may contract debts for purposes connected with his matam, and debts so contracted might be recovered from the matam property and would devolve as a liability on his successor to the extent of the assets received by him." I do not think that the learned Judges who decided Sammantha Pandara v. Sellappa Chetti (29) or the Judicial Committee who quoted the whole paragraph in Vidya Varuthi Thirtha Swamigal v. Balusami Ayyar (28) for a different purpose, meant to lay down that a debt, however extravagant and unnecessary it may be, incurred in the performance of festivities and ceremonies of the mutt, are binding on the mutt in the hands of a successor. Such a position would be inconsistent with the ratio decidendi of Prosunno Kumari Debya v. Golab Chand Baboo (18) and Konwar Doorganath Roy v. Ram Chandra

Sen (1) applied to mutts in Abhiram Goswami Mohant v. Shama Charan Naid (31) and Palaniappa Chetty v. Sreemath Devasikomany Pandarasannadhi (21). In Murugesam Pillai v. Manickansaka Desika Gnan (32) it was found that the head of the mutt at the very outset of his career was handicapped by two litigations costing nearly two lakhs. In my opinion, the suit debt is not binding on the mutt and this is the conclusion of my learned brother Coutts-Trotter, J., and myself in Second Appeal No. 1899 of 1920, (a case relating to a debt of the same mutt incurred for the same Parityaya of 1914-1916.) In Lakshmindra Thirtha Swamiar v. Raghavendra Rao (16) and Srimathi Devasikamany Pandarasannadhi v. Noor Mahomed Roultan (23) the cases came upon second appeal with a finding that the debt was incurred for necessary purposes. It may be that the law was too narrowly laid down in Vidyapurana Thirtha Swami v. Vidyamidhi Thirtha Swami (24) but this was set right in Devasigamany Pandarasannadhi v. Palaniappa Chetti (33), affirmed by the Privy Council in Palaniappa Chetty v. Sreemath Devasikamony Pandarasannadhi Pandara (21).

It is said that the Swami of Sirur mutt spent Rs. 24,000 for the repair of Bhojanasala. Apart from the fact that it is the duty of all the Swamis of the eight mutts to contribute to the expense of repairing the dining hall, the fact that an extension in the form of an upstairs was added to the old building disentitles the plaintiff from relying on this item. It is also conceded that only Rs. 1,000 out of the suit loan was spent on this item. I do not think this aspect of the plaintiff's case improves it.

Some complaint was made for the respondent that the question of justifiable necessity was not taken in the First Court. I think it was taken in paragraph 3 of the written statement. If this paragraph is not more explicit, this was because the allegation in the plaint is not more explicit and makes no reference to Pariyaya. The plaintiff had to prove necessity (on the second issue) and was not prejudiced by any vagueness in the plea in the written statement. The defendant was not the borrower and was not bound to plead more clearly. In the view of the conclusion on the first point, I do not think it necessary to express an opinion on the second point on which there is some conflict of opinion in this Court. The cases in Srimath Daivasikamani Pandarasannidhi v. Noor Mahomed Routhan (23) and Sundaresam Chettiar v. Viswanatha Pandarasannadhi (15) are against the appellant, but he is supported by the decision in Swaminatha Aiyar v. Srinivasa Aiyar (9). A number of English decisions have been cited before us relating to trusts and trustees: Strickland v. Symons (5), Johnson, In re, Shearman v. Robinson (6), (Jessell, M. R.) Farhall v. Farhall (8), Robinson's Settlement, In re, Gant v. Hobbs (14) in effect reversing Walling v. Lewis (13). After the expression of opinion in Vidya Varuthi Thirtha Swamigal v. Balusami Ayyar (28) that mutts are not in the nature of trusts in English Law it is not profitable to discuss these cases.

In the result the appeal is allowed so far as the mutt properties are concerned. But the plaintiff will be entitled to a decree for the suit sum against the assets of the late Swamiar in the hands of the defendants, such as uncollected arrears since collected or investments of the late Swami which have not been incorporated with the mutt properties.

I agree with my learned brother's order as to costs.

JUDGMENT.

Shah, Actg. C. J.—The question of law that arises in this appeal, relates to the interpretation of the provisions of the Indian Registration Act. The facts which have given rise to it are these. Apparently a sale-deed was executed in favour of the plaintiff by the defendants on November 20th 1919. It was presented by the plaintiff on March 20th 1920 for registration to the Sub-Registrar. The Sub-Registrar accepted it and issued notice to the defendants. The defendants appeared on April 7th 1920 and they made a statement which may be briefly described as admission of execution subject to the proviso that the sale was subject to the agreement that the plaintiff was to re-convey the property on payment of the amount mentioned in the sale-deed. He also accepted, in accordance with the rules under the Indian Registration Act, the penalty which was leviable in consequence of the admission of execution of the document not having been made within the time allowed by law under section 34 of the Indian Registration Act subject to the sanction of the Registrar, who would have power under the proviso to that section in case of urgent necessity or unavoidable accident to condone the delay. The Registrar did not sanction the acceptance of the penalty and did not condone the delay, with the result that, on April 15th 1920, the Sub-Registrar endorsed on the document his order refusing to register it on the ground that the Registrar had not given the necessary sanction for accepting the fine and for registering the document. Thereafter, the plaintiff made an application to the Registrar, but he saw no reason to revise the order already passed by him and refused the application on May 5th.

The present suit was filed by the plaintiff on May 19th 1920 under section 77 of the Indian Registration Act, for a decree directing the document to be registered. The defendants resisted the plaintiff's claim, and the Trial Court dismissed the suit on the ground that the suit was outside the scope of section 77 of the Indian Registration Act, and, therefore, not maintainable.

The plaintiff appealed to the District Court, and the First Class Subordinate Judge with appellate powers, who heard the appeal, came to the same conclusion and affirmed the decree of the Trial Court.

The plaintiff has appealed to this Court, and his contention briefly stated is, that the suit is within the scope of section 77 of the Indian Registration Act. On the other side, the contention is that it is outside the scope of section 77, because the order made by the Registrar is not covered by either clause (a) or clause (b) of section 76. It is urged that there is no refusal on the part of the Registrar to register the document within the meaning of clause (a), and that there is no refusal to direct the registration of the document under clause (b). By way of reply to these contentions it is urged on behalf of the appellant that the case is governed by clause (a) of subsection (1) of section 76, because in effect there is a refusal by the Registrar to register the document, and further that, in any event, it is covered by clause (b).

It is clear that, in order that the suit may be treated as maintainable under section 77, the order must be one of refusal to order the document to be registered under section 72 or section 76. I do not think that the order in question can be treated as a refusal to register by the Registrar within the meaning of section 76 (1) (a). We have to consider whether it amounts to a refusal to direct the document to be registered under section 72 as provided in section 76 (1) (b): I may mention here that it is difficult to appreciate the need for referring to section 72 in section 77, as the order of refusal by the Registrar under that section is included in section 76. The point is not easy to decide under the provisions of the Indian Registration Act. But it seems that the true answer to the question that arises is to be found in the correct interpretation of the facts as they occurred before the Sub-Registrar and the Registrar. It appears that the document was accepted for registration under section 24 of the Indian Registration Act, as it was presented within the time allowed by law. But the registration was refused by him on April 15th 1920 as the persons executing the document did not appear before the Registering Officer within the time allowed for the presentation of documents and as the Registrar did not condone the delay. We have not got on the record the copy of the application made by the plaintiff to the Registrar thereafter. But we have got a certified copy of the order which the Registrar made on that application. We have also got a certified copy of the entry made by the Sub-Registrar on April 15th in his own book, though it does not appear in terms whether that is Book No. 2 referred to in section 51 of the Indian Registration Act. From the nature of the extract put in, it appears to me that that Sub-Registrar really refused on April 15th 1920, to register this document on the ground stated in the endorsement. It is clear that the refusal to register was endorsed on the document, and there was also an entry in Book No. 2 of the reasons for such an order as required by section 71. Therefore, so far as the act of the Sub-Registrar is concerned, in spite of the previous reference to the Registrar which is referred to in his endorsement, it seems to me that it must be treated as an order under section 71. So far there is no difficulty.

The further step that is necessary to consider is, whether the application made by the plaintiff to the Registrar after that was an appeal under section 72 of the Indian Registration Act, and whether the order rejecting the application is an order refusing to direct the registration of the document under section 72. Section 72 is not referred to in terms in this order, and we do not know whether it was referred to in the application which the present plaintiff made to the Registrar on May 3rd. But under section 72 the refusal of the Sub-Registrar, such as we have in this case, is open to appeal to the Registrar; and no particular form of appeal is prescribed, at least none has been brought to our notice. The rules under the Act which have been referred to are not shown to contain any particular form in which the appeal provided by section 72 is to be made. We may, therefore, treat the application made by the plaintiff as an appeal. It is true that when the District Registrar refuses to direct the registration of the document under section 72, he has to record reasons for such order in his Book No. 2 as provided in section 76 (1). It does not appear on the record of this case that any such entry of the order was made by the Registrar in Book No. 2, and we must assume for the purposes of the present appeal that no such entry was made. It is conceivable that the Registrar merely dealt with the plaintiff's application as an application to revise the order which he had already communicated to the Sub-Registrar on the April 15th. But the omission of the Registrar to refer the order to the proper section of the Indian Registration Act, and to make the necessary entry in Book No. 2 as required by that Act, would not be a sufficient justification for our refusing to refer that order to the proper section, if it could be so referred.

After a careful consideration of the nature of the order and the steps taken in this particular case before the Sub-Registrar and the Registrar, I have come to the conclusion that the order made by the Registrar on May 5th was in substance an order under section 72 refusing to direct the registration of the document which the Sub-Registrar had already refused to register. It is no doubt a somewhat anomalous position that the power which the District Registrar has under the proviso to section 34 to condone the delay should be exercised by him in the first instance on a reference by the Sub-Registrar, which might be, for all that we know, without any knowledge of, and in the absence of, the parties concerned and that the parties should have a right to appeal to the same authority practically to re-consider the decision so arrived at by him at an earlier stage. But under section 72 the party has the right of appeal in the case of refusal, except when the refusal is based on the ground that the execution is denied, with which exception we are not concerned and for which exception a different procedure is provided. The present refusal of the Sub-Registrar to register the document would clearly be one in respect of which there could be an appeal to the Registrar. As there was an application to the Registrar after the refusal by the Sub-Registrar, it seems to me to be fair to treat that application as an appeal, and the order thereon as an order by the Registrar refusing to direct the registration of the document in question. When the order is read in that manner, it is quite clear that the suit is well within the scope of section 77. That is the view which I take of the nature of the orders made by the Sub-Registrar and the Registrar, and I am, therefore, of opinion that the suit is maintainable under section 77 of the Indian Registration Act.

I desire to add a word with reference to the argument based on the provisions of section 34 that no document shall be registered under the Act unless the persons executing such document, or their representatives, assigns or agents authorized as aforesaid, appear before the Registering Officer within the time allowed for presentation by the provisions of sections 23 to 26. It is urged that where the Registrar refuses to excuse the delay under the proviso to that section, the document cannot be registered and that, therefore, the suit for the registration of such a document is outside the scope of section 77. It is true that if section 34 is literally read, it does present an apparent difficulty; but it seems to me that section 34, which is subject to the provisions of various sections including section 77, is not intended to lay down any limitation upon the effect of sections 71 to 77 with which I have already dealt. It simply provides that the document shall not be registered unless the delay is excused. But where there is an order made by the Sub-Registrar refusing the registration as in the present case, and where the Registrar has refused to direct the registration of the document on an application which, as I have already stated, may be treated as an appeal, I do not see how the final order of the Registrar can be said not to satisfy the requirements of section 72 of the Indian Registration Act. In spite of the difficulty, which no doubt does arise in view of the apparent conflict between the provisions of section 34 and those of sections 71 to 77, I think that the present suit should be treated as falling within the scope of section 77 of the Indian Registration Act.

I would, therefore, allow the appeal, discharge the decrees of the lower Courts, and remand the suit to the Trial Court for disposal according to law. All costs up to date to be costs in the suit.

Bengal Regulation (XVII of 1806), ss. 7, 8—Anomalous mortgage—Suit for foreclosure, whether necessary to complete mortgagee's title—Limitation.

Under the Bengal Regulation XVII of 1806 a mortgagee of an anomalous mortgage, viz., a combined mortgage by conditional sale and usufructuary mortgage, is bound to institute proceedings for foreclosure within 12 years from the expiry of the period stipulated for redemption; and his title is incomplete until it is confirmed by a regular suit. [p. 127, col. 1.]

Appeal against a decree of the District Judge, Wardha, in Civil Appeal No. 55 of 1920, decided on 30th October 1920.

Sir B. K. Bose, Messrs. V. Bose and T. J. Kedar, for the Appellants.

Dr. H. S. Gour, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is a claim for the redemption of a mortgage and for the recovery of Rs. 4,099-3-6 excess profits said to have been taken by the mortgagee. The plaintiff recites that Narayan, the deceased father of the first plaintiff and of defendant No. 2, executed a mortgage-deed in favour of Sadasukh wald Parashram Marwadi, the deceased husband of Rupa, defendant No. 1, for Rs. 400 on 8th January 1872 and a sale-deed in respect of a two-anna share malguzari of Mauza Saoda for Rs. 275 the same day. Only the share was sold, no land.

By the mortgage a two-anna malguzari share in the village of Saoda was mortgaged, interest at Re. 1-4-0 per cent per mensem was payable, and the amount was to be re-paid on the 10th January 1876 and in default of payment the property was to stand foreclosed. The mortgagee was to manage the share, and take its profits towards interest from year to year and then towards principle.

The following fields unclaimed or given up by tenants came to defendant No. 1's deceased husband since he began to manage the share:—

Old field No.	New field No.	Area	Present	Year in which the field came in possession.
68	32	15-27	Str	1872-73
60	42	13-23	"	"
64	43	14-12	"	"
56	75	2-32	"	"
0	31	7-92	"	1899-1900
0	14	9-69	Khudkasi	1917-18
0	52	23-45	"	"

Of these, field No. 75 was sold to Jago Wani in 1902-03 for Rs. 275 after being in Sadasukh's possession from 1872-73. In the account for 1902-03 half share of the sale was credited by plaintiffs in their accounts. Similarly, defendant No. 1 took field No. 14 under a razinama in 1328 Fasli. Half of the consideration of that razinama being deducted from the plaintiffs' profits, possession of half of that share is also asked for. The plaintiffs filed with the plaint three statements A, B and C, A containing an account of the mortgage-deed and details of the net amount due to plaintiffs from defendant No. 1 after deducting annual re-payments. Statement B gives details of village profits of the share, and statement C gives details of the years in which fields came to the first defendant.

Plaintiff No. 1 and the second defendant have sold on the 19th May 1919 a 1-anna 6-pie share out of the 2-anna share to plaintiffs Nos. 2, 3 and 4. They have thereby acquired the right to redeem. The second defendant, the brother of plaintiff No. 1, refused to join as a plaintiff; he is arrayed among the defendants. The third defendant is added, as he claims to be the adopted son of Vithoolal, son of Raootmal, Raootmal being the adopted son of Sadasukh.

The prayer clause of the plaint has been translated thus:

"A decree may be passed in favour of plaintiffs Nos. 1, 2, 3 and 4, and defendants Nos. 1 and 3 for release of the mortgaged property from their possession for recovery from defendant No. 1 of Rs. 4,099-3-6 out of the income of the mortgaged property found due from defendants Nos. 1 and 3 and for possession of two-anna malguzari share of Mouza Saoda, Mouza No. 423, Tahsil Arvi, District Wardha, with all rights and half share of fields:

New No.	Area.	Right.
32	15-27	Sty.
42	13-23
43	14-12
31	7-92
14	9-69	Khud-Kast.
52	23-45

of the said mouza.

"If any amount is found due to defendant No. 1 from the plaintiffs on account in Court, the plaintiffs are willing to pay the same and redeem the mortgaged property. Hence the defendant Nos. 1 and 3 may be ordered to take the same, and the mortgaged property may be released from the mortgage.

"Any other relief besides this which the Court may deem fit to grant may be granted to the plaintiffs."

Defendants Nos. 1 and 3 contended that the mortgage was foreclosed in the year 1880, if not earlier, under the proceedings under the Bengal Regulation, XVII of 1806, and that since then the first defendant is holding as an absolute owner and not as a mortgagee. It was further stated that the malguzari share was mutated in favour of Raootmal, the heir of the original mortgagee, and by consent of the mortgagor's heirs in 1882, and it was pleaded that defendants had been in adverse possession for over 12 years before suit. The plaintiffs denied all knowledge of the proceedings under the Bengal Regulation and stated that the first plaintiff was no party to these proceedings and was not represented therein and the mortgagee's possession could never be adverse. Even under these Regulations the mortgagee was bound to institute a suit for the declaration of his title, and that was not done. The following preliminary issues were struck for trial:—

1. Whether the mortgage in suit was finally foreclosed in 1881 in the manner provided for by sections 7 and 8 of the Bengal Regulation, XVII of 1806, as pleaded by the defendants?

2. Whether the mortgagee was bound to institute a suit for a declaration of his title as the absolute owner of the property under the mortgage and has failed to do so?

3. Whether the service of notice and the subsequent proceedings against the mortgagor would bind his sons and legal representatives?

4. Whether the defendants have been in adverse possession of the property for over 12 years and this suit for redemption of the mortgage is barred by limitation?

5. What Court-fee should be payable in this suit?

The Trial Court's findings are these:—Proceedings were taken in the Court of the Deputy Commissioner, Wardha, in 1880 under the Bengal Regulation quoted above and the copy shows full compliance of the requirements with sections 7 and 8 of the Regulation. The actual notice served on the mortgagor is not forthcoming, but there is proof of its service, as the copy of the application under section 7 and the record of the admissions of the mortgagor and his heirs was sufficient proof of due service. The Judge holds that the mortgagor was duly served with the mortgagee's petition dated 3rd February 1880 and it was notified to him that if he did not redeem within one year from 14th February 1880 the mortgage would be finally foreclosed under the Bengal Regulation. It was impossible, at this length of time, to produce direct evidence of the service of notice, and the plaintiff's own schedule A shows that the mortgagor was at least indebted to the extent of Rs. 8 in 1881 on the expiration of one year's period of grace. The Judge is of opinion that the Regulation required no further action on the part of the mortgagee to perfect his title. He holds that the mortgagor's right of redemption was barred after the proceedings under the Regulation without a suit and that defendants were not bound to institute any suit to defeat the plaintiff's suit for redemption. As the original mortgagor's right of redemption was barred, his heirs could not maintain this suit. It was found that defendant Ramji and his mother accepted some land from out of the mortgaged property and parted with the property in suit in favour of the mortgagee's heir by way of a compromise. It was found that the first plaintiff has failed to prove that he was born before service of notice under the Regulation of 1806 on the mortgagor. Even if the Rodba, the first plaintiff, was born before service he was bound by the proceedings under the authority of Bajirao v. Gulabsingh (1). Defendant's possession was found to have become adverse to the mortgagor on the expiration of the period of grace and since then, that is far more than 12 years, they have been holding adversely. The plaintiff's suit was found barred by time. The conditional sale of the property in suit, as evidenced by the mortgage-deed, executed itself under the provisions of the Bengal Regulations. The Court-fee paid was found sufficient.

The right of redemption being barred by limitation, the suit was dismissed. On appeal, the learned District Judge, Wardha, has come to a different conclusion. Dealing with the conditions of the plaintiffs with regard to the alleged foreclosure of the mortgage according to the provisions of the Bengal Regulation, XVII of 1806, that all the requirements of sections 7 and 8 of the Regulation were not complied with, that the mortgagee failed to prove service of notice on the mortgagor and that without a suit under the Regulation the mortgagee could not acquire complete title to the mortgaged property and that the mortgage of 1872 could not execute itself, the Judge writes:—

"It is clear from the cases reported in Laxaman Devideen v. Bajubai (2) and Gokul Das v. Kirparam (3) that, though the Bengal Regulation of 1806 was not actually extended to the Central Provinces by Act XX of 1875 (see also paragraph 1233 at page 842 of Dr. Gour's Law of Transfer, 4th Edition, Volume 2). The mortgagee in the present case was, therefore, bound to follow the procedure for foreclosure of his mortgage as laid down by the Bengal Regulation of 1806. The contention of the learned Pleader for the respondents that the mortgage executed itself and the mortgagee became absolute owner of the mortgaged property upon failure of the mortgagor to pay the mortgage money on the stipulated date has, therefore, no force."

The Judge finds that the proceedings taken under the Regulation in the present case would not make the mortgagee absolute owner of the mortgaged property upon the expiry of the one year's period of grace allowed under section 8 of this Regulation. The cases relied upon by the lower Court were found only to lay down that the mortgagor's right of redemption was lost under those circumstances, and the case of Forbes v. Ameerconissa Begum (4) shows that, though the right of redemption is lost in such a case, the mortgagee's title is not complete until he has brought a suit either for recovery of possession of the mortgaged property or to obtain a declaration of his title to it. And, as in the present case the mortgagee did not institute a suit to perfect his title by a foreclosure of the mortgage and as he could not do so when the present suit was filed as the right was barred by limitation, his possession continued to be that of a mortgagee and was not converted into that of an absolute owner in spite of the expiry of the period of grace allowed to the mortgagor through Court, and as long as the mortgagee continues in possession as a mortgagee the mortgagor can exercise the right of redemption inseparable from a mortgage having a period of sixty years within which to bring a suit for redemption. The mortgage in suit was found to be a combination of usufructuary mortgage and mortgage by conditional sale, and as soon as the mortgagee was put in possession of the mortgaged property he was liable to render account of the usufruct, at least until the date of the expiration of the period of grace, and to show that the mortgage-debt was not fully satisfied. The mere issue of notice under the Bengal Regulation did not perfect the mortgagee's title. The Judge thinks it unnecessary to go into the question of legality or validity of the notice issued under section 8 of the Regulation, as this question would only arise if the mortgagee takes necessary steps by a suit to get the foreclosure made absolute. The Judge writes that, if he found it necessary to go into the question, he will presume upon the certified copies of the proceedings filed that the notice was legal and valid. The question whether Rodba was in existence on the date of the mortgage or in 1880 was immaterial; but if it is material proper statements of the parties have to be recorded and issue has to be framed and evidence recorded on the point before a proper finding can be given. The plea of adverse possession was held against the defendants as far as Rodba, plaintiff No. 1, was concerned. A mere oral agreement and mutation of names in the revenue papers could not effect a valid release of the equity of redemption and could not make the mortgagee an absolute owner of the property and his possession adverse to the mortgagor: Khiarajmal v. Diam (5). The lower Appellate Court reversed the decree of the First Court and remanded the suit for trial on the merits. Against that order the present appeal has been lodged by defendants Nos. 1 and 3.

It is here contended that the lower Appellate Court has failed to observe that provisions of section 8 of the Bengal Regulation No. XVII of 1806 have been duly complied with by the mortgagee and no redemption having taken place during the period of grace prescribed therein the mortgage has become finally foreclosed and the conditional sale has become absolute, even though no suit in that behalf was instituted by the mortgagee and a decree absolute for foreclosure obtained as required under the present law. It is further contended that after the expiration of the period of grace prescribed and the notice issued under section 8 of the Regulation aforesaid, the mortgagee's possession was automatically converted into possession as full owner and the same having continued for more than 12 years, the present suit, even if otherwise maintainable, is barred by the twelve years' rule of limitation.

The question awaiting my decision is, whether under the Bengal Regulation of 1806 it was necessary for the mortgagee in the present case, after giving notice and after the expiry of the year of grace, to institute a suit declaring his title, or whether, after expiry of the period of grace, the mortgagee automatically became full owner of the mortgaged property.

It is argued for the appellants that the view advanced by the lower Appellate Court is against the case reported as Forbes v. Ameeroomissa Begum (4), already cited. That case lays down very clearly that, "The general effect of these Regulations is, that if anything be due on the mortgage and the mortgagor makes no deposit, or an insufficient one, the right of redemption is gone at the expiration of the year of grace. But the title of the mortgagee is not completed, he must bring a suit to recover possession . . . or obtain a declaration by the Court of his title if he is in possession, and in that suit the mortgagor may contest the validity of the conditional sale, or the regularity of the proceedings taken under Regulation XVII of 1806, in order to make it absolute, or he may prove that nothing is due, or that the deposit is sufficient to cover what is due; but the issue, so far as the right of redemption is concerned, will be whether anything remained due to the mortgagee at the end of the year of grace, and if so, whether the necessary deposit had been made. If that is found against the mortgagor, the right of redemption is gone."

The question is said to have come up before the Allahabad High Court in Tawakkul Rai v. Lachman Rai (6) which lays down that "On the expiration of the year of grace allowed by Regulation XVII of 1806 the ownership of the mortgaged property vested absolutely in the mortgagee, even though he might not have obtained a decree establishing or declaring his right." This case referred to the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Forbes v. Ameeroonissa Begum (4).

Apart from the Statute, it was argued, that under a mortgage by conditional sale the mortgagee becomes an absolute owner and Thumbarasamy Moodelly v. Hossain Rowthen (7) and Dinonath Gangooly v. Nursingh Pershad Doss (8) were quoted. In the last case which deals with Regulation No. XVII of 1806, it was laid down that a mortgagee by conditional sale has a right of entry immediately after default and the Regulations do not debar him from the stipulated possession. Limitation runs from the date of such default; no new cause of action arising upon foreclosure. It is argued that in the present case the mortgage stated: "I will satisfy the amount in full in 4 years hence, that is, by the 10th January 1876, without any objection. If the amount is not satisfied at the above stipulated time the property shall stand foreclosed." The document gave the mortgagee, it is argued, power to take possession and he has held adversely from that date, the suit, therefore, being barred by time. But the mortgage was also usufructuary mortgage and under it the mortgagee was bound to account.

Another case quoted is Lolf Hossein v. Abdool Ali (9), where it was held that the lapse of more than 12 days from the year of grace bars the right of redemption. It was held in Girahari Lal v. Jugru (10) that "When once the notice of foreclosure had issued under the Regulation, the mortgagee was entitled to the estate unless the mortgage-money was paid within the year of grace. The effect of the notice was the same so far as this case is concerned as though a decree had been passed for foreclosure."

Macpherson in his Law of Mortgage, at page 16, writes:—

"In mortgages by conditional sale the mortgagor is liable to lose his estate, and when he does so, it passes at once to the mortgagee.

"If the debt is not paid as stipulated, the mortgagee must, wherever Bengal Regulation XVII 1806 is applicable, proceed to foreclose according to certain prescribed rules, converting the conditional sale into an absolute one, and obtaining possession. Until he takes such proceedings, the mortgagor remains in possession, and enjoyment of the property, and has the right of redemption on paying off what is due on the mortgage; but on foreclosure, that right ceases, and the property passes wholly from the mortgagee.

"A mortgage by conditional sale has under the Regulations in Bengal and the North Western Provinces an operation different from what such transactions originally had. It is there to be regarded as a mortgage redeemable at any time by the mortgagor or those claiming under him in privity with his title as mortgagor. Apart from legislation, the essential characteristic of a mortgage by conditional sale was that on breach of the condition, the contract executed itself and the transaction was closed and became one of absolute sale without any further act of the parties or accountability between them. This was the character of such transactions before Bengal Regulation XVII of 1806 came into force; and this was the character given to them up to the years 1858 and 1864, respectively, by the Courts in the Presidencies of Madras and Bombay where no enactment like Bengal Regulation XVII of 1806 has ever been in force."

RUPA BAI U. RODBA.

Their Lordships of the Privy Council in Thumbusawmy Moodelly v. Hossain Rowthen (7) write:—

"The state of the authorities being such as has been described, it may obviously become a question with this Committee in future cases, whether they will follow the decision in the 13th Moor's Indian Appeals, which appears to them based upon sound principles, or the new course of decision that has sprung up at Madras and Bombay which appears to them to have been, in its origin, radically unsound.

"On a stale claim to redeem a mortgage, and disposes a mortgagee who had, before 1858, acquired an absolute title, there would be strong reasons for adopting the former course. In the case of a security executed since 1858, there would be strong reasons for recognizing and giving effect to the Madras authorities, with reference to which the parties might be supposed to have contracted. Their Lordships abstain from expressing any opinion upon this question until the necessity for determining it shall arise."

In a case from Calcutta, Prannath Roy v. Rookea Begam (11), their Lordships in dealing with a mortgage by conditional sale held that such a mortgage "is redeemable like an ordinary mortgage, and is subject to foreclosure. When a mortgagee seeks for foreclosure, he must effect that object according to the mode prescribed by Bengal Regulations III of 1793, section, 14; II of 1803, section, 3; and XVII of 1806, sections 7 and 8." In that case it was further held:—

"The service of notice of foreclosure on the occupant of the mortgaged property a party who claimed as purchaser from the mortgagor, but who had not established his title), does not estop the mortgagee from disputing the occupant's title to redeem the mortgaged premises."

And section 7 of Bengal Regulation XVII of 1806 is said to provide for the equitable right of redemption to the mortgagor and the owner of such property or his legal representatives.

Dr. Gour in his book, the Law of Transfer, in paragraph 1228, dealing with (11) 7 M. I. A. 323; 4 W. R. P. C. 37; 1 Suth. P. C. J. 367; 1 Sar. P. C. J. 692; 19 E. R. 331.

the previous law as to conditional sale writes:—

"Anterior to the year 1806, the rights of a holder of bai-bil-wafa (conditional sale) were enforceable according to the strict terms of the agreement. It was then necessary for the mortgagor, if he wished to save his estate from forfeiture, to pay the amount when due, or to pay it into Court, pursuant to the provisions of Regulation I of 1798, within the stipulated period for the re-payment of the loan, and on default, the property passed to the mortgagee without any further act on his part, or the intervention of the Court. The mortgagor had then no right of redemption, and the transaction once closed could not be re-opened. By the Bengal Regulation XVII of 1806, founded upon the practice of the English Courts of Equity, a modification of this strict rule of the rights given to the holder of such a contract was introduced. The seventh section gave the mortgagor a right of redemption within one year commencing from an application by the mortgagee to the Court under the eighth section for the foreclosure of his mortgage. Under the Regulations, the mortgagee could not acquire absolute title over the property mortgaged to him without an order of the District Judge to that effect foreclosing the mortgage. After such an application the mortgagor must either pay or tender the money lent, or the balance then due, or he must make a deposit pursuant to Bengal Regulation I of 1798, section 2. The general effect of these Regulations was that if anything remained due on the mortgage, and the mortgagor made no deposit, or an insufficient one, the right was gone at the expiration of the year of grace. But the title of the mortgagee was not completed, he had to bring a suit to recover possession, or obtain a declaration by the Court of his title if he was in possession, and in that suit the mortgagor could contest the validity of the conditional sale or the regularity of the proceedings taken under Regulation XVII of 1806, in order to make it absolute, or he might prove that nothing was due; or that the deposit was sufficient to cover what was due; but the issue, so far as the right of redemption is concerned, was whether any thing remained due to the mortgagee at the end of the year of grace, and if so, whether the necessary deposit had been made. If that was found against the mortgagor, his right of redemption was then effectually shut out * * *. The provisions of the Regulations were so strictly enforced that the mortgagor was held not to have entirely lost his right to redeem unless all its terms had been duly complied with, though parties were free to contract themselves out of the Regulations."

The case of Hub Ali v. Wazir-un-nissa (12) seems pertinent. It has to be remembered that in the present case it was a combined mortgage: mortgage by conditional sale and usufructuary mortgage, that is, an anomalous mortgage. It seems to me that under the Regulation the mortgagee was bound to institute proceedings for foreclosure within 12 years and that the time for foreclosure did not arise till the period stipulated in the proviso for redemption had expired; and it seems to me that the mortgagee's title must be held to be incomplete until it was confirmed by a regular suit. Before the 12 years were over the Transfer of Property Act of 1882 came into force and the transaction was subject to section 60 of that Act. It is doubtful whether the Regulation of 1806 applied to a usufructuary mortgage. It seems to me that the weight of authorities is on the side of the view taken by the lower Appellate Court and that, therefore, its remand order is correct. This appeal, therefore, fails and stands dismissed with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 110—Appeal to Privy Council—Value of subject-matter of suit.

Where the final order involves directly or indirectly some claim or question relating to, or respecting property worth over Rs. 10,000, a certificate for leave to appeal to the Privy Council ought to be granted even though the value of the appellant's interest may be very much less than that amount.

Manilal Jugaldas v. Banubai Framji, 63 Ind. Cas. 588; 23 Bom. L. R. 374, referred to.

Application for leave to appeal to the Privy Council.

FACTS appear from the following order of the High Court:—

The plaintiff asked for relief in his plaint with regard to two properties A and B, which he valued at Rs. 5,000. Then with regard to property C, he asked for an injunction restraining the defendant from interfering with the plaintiff's possession. The Court made an order that property C, which may now be taken as represented by the open space in the compound and the well, should be used equally by both parties. The question is whether that order has prejudiced the interests of the plaintiff to the extent of Rs. 5,000. If so, then taken with the value of the properties A and B, the subject-matter of the suit would be worth more than Rs. 10,000. We, therefore, direct an enquiry under O. XLV, r. 5 (Civil Procedure Code) to determine whether the interests of the plaintiff have been prejudiced to the extent of Rs. 5,000, or over, by the direction given by the Court in the decree that both parties were equally entitled to the user of the open space in the whole compound and the well.

BAIDYA NATH CHOTTOPADYA v. PANCHANANI DASSEE.

JUDGMENT.—We think that, considering the judgment of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Manilal Jugaldas v. Banubai Framji (1) granting special leave to appeal after a certificate had been refused by this Court [Manilal Jugaldas v. Banubai Framji (1)] we must grant a certificate in this case. The order made therein involved a question respecting the compound and the well which has now been found by the lower Court to be worth more than Rs. 5,000 and, therefore, that must be the value to be taken when applying the provisions of section 110, Civil Procedure Code, although the value of the appellant's interest appears to be very much less. We think the Rule must be made absolute and a certificate must be granted on the ground that the final order involves directly or indirectly some claim or question relating to or respecting property worth over Rs. 10,000 in value. Costs will be costs in the appeal.

Award—Omission to file award in Court—

Character of award, if affected.

If an award is valid, it is operative, even though neither party has sought to enforce it by a regular suit or by the summary procedure. This conclusion is based upon the elementary principle that, as between the parties and their privies, an award is entitled to that respect which is due to the judgment of a Court of last resort. The award is in fact a final adjudication by a Court of the parties' own choice and until impeached upon sufficient grounds in an appropriate proceeding, an award which is on the face of it regular is binding. Bhajahari Saha Banikya v. Behary Lal Basak, 33 C. 881; 4 C. L. J. 162, referred to.

Appeal against a decree of the Subordinate Judge, 2nd Court, Hooghly, dated the 16th of July 1920, modifying the decree of the Munsif, 3rd Court, Serampore, dated the 18th July 1919.

Dr. Jadunath Kanjilal, for the Appellant.—The defendant No. 1 is the appellant. The appeal arises out of a suit for recovery of possession on establishment of title. The plaintiff's case was that she was entitled to the property by virtue of her purchase from the defendant No. 2 on 29th September 1916. My defence is that the plaintiff is not entitled to the property, inasmuch as her vendor had no title at the date of sale. On 9th September 1916 defendants Nos. 1 and 2 referred their dispute relating to this property to arbitration. On 24th September 1916 the arbitrator awarded the property to defendant No. 1 alone. I then applied to Court for a decree in accordance with the award. The decree was made on 16th December 1916. The plaintiff is alleged to have purchased from defendant No. 2 on 29th September 1916 on the basis of an agreement made on 21st September 1916. The first Court dismissed the suit. On appeal the Subordinate Judge has decreed the suit. I submit that at the date of the conveyance defendant No. 2 had no title nor was he entitled to enter into an agreement when the matter was in arbitration. The award is valid and binding on the defendant and as a matter of fact he has never challenged it. See Mahammad Nawaz Khan v. Alam Khan (1). I submit the learned Judge was seriously in error in decreeing the suit.

BAIDYA NATH CHATTOPADYA v. PANCHANANI DASSEE.

Babu Narendra Kumar Das (with him Babu Satindra Nath Mookerjee), for the Respondent.—I submit my title is not affected by the decree, inasmuch as my purchase was long before the decree. I am not bound by the award to which I was no party and which would not be operative till it is sanctioned by the Court's decree. The Sub-Judge was right in his judgment.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the first defendant in a suit for recovery of possession of land on establishment of title by purchase. The case for the plaintiff is that the property belonged to second defendant who conveyed it to her on the 29th September 1916 pursuant to an agreement made eight days earlier. The case for the first defendant is that the claim is unfounded, inasmuch as he had become entitled to the property by virtue of an award made on the 24th September 1916 in an arbitration proceeding between himself and his brother, the second defendant. The Court of first instance held that the plaintiff had acquired no valid title by her purchase from the second defendant and dismissed the suit as against the first defendant. The Court, however, made a decree for Rs. 175 against the second defendant who, it was found, had obtained that sum from the plaintiff as consideration for the conveyance. Upon appeal, the Subordinate Judge has held that the title to the property was vested in the first two defendants, and that the plaintiff had consequently acquired a good title to one-half share of the property. On this basis a decree has been made in favour of the plaintiffs for one half share of the property and also for mesne profits.

On the present appeal, the first defendant has contended that the conveyance executed by the second defendant in favour of the plaintiffs could not transfer a good title to the property inasmuch as the vendor had no title thereto. We are of opinion that this contention is well-founded.

It appears that on the 9th September 1916, the first two defendants made a reference to arbitration in respect of this property. On the 24th September 1916 the arbitrator made his award whereby this property was declared to be the property of the first defendant alone. On the 29th September 1916, that is, after the award had been made, the second defendant conveyed the property to the plaintiff on the basis of the alleged agreement made eight days earlier. The first defendant thereafter applied to the Court to make a decree in accordance with the award. That proceeding was instituted only against the second defendant who was a party to the arbitration proceedings. The consequence was that a decree was made on the 16th December 1916. On these facts it has been urged that, as this decree was made long after the conveyance, the title of the plaintiff was not affected thereby. In our opinion this view is manifestly erroneous.

The effect of the award of the arbitrator was to vest the title to the property in the first defendant. From that date, the second defendant could not set up a claim to that property. The consequence was that on the date when the second defendant purported to transfer interest in the property to the plaintiff he had no interest to convey. The effect of an award was considered by the Judicial Committee in the case of Muhammad Nawaz Khan v. Alam Khan (1). In that case A and B had referred certain matter in difference between them to X. X made his award in favour of A. A made an application under section 525 of the Code of 1882 to file the award and it was dismissed. B then brought a suit to recover the property which had formed the subject-matter of arbitration. A set up the award in answer to the claim. The Judicial Committee held that the award was valid and was binding upon B; and that, although the application under section 525 was refused, that merely left the award to have its ordinary legal validity. It could not be successfully contended that an award was not valid because the party in whose favour it was had never applied to have it filed in Court. The refusal to file an award or of an application made to do so would not have the effect that the award could never be relied upon in any suit relating to the subject-matter dealt with by it. The Judicial Committee then examined the grounds upon which the validity of the award was sought to be impeached and found them to be unsustainable, with the consequence that the plaintiff, who had asked for recovery of the property in contravention of the title created by the award, failed. It was pointed out by this Court in the case of Bhajuhari Saha Banikya v. Behary Lal Basak (2) that this decision of the Judicial Committee clearly shows that, if an award is valid, it is operative, even though neither party has sought to enforce it by a regular suit or by the summary procedure. This conclusion is based upon the elementary principle that, as between the parties and their privies an award is entitled to that respect which is due to the judgment of a Court of last resort. The award is in fact a final adjudication by a Court of the parties' own choice, and until impeached upon sufficient grounds in an appropriate proceeding, an award which is, on the face of it, regular is binding. The position consequently is that on the 24th September 1916, the title of the second defendant, if any, to the property in suit was extinguished and under the award the property vested finally in the first defendant. The result follows that the plaintiff did not acquire any title to the property by her conveyance taken from the second defendant. In the present suit, no grounds have been made out to establish the invalidity of the award. We hold accordingly that the plaintiff has failed to make out her alleged title to the property.

The result is that this appeal is allowed, the decree of the Court of Appeal below set aside and that of the Court of first instance restored with costs both here and in the lower Appellate Court.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 164, meaning of.

The meaning of Art. 164 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act is, that the applicant must have knowledge not merely that a decree has been passed by some Court against him, but that a particular decree has been passed against him in a particular Court in favour of a particular person for a particular sum.

Application from an order passed by the Judge of the Court of Small Causes, Poona, in Miscellaneous Application No. 24 of 1921.

Mr. D. A. Tuljapurkar, for the Applicant.

Mr. K. H. Kelkar, for the Opponent.

JUDGMENT.—We think that the learned Judge was wrong in refusing to entertain the applicant's petition for setting aside the ex parte decree passed against him. Under Art. 164 of the Indian Limitation Act the defendant had thirty days from the date of the decree, or where the summons was not duly served, when the applicant had knowledge of the decree. The petitioner alleges that the summons had not been duly served, and that he had no knowledge of the decree until execution was levied against him. The plaintiff's reply was that the defendant had knowledge of the decree because he (the plaintiff) had asked two persons to tell him about the decree and asked him to settle. Those two persons were examined on commission. We do not think that their evidence is sufficient to impose knowledge of the decree on the defendant within the meaning of Art. 164. We think the words of the Article mean something more than mere knowledge that a decree had been passed in some suit in some Court against the applicant. We think it means that the applicant must have knowledge not merely that a decree has been passed by some Court against him, but that a particular decree has been passed against him in a particular Court in favour of a particular person for a particular sum. A judgment-debtor is not in such a favourable position as he used to be when he had thirty days from the time when execution was levied against him. But we do not think that the Legislature meant to go to the other extreme by laying down that time began to run from the time the judgment-debtor might have received some vague information that a decree had been passed against him. We think, therefore, that the Rule must be made absolute and the Judge should now decide the application to set aside the ex parte decree on its merits. Costs will be costs in the application.

Madras Estates Land Act (I of 1908), s. 26, applicability of—Claim by tenant to hold at lower rent—"Lawful rate payable," meaning of.

Section 26 of the Madras Estates Land Act deals with cases where there has been an actual prior rent greater than the rent claimed by the tenant and does not deal with a case where a raiyyat is setting up that ab initio the rent payable was the lower rent and that the terms of tenancy always had been the lower rent, to be increased to the higher rent in certain eventualities. Per Wallace, J.—“The lawful rate payable” in section 26 (3) of the Madras Estates Land Act is not necessarily or invariably the faisal rate fixed by the Government, but may be a contract rate on which the occupancy is based. [p. 133, col. 1.]

Mr. A. C. Sampath Aiyangar, for the Appellants.

Mr. A. Viswanatha Aiyar, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

Schwabe, C. J.—This is an appeal from the judgment of the District Judge of North Arcot who reversed the decision of the Sub-Collector of Tirupattur, Mr. V. P. Row. The suit was by raiyyats to compel the mittadar under whom they held the land to grant them patta at a rent of Rs. 12-1-3 per annum. The defendant's claim was that they were only entitled to have the land at a rent of Rs. 25-7-10.

It appeared on the evidence that, so far as could be traced back, the amount actually paid has always been Rs. 12-1-3 and not Rs. 25-7-10. But it also appeared from certain documents produced that the Rs. 12-1-3 was arrived at by a deduction from the sum of Rs. 25-7-10. The mittadar set up that the reason of this was that the land had originally been held by a karnam or a gomashita, and that in consideration of services rendered in those capacities the full rent of Rs. 25-7-10 had been reduced to Rs. 12-1-3. The mittadar wholly failed to prove any such case. In fact it was established quite clearly on the evidence that this lower amount of rent had been paid by persons, who were not in the position either of karnams or gomashitahs who enjoyed the land. Another reason for the payment of lower amount was given in the evidence on behalf of the plaintiffs. Their account was that a considerable part of the land owing to its saline nature, was not under cultivation and never had been under cultivation and that throughout the terms of the occupancy were that, although the full amount of rent for the whole land at the local current rate for cultivable lands would be Rs. 25-7-10, so long as the part remained, owing to its saline nature, uncultivable, the amount payable should be Rs. 12-1-3. The learned Sub-Collector who heard the case and heard the evidence accepted that view and, in my judgment, he was perfectly right to accept it on the evidence, that he received, of the value and the condition of the land and the way in which this lower rate has been received for a very long time.

It was then contended on behalf of the mittadar that in certain documents apparently of a recent date, the word used for describing the deduction was 'Riyayat' and that this word means, and can only mean, a "voluntary remission by the land-holder or by Government." As to this, the learned Sub-Collector did not attach any weight to the use of the word. He said that the exact meaning was not beyond doubt and that to translate it as "remission" was to prejudice its nature, for remission is prima facie a matter of grace and indulgence. He said he would prefer to translate it as 'deduction'. When the case came before the District Judge, he based his whole judgment on the meaning of this word, and in order to ascertain the meaning of it he turned to Macleene's Manual of Administration in Madras, where the word is somewhat differently spelt, and stated to be derived from Arabic 'rau' meaning 'to abstain' and is then translated "favour, specially a remission of the Government claim." The District Judge read that to mean a voluntary remission. Having so satisfied himself that it was the only meaning of the word, he decided the case accordingly. A little further investigation into other recognised works of reference might have resulted in his considering that the point was not quite so clear, for in the "Manual of North Arcot District" the word is merely translated as "an abatement of assessment", and in Wilson, the words used are capable of meaning an "abatement" either in the sense of voluntary or compulsory remission of rent. In any view, there is no help to be gained in the proper decision of this case from the use of the word 'Riyayat'.

There were then two other words which appeared in the document of 1885, the words being 'Istamulla varayil' (meaning "so long as it pleases") and they are put with the words 'riyayat' against the figure showing the whole amount of remission allowed in the case of this village. The only evidence as to this document is that of the writer of part of it. It was an account of the rents of this village written in Telugu and a summary of these was written in Tamil by the witness, D. W. No 2, who says that he wrote it while he was sixteen years old and was learning with his father to be a karnam, the father at that time being the karnam in charge. That he or his father had any knowledge of these remissions or deductions or that they ever considered whether any and which of these were voluntary or involuntary does not appear and I agree with the view taken by the Sub-Collector that the use of those words in that particular document does not carry the matter any further.

It was then argued before us and our attention has been called to cases in support of this argument that under section 26 (1) and (3) of the Madras Estates Land Act, it was not open to the plaintiffs in this case to prove the agreement they alleged, namely, that the rent should be so much so long as the land remained saline and so much more if it became cultivable. I do not think that the cases cited to us, Karuppa Goundan v. Narayana Cheunar (1) and Palani v. Paramasiva (2) decide any thing of the kind. Nor do I think that that is the proper interpretation of the section in the Madras Estates Land Act of 1908. Section 26 is dealing with cases where there has been an actual prior rent greater than the rent claimed by the tenant and does not deal with a case where a raiyyat is setting up that ab initio the rent payable was the lower rent and setting up that the terms of tenancy always had been the lower rent but to be increased to the higher rent in certain eventualities. In my judgment, it makes no difference that in various documents it is described as a higher rent reduced to a lower amount, those eventualities not having happened.

A point was taken under the limitation clause of the Madras Estates Land Act but the point was not raised by the pleadings or in the Court of first instance. An attempt was made to raise the point before the District Judge and the District Judge, in my judgment, perfectly rightly refused to go into it, for he pointed out that if it had been raised, the plaint might perhaps have been amended, or the suit withdrawn at once and a fresh suit filed then and there. Now, I do not wish unnecessarily to discuss to what extent this Court ought to listen to points under the Limitation Act not taken in the Court below. We must strongly be inclined not to do so, but where a point of limitation of this nature, which is a mere objection to the suit then before the Court, does not in the least affect the rights of the parties, because it is admitted in this case that if the point had been taken and succeeded a fresh suit could have been brought the next day, I should hesitate very much before I should allow the point to be taken, because the presumption that I should make is this: that for some reason of which we have no knowledge, it has been definitely decided by the appellant in the first instance not to raise the point knowing either that a good answer might be made to it if taken or knowing that if he takes it and succeeds he will have to face a fresh suit the next day with the same result but that additional costs will have to be incurred by both parties. In these circumstances, I do not think it is a proper case for us to allow the raising of such points at this stage.

It follows from the view that we take of this case that if the saline portion of the land becomes cultivable it will be open to the mittadar to take proper steps to have the rent increased.

For these reasons, in my judgment, the judgment of the Sub-Collector was right and the judgment of the District Judge was wrong. This appeal must be allowed with costs.

Wallace, J.—I agree.

I only wish to say as regards the interpretation of section 26 (3) that it does not seem to me that "the lawful rate payable" is necessarily or invariably the faisal rate fixed by Government, but may be a contract rate on which the occupancy is based. This is a matter which has to be proved, and in this case, on the evidence, it appears to me that the lawful rate payable was the contract rate, viz., Rs. 12-1-3, a permanent deduction from what would have been the rent if the whole land was cultivable having been allowed because it was saline and so long as it remained so.

I, therefore, agree the patta is a proper patta in terms of Exhibit B and the plaintiff's suit must be allowed.

Hindu Law—Alienation—Sale by father—Consideration partly for necessity—Suit by son to set aside sale—Decree, form of.

In a suit by a Hindu son to set aside a sale by the father, if it be found that a part of the sale consideration was valid and a part invalid, the decree to be passed should be one for possession in favour of the plaintiff subject to his paying to the purchaser so much of the consideration as was required for legal necessity.

Appeal, under section 10 of the Letters Patent, from the judgment of Mr. Justice Stuart, dated the 21st July 1921.

Mr. Shiva Prasad Sinha, for the Appellants.

Mr. Harmandan Prasad, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This was a suit brought by the son of a vendor who sold certain property for Rs. 1,400. A claim for pre-emption was put forward in regard to this property and the property was pre-empted by the defendant, Jai Govind Singh. The Court below has found that half of the property sold by the plaintiff's father was non-ancestral property and the claim has, therefore, been dismissed as regards that half. As regards the remaining half the learned Judge of this Court has made a decree to the effect that Jai Govind Singh should pay to the plaintiff Rs. 200 which was found not to have formed valid consideration for the sale, inasmuch as it was required for family necessity. According to the finding Rs. 1,200 out of the Rs. 1,400 was for family necessity. Therefore, out of the consideration for half the property Rs. 600 was required for family necessity and is to be deemed to be valid consideration for the sale. As, however, a part of the consideration was not valid, the plaintiff would be entitled to a decree for possession subject to his reimbursing to the purchaser the amount in respect of which the sale was a valid sale. If any part of the consideration was invalid and not binding on the plaintiff, the plaintiff would be entitled to have the sale set aside. But if a portion of the consideration was good and binding on the plaintiff, he would be entitled to reimburse it to the defendant. The form of the decree in a case of this kind should, therefore, be a decree for possession in favour of the plaintiff subject to his paying to the purchaser so much of the consideration as was required for the necessities of the family. This is the form of the decree in a suit of this kind which has always been maintained. In the present case the plaintiff is entitled to a decree for half of the property on condition of his paying Rs. 600 which, as we have said above, was required for family necessity in respect of half the property. We, therefore, vary the decree of this Court and make a decree in the plaintiff's favour for possession of the property claimed by him on condition that he pays to Jai Govind Singh, defendant, Rs. 600 within six months from this date, otherwise the claim will stand dismissed with costs. The appellant will have his costs of this appeal.

Divorce Act (I V of 1869), ss. 7, 10—Application for divorce—Evidence.

In an application for divorce, under the Indian Law, which conforms with the English law, the evidence of the husband or wife alone must never be accepted without some corroboration either by a witness or by strong surrounding circumstances. [p. 135, col. 1.]

Case referred by the District Judge, Madura, in his letter No. 2096, dated the 5th April 1922, for confirmation by the High Court under section 17 of the Indian Divorce Act (Act IV of 1869) of the decree Nisi passed in O. S. No. 2 of 1922, on the file of the District Court, Madura.

JUDGMENT.—This is a petition for divorce which comes before us under section 17 of Act IV. of 1869 asking us to confirm the decree of the District Judge of Madura to dissolve the marriage between petitioner and the respondent. Under section 7 of that Act, subject to the other provisions of that Act, "the High Court and the District Court shall, in all suits and proceedings thereunder, act and give relief on principles and rules which, in the opinion of the said Courts, are as nearly as may be conformable to the principles and rules on which the Court of Divorce and Matrimonial Causes of England for the time being acts and gives reliefs". The evidence and the only evidence before the Court in this case was that of the petitioner himself. He swears that he went to his house one day and on gaining admission into his house he found his wife there with the co-respondent. He also swears that she left him that evening and has been living with the co-respondent and that a child has been born to her which is not his child. It is an absolutely fixed Rule of Practice in the Divorce Court in England that the evidence of the husband or the wife alone is never accepted without some corroboration either by a witness or at least by strong surrounding circumstances. The reason for that Rule of Practice is that divorce is a matter which lends itself very easily to collusion, for a petitioner may come and say, 'my wife or my husband is unfaithful or my husband has been cruel' and the other party desiring the divorce may take the simple course of not attending and letting the matter go by default, and so a divorce may be obtained. It is, therefore, the established practice that there must be in these cases corroboration for the Court to act. In this case there was none, and, therefore, it is necessary that the case should be referred back to the District Judge so that he may hear such evidence as the petitioner may be advised to call before him in corroboration of his own evidence. It would seem in this case a simple matter to obtain corroboration of these facts, if they are facts. That his wife has left him and is living with somebody else is a matter which can easily be proved, and probably evidence can easily be given of the registration of the birth of the illegitimate child.

According to the allegations in the plaint business was conducted between the parties on condition that the defendants purchased grain from the plaintiffs firm by means of letters and through the defendants' gomashia and paid the price thereof from time to time. The suit was for a sum of Rs. 435 due on the balance of the account. The plaint alleges that the cause of action arose on various dates, these dates being the dates on which the different items were debited in the account. The learned Counsel for the petitioners points out that six items on the debit side and two items on the credit side were barred by time when the suit was brought, and that if these items are excluded there is actually a balance in the defendants' favour. The learned Vakil for the opposite party did not contest the facts but argued that this was a case governed by Art. 85 of the Limitation Act, being a claim on the balance of a mutual, open and current account where there have been reciprocal demands between the parties. It is clear on the authority of Ram Pershad v. Harbans Singh (1) and Velu Pillai v. Ghose Mahomed (2) that this is not a mutual account, even if there may have been occasionally a balance in the defendants' favour, as appears from some of the letters. Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), s. 29 proviso (1)—Suit for rent at increased rate—Landlord when entitled to succeed.

In a suit to recover rent at an increased rate the landlord is not entitled to the benefit of the first clause to the proviso to section 29 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, unless he brings himself within the precise language of that clause. [p. 137, col. 1.]

The plaintiff brought a suit for rent at an increased rate for four years beginning with 1321 B. S. The rent was not enhanced by writing registered as required by clause (a) of section 29 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. No increased rent was paid in 1320, but rent at the increased rate was actually paid from 1314 to 1319 B. S.:

Held, that the requirements of the first clause of the proviso to section 29 of the Bengal Tenancy Act had not been fulfilled, inasmuch as rent at the increased rate had not been paid for a continuous period of three years immediately preceding the period for which rent was claimed. [p. 137, col. 1.]

Mohini Kanta Saha v. Preo Nath Neogy, 67 Ind. Cas 381; 35 C. L. J. 309; (1922) A. I. R. (C.) 141; 49 C. 661, distinguished.

Appeal against a decree of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Maldah, in Rajshahye, dated the 14th February 1920, modifying a decree of the Munsif, Second Court at Maldah, dated the 3rd February 1919.

Babu D. N. Bagchi, for the Appellants.—The plaintiffs are the appellants. The appeal arises out of a suit for rent. We claimed rent at an increased rent for 1321-25 on the ground that there were changes in area and that rent has been increased. First Court decreed the suit. On appeal, however, the suit has been dismissed. I submit I am entitled to realise increased rent under section 29 proviso (2) of the Bengal Tenancy Act. Rents for 1314 to 1319 B. S. have been paid at the increased rate. I submit the learned Court of Appeal below has erroneously dismissed my suit.

Dr. Dwarkanath Mitter (with him Babus Bireswar Bagchi and Narayan Chandra Kar), for the Respondent, was not called upon to reply.

JUDGMENT.—The only substantial question argued in this appeal is, whether the Subordinate Judge has rightly dismissed the claim for the increased rent of Rs. 2-5-6 gandas claimed by the plaintiffs in addition to the pre-existing rent of Rs. 18-11-12 gandas. It is conceded that the rent was not enhanced by writing registered as required by clause (a) of section 29 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. Consequently, the plaintiffs are driven to rely upon the first clause to the proviso which runs as follows: "Nothing in clause (a) shall prevent a landlord from recovering rent at the rate at which it has been actually paid for a continuous period of not less than three years immediately preceding the period for which the rent is claimed." This proviso, however, is of no assistance to the plaintiffs. The first of the four years for which rent is claimed in this suit is 1321.

GOPALASWAMI IYER v. RAMACHANDRA IYER.

To entitle them to the benefit of the provision contained in the proviso, the plaintiffs must establish that the increased rent which they now claim has been actually paid for a continuous period of not less than three years immediately preceding 1321. But it is not disputed that the increased rent was not paid in 1320. The plaintiffs contend, however, that, as rent at the increased rate was actually paid from 1314 to 1319, the requirements of the proviso have been fulfilled. We are of opinion that there is no foundation for this contention, which is opposed to the plain language of the Statute. The argument of the appellants is based upon the fallacy that if rent has been paid at the increased rate for three years or longer, the rent of the holding has become permanently increased as if there had been an increase by writing registered. That is not the effect of the proviso. The true effect of section 29 is that there is no permanent enhancement when there is an attempt to increase rent without writing registered. But still the Legislature allows the landlord to realise rent at the increased rate, provided rent at that rate has been actually paid for a continuous period of not less than three years immediately preceding the period for which rent is claimed. If the landlords do not bring themselves within the precise language of this clause, they are not entitled to the benefit. In the Court below, reliance was placed by way of analogy upon section 50 of the Bengal Tenancy Act; but, as the Subordinate Judge correctly pointed out, whereas section 50 contemplates a case where a tenancy has been held at a certain rate, Mohini Kanta Saha v. Preo Nath Neogy (1), section 29 applies only to a case where rent has been actually paid for a period of three years. We are of opinion that the claim for enhanced rent has been rightly disallowed.

The result is that the decree of the Subordinate Judge is affirmed and this appeal dismissed with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 115, O. XXI, rr. 4, 9—Application to bring legal representatives on record—Delay—Sufficient cause—Petition to excuse delay, refusal of—Revision.

In an application to excuse delay in bringing on record the legal representatives of a deceased defendant or respondent, the essential point to consider is whether the petitioner's ignorance of the death of the defendant or respondent was justified and afforded sufficient cause for the belated application. [p. 138, col. 1.]

Where a Court in considering such an application comes to a conclusion on no evidence and even then omits to consider the one point which the law directs it to decide, namely, whether there was sufficient cause for delay in representation, it acts with material irregularity in the exercise of its jurisdiction and its order is liable to be set aside in revision if the aggrieved party has been seriously prejudiced thereby. [p. 138, col. 1.]

Thandayuthapani v. Chinnathal, 24 Ind. Cas. 872, distinguished.

Petition, under section 115 of Act V of 1908, praying the High Court to revise the order of the District Court, East Tanjore, at the Negapatam, dated the 14th July 1922, in I. A. No. 333 of 1922, (in I. P. No. 2 of 1917 on the file of the District Court, Tanjore).

Mr. K. Rajah Iyer, for the Petitioner.

Mr. B. Somayya, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—Petitioner seeks for revision of the order of the lower Court excusing the delay of 8 months by the Official Receiver, Tanjore, in bringing on record the legal representative of a deceased alienee from an insolvent in the matter of a petition by the Official Receiver to have that alienation set aside. The District Judge has excused the delay on the short ground that the Official Receiver had no means of knowing about the death of the alienee; and presumably, though he does not say so, that he considered that sufficient cause for the application being belated.

The evidence before him was contained only in two affidavits, one by the Official Receiver that he did not know earlier of the death, and one by the legal representative that the Official Receiver did know earlier of it from the insolvent's power-of-attorney agent. The District Judge had, therefore, before him no evidence whatever that the Official Receiver did not, as a matter of fact, know earlier. He has not said so. His order is thus based on no evidence. Beyond that he has not considered the essential point whether the Official Receiver's ignorance of the death was justified and afforded sufficient cause for his belated application.

3. The next question is, whether this Court is called on to interfere under section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code. Respondent relies on the ruling in Thandayuthapani v. Chinnathal (1), holding that the order in that case on a petition to excuse delay in presenting an appeal was not open to revision. I take it that no question of gross irregularity in the exercise of jurisdiction arose in that case, i.e., that the Trying Court had considered the point of law which it was its function to decide and had decided on the evidence before it, rightly or wrongly, that there was not sufficient cause for delay in presentation. But when the Court has first of all come to its conclusion on no evidence and has even then omitted to consider the one point which the law directs it to decide viz., whether there was sufficient cause for delay in presentation, I must hold that it has acted with material irregularity in the exercise of its jurisdiction, if the aggrieved party has been seriously prejudiced thereby.

5. In the present case, the Court's conclusion was based on no evidence, and, therefore, it failed to consider properly whether sufficient cause for delay had been shown. Since, if sufficient cause has not been shown, the Official Receiver's petition to set aside the alienation in favour of petitioner's deceased father will have to be dismissed, I consider that petitioner has been seriously prejudiced by the lower Court's irregular exercise of jurisdiction.

5. I, therefore, set aside the order of the District Judge and direct that the petition be re-heard according to law. Petitioner will get his costs in this Court.

Order set aside.

Res judicata—Renti-decree—Presumption.

Appeal from a decision of the District Judge, Muzaffarpur, dated the 10th August 1920, affirming a decision of the Munsif, Hajipur, dated the 8th June 1920.

Mr. S. C. Mitter, for the Appellants.

Mr. Nirsu Narain Sinha, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the plaintiffs against the decree of the District Judge of Muzaffarpur affirming a decision of the Munsif of Hajipur by which he dismissed the plaintiff's suit for a declaration that the holding of the defendant is a bhaoli holding and not a holding at a cash rent. The suit was not tried but was dismissed on the preliminary ground that it was barred by the rule of res judicata. The only question in this appeal is whether the Courts below were right in applying this rule to the facts of this case.

It appears both from the judgment of the Munsif in the present suit and from the judgment in the previous litigation that the Record of Rights shows that this is a bhaoli holding. In Rent Suit No. 1508 of 1916 the plaintiffs sued the defendant for bhaoli rent for 1320 to 1323. The second issue in that suit is whether the land is bhaoli or nakdi. A compromise decree in a suit between the lessee of the village and the defendant was produced in evidence. The Munsif, rightly stating the question to be whether the entry in the Record of Rights had been rebutted by this decree, held that it had not. The District Judge came to the opposite decision and dismissed the suit for produce rent. The Courts below have held that that decision was conclusive in the present litigation.

The present case is on all fours with Kali Roy v. Partap Narain (1). There the plaintiff relied on the Record of Rights which showed bhaoli rent. The defendant relied on a previous rent-decree at a cash rental. It was held that the decision in a previous rent suit as to the amount of rent payable does not operate as res judicata in a suit for the rent of the subsequent years, although it may give rise to a presumption under section 51 of the Bengal Tenancy Act that the rents for subsequent years remained the same. This decision answers the argument of the learned Vakil for the respondent to the effect that a decision that rent is cash rent must be res judicata, because a cash rent cannot change to a produce rent. The rule is that while the decree finally decides the rent payable for the years in suit it is merely presumptive evidence of the rent of future years and the presumption may be rebutted. The cases referred to by the learned Vakil for the respondent, Maharaja Radha Kishore Manikya Bahadur v. Umed Ali (2) and Upendra Kumar Chakravarti v. Sham Lal Mondoi (3), have no bearing on the present question. In the decision of this Court relied on by the District Judge the principal question was the question of area. I hold, therefore, that the decisions of the Courts below are wrong and I decree this appeal with costs and set aside the decrees of the District Judge and the Munsif and remand the case to the Munsif for trial.

Assignment of rent of future renewals of lease, validity of.

An assignment of rent cannot operate in respect of future possible leases that may come into existence as a result of renewal. [p. 140, col. 1.]

Petitions under section 25 of Act IX of 1887, praying the High Court to revise the decree of the Court of the District Munsif, Alatur, dated the 17th September 1921, in S. C. S. Nos. 458 to 461 of 1921 respectively.

Messrs. T. R. Ramachandra Iyer, T. R. Krishnaswami Iyer and A. S. Venku Iyer, for the Petitioner.

Mr. C. V. Ananthakrishna Iyer, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—These are revision petitions against the judgments of the District Munsif of Alatur in four small cause suits. The facts out of which the suits arose are practically admitted. The plaintiff is the karnavan of a tavazhi known as the Kumaran-chidayuthu house. Besides this, there were in the tarwad two other tavazhis, viz., Eravamannattil house and the Puliaankalath house. In a litigation of 1887, there was a compromise between all the tavazhis by which "the michavaram collected from the tenants of "Kuzhalmannom" was allotted for the expenses of the members of the first house. (Exhibit A). Relying on the compromise the present suits are filed for recovering the michavaram from the four of the kannom tenants in Kuzhalmannom-amsom. The tenants pleaded that the rents were paid to the karnavan of the tarwad who is D. W. No. 1, and that the plaintiff is not entitled to the rents.

The District Munsif thought that plaintiff's claim falls within the exception to the rule that "strangers to a contract cannot enforce it." It is conceded before me by Mr. Ananthakrishna Iyer, the learned Vakil who appeared for the respondents, that neither the rule nor the exception have any application to the cases. The payment of michavaram under the contracts (which are contained in Exhibit F series) was not to third persons but to the karnavan of the tarwad in whose favour the kychils were taken. But Mr. Ananthakrishna Iyer argues that Exhibit A amounts to an assignment of the right to collect the miclavaram. I agree with him that Exhibit A ought to be construed to be an assignment of the right of the main tarwad. Mr. Ramachandra Iyer, who appeared for the petitioner, does not seriously dispute this; but he contends that the assignment could be operative only in respect of the miclavaram due for the remaining years of the kanoms, existing in 1888 and cannot operate for the miclavaram due in respect of renewed kanoms as it was dependent on the possibility of renewal.

I agree with this contention. The cases relied on by Mr. Ananthakrishna Iyer, viz., Allen v. Bryan (1) and Williams v. Hayward (2), do not help him, as in those cases the assignments of rents for definite periods (being in each case the remainder of the term of the lease) were in question. I do not think that an assignment of rent can operate in respect of future possible leases that may come into existence as the result of renewal (section 6 of the Transfer of Property Act). Mr. Ananthakrishna Iyer tried to get over the difficulty by arguing that the transfer was of an interest in immoveable property. I do not think that the difficulty can be got rid of in this way. The interest transferred includes possibilities and is very indefinite.

In the result, the revision petitions are allowed and the plaintiff's suits are dismissed with costs throughout.

Pre-emption suit—Gift to defeat pre-emption—Vendee becoming co-sharer before decree—Suit, maintainability of—Pleadings—Genuineness of document not challenged in First Court—Document, whether may be attacked in appeal.

A suit for pre-emption cannot be maintained where the vendee, though a stranger on the date of the institution of the suit, obtains a gift of some property in his favour and becomes a co-sharer in the village before the date of the decree even though the gift be obtained with a view to defeat the right of pre-emption.

If the genuineness of a document is not challenged when it is produced in the Court of first instance, and no evidence is adduced to rebut the evidence given in proof of the document by the party producing it, it is not open to the opposite party to attack the document in appeal, nor is it open to the Appellate Court to ignore it.

Second appeal from a decree of the First Additional Judge, Aligarh, dated the 3rd March, 1921.

Dr. K. N. Katju, for the Appellant.

Mr. Ambika Prasad for Mr. N. C. Vaish, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—On the 24th July 1919 one Rup Singh executed a sale-deed of his share in favour of Shib Lal in lieu of Rs. 2,000. The same day Shib Lal hypothecated the said share to third parties in lieu of Rs. 1,600. On the 30th March, 1920 the plaintiffs-respondents brought the suit out of which this appeal has arisen against Shib Lal for pre-emption. On the 23rd April, 1920 after the summonses to the defendants had been issued and served, one Ram Prasad, a co-sharer in the village, executed a deed of gift in favour of Shib Lal in respect of a very small amount of the property in the village. The vendee, Shib Lal, after obtaining the deed of gift in his favour resisted the claim of the plaintiffs-respondents on the ground among others that he (Shib Lal) was already a co-sharer in the village and, therefore, no suit of pre-emption was maintainable against him. The Court of first instance dismissed the claim. On appeal the learned District Judge set aside the decree of the first Court and holding that the deed of gift was fictitious, decreed the claim of the plaintiffs-respondents.

In Second Appeal before us it is contended that the finding of the learned Judge with regard to the character of the deed of gift is unsupported by any evidence and is, therefore, bad in law. It appears that the deed of gift when produced in the Court of first instance was not challenged on the ground that it was fictitious or fraudulent. Shib Lal gave evidence as to its due execution and the mutation of names in his favour on the basis of it. No evidence in rebuttal on behalf of the plaintiffs-respondents was given. The learned Judge considers that the circumstances of the execution of the deed of sale were such that it must have been fictitious. The circumstances that he relies upon are that the donor is of a different caste to the donee, that the deed of gift was given after the institution of the suit and the smallness of the property gifted. These circumstances would go to show that Shib Lal, the vendee, persuaded the donor to execute the deed of gift in order to defeat the plaintiffs-respondents' right of pre-emption. The circumstances would not show that the deed of gift was fictitious nor can the presumption of fictitiousness be based upon those circumstances. If the plaintiffs-respondents intended to challenge the deed of gift they should have said so in their pleadings and given some evidence in support of the allegations of fraud and fictitiousness against the character of the deed. In the absence of any pleadings challenging the deed it was not open to the lower Appellate Court to ignore it. We, therefore, allow the appeal, set aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court and restore that of the first Court with costs throughout including fees in this Court on the higher scale, if any.

Madras City Tenants' Protection Act (III of 1922), s. 9, whether retrospective—Ejectment, decree for, passed before Act—Application under section, whether maintainable.

Section 9 of the Madras City Tenants' Protection Act has no retrospective effect, and where a decree has been passed before the Act came into force for the ejectment of a tenant, the latter cannot apply for an order under section 9 of the Act to direct the landlord to sell the land to him.

Appeal against an order of the City Civil Court, Madras, dated the 23rd March, 1922 in O. S. No. 278 of 1919, on its file, (City Civil Court Appeal No. 32 of 1920 on the file of the High Court).

Mr. S. Krishnamachariar, for the Appellants.

Mr. C. Veeraraghava Iyer, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

Spencer, J.—The City Civil Judge's order, so far as he referred the petitioners to separate proceedings for a declaration that they were entitled to whatever rights their mother possessed at the time of her death from her status as tenant, cannot be supported. They were entitled to have the question whether the interest of their mother had devolved on them decided by the Court to which they made their application. Another obstacle to appellants' success, however, exists. The application was one under section 9 by persons claiming to be tenants under Madras Act III of 1922. Section 9 speaks only of tenants "against whom a suit in ejectment has been instituted."

In this case a decree was passed against petitioners' mother in the City Civil Court on 13th August 1920 and was confirmed on appeal in this Court on 7th February 1922, that is, before the Act came into force.

The general frame of the Act including section 10 makes it clear that section 9 was not intended to enable tenants to apply for sale of the land to them under this section after the ejectment suit, to which they were parties, had been decreed.

Section 10 permits sections 4, 5, 6 and 8 to be applied to suits in which decrees had been passed for ejecting tenants before the Act came into force but not executed. Section 5 provides the manner in which the amount of compensation to be paid to tenants is to be determined and subsequently modified. Section 6 provides for the determination of a reasonable rent when the landlord cannot or will not pay compensation. Section 4 deals with the effect of suits for ejectment being dismissed and section 8* with the effect of rents being determined.

There is a noticeable omission of section 9 from mention in section 10. It is suggested that this may be due to section 9 having been inserted in the Act after the other sections had been incorporated, and that but for an oversight section 9 would have found mention in section 10.

Whatever may be the explanation, the Act, as it has been enacted, gives no retrospective effect to section 9; consequently, where a decree has been passed before the Act came into force for the ejectment of a tenant, it is too late for the tenant to apply to the Court that passed the decree for an order directing the landlord to sell the land to him. On this ground the application must fail and the appeal is, therefore, dismissed with costs.

Venkatasubba Rao, J.—I am also of the opinion that the appeal should be dismissed with costs.

The suit was in ejectment and the City Civil Court passed a decree on the 13th August 1920 and it was confirmed in appeal by the High Court on the 7th February 1922. The Madras City Tenants' Protection Act, III of 1922, came into operation on a subsequent date. See section 81 of the Government of India Act, 1915. The defendant was a Muhammadan woman. Her daughters applied to the City Civil Court on the 27th February 1922, sometime after the Act came into force, for an order under section 9 to direct the plaintiff to sell the land on which the superstructure stands for a price fixed by the covenant. The learned City Civil Judge dismissed the application on the ground that the petitioners should get their title declared to succeed to their mother, apparently being of the opinion that he could not decide in the proceedings before him the question as regards their title to represent the deceased defendant. In this he was obviously wrong. It was his duty to have adjudicated on their title if there was any contest regarding it. The defendant was either a tenant liable to pay rent or a person who continued in possession after the termination of the tenancy [see section 2 clause (4)]. The legal representatives of the defendant would be entitled to the same rights as herself.

But the appeal may be disposed of on another ground which is fatal to the appellants. Section 9 refers to a tenant against whom a suit in ejectment has been instituted. The words "has been" are material. I do not think a tenant, against whom a decree for ejectment was passed prior to the coming into force of the Act, can apply under section 9. Section 10 places the matter beyond doubt. It refers to suits "which are pending or in which decrees for ejectment * * * have been passed but have not been executed before the coming into force of this Act." A distinction is made between suits which are merely pending and those in which decrees in ejectment have been passed. Section 10, while stating that sections 4, 5, 6 and 8 shall apply to suits which are pending or in which decrees for ejectment have been passed, makes no reference to section 9.

I, therefore, hold, that the appellants are not entitled to make an application under section 9.

Messrs. A. P. Sen, M. Wasim and Imtiaz Ali, for the Appellants.

Mr. E. R. Kedwai, for Respondent No. 1.

Mr. Niamat-Ullah, for Respondents Nos. 1 to 3.

JUDGMENT.—This is a case in which the plaintiffs seek redemption of a mortgage executed by their respective fathers and grandfathers on 27th April 1897 for a sum of Rs. 19,000, notwithstanding the existence of an absolute foreclosure decree on foot of this mortgage, which was passed on 3rd September 1900. The sole ground on which they seek to set aside the decree is, that certain members of the family were not properly represented in the suit. The original ancestor of the family, Pekhani Tewari, had five sons, one of whom died without issue, so that there are four branches of the family of which survivors now remain. The four surviving branches were separated in estate.

The heads of each of these four branches joined in the mortgage in question. It is not disputed, and has never been disputed in this litigation, that the mortgage was properly executed for purposes which were binding on the joint family estate. The three pleas, which were taken in appeal were:—

1. that certain persons who were alive at the execution of the mortgage were not made parties to the foreclosure suit, and that they were not sufficiently represented by their fathers or grandfathers who were made parties;

2. that the legal representatives of one of the original mortgagors, Dwarka, were not properly brought on the record,

3. that two persons, Jokhu and Ram Charan, were sued as of age, though they were in reality minors.

The third plea was not argued, and was expressly abandoned at the hearing before us.

The facts on which the first plea is based are these. During the pendency of the foreclosure suit, the defendant Dwarka, died leaving two sons, Bhagirathi and Mahadeo, and Sada Parshad, a grandson by a deceased son. An application was made to bring his legal representatives on the record, and the Court ordered notices to issue to them. The contention of the appellants is, that it is not proved that these notices were ever served. The learned Subordinate Judge has relied on the well-known presumption recognised in section 114 (c) of the Indian Evidence Act, that judicial acts have been regularly performed, and has said that it is found that the Court after ordering issue of notice did bring on the record Dwarka's representatives, it must be presumed that they had been properly served. The appellants have certainly failed to show the contrary. They neither summoned the record of the case, nor have they produced either the original notices or a copy of them. It is not even known whether these are still in existence. It is impossible to draw any conclusion from the copies of orders on the order-sheet, and from the fact that the order-sheet does not specifically mention service having been effected, that it was not so effected. The appellants have argued that service could not having been effected, on one of the representatives, Mahadeo, because there is evidence that at that time he was in Rangoon. Notices were ordered to be issued on 25th May 1900, and the legal representatives were brought on the record on 23rd June. All we have as to Mahadeo is, that he was mentioned as being in Rangoon in an application filed on 7th April and that one Sheo Dayal Bharghi, who wished to purchase the property, spoke of him as being in Rangoon on 3rd September 1900. There is nothing whatever to show that he may not have returned to his village between these two dates, or that service may not have been effected on him in one or other of the ways recognised by the Code of Civil Procedure. If there is any oral evidence on the point, we have not been referred to it. This suit was not filed till 21 years after the decree complained of was passed, and evidence of small details of procedure cannot be expected after so long an interval. The fact that no attempt has been made to summon the original notices, or to show that they have been destroyed, is significant. The plaintiffs have entirely failed to make out their case on this issue, and we have no hesitation in concurring with the learned Subordinate Judge.

It has been argued that there is no presumption that any particular act was in fact performed, and, therefore, if there was direct evidence of the service of summons, the Court might presume that it was regularly served, but that the Court cannot presume the fact of service. This argument is misleading. Service of summons is merely a ministerial act. The judicial act of the Court, the validity of which is challenged, is the step of bringing the legal representatives on the record, and it is to this that the presumption of regularity applies.

A minor point was taken in the Court below in connection with this issue on the ground that it was not proved that guardian was appointed for Sada Prasad, who was a minor. The learned Subordinate Judge found against the plaintiffs, and in any case the matter is immaterial, as Sada Prasad Singh died without issue, and his nearest representatives were his uncles, Bhagirathi and Mahadeo, who, as we have found above, were duly represented.

On the second issue we hold without hesitation, that a son or grandson cannot escape the effect of a foreclosure decree passed against his father or grandfather on a mortgage executed for purposes binding on the family estate, merely because he was not impleaded by name in the suit. He is represented by his ancestor. If that ancestor has authority to execute the mortgage, he equally had authority to represent his son or grandson in the litigation. The ancestor must be presumed to be the head of that branch of the family which includes his own descendants. The rule applicable to such cases was laid down by Sir James Colville as long ago as 1879 in Suraj Bansi Koer v. Sheo Persad Singh (1).

It is—

“That where joint ancestral property has passed out of a joint family, either under a conveyance executed by a father in consideration of an antecedent debt, or in order to raise money to pay off an antecedent debt, or under a sale in execution of a decree for the father's debt, his sons by reason of their duty to pay their father's debts, cannot recover that property, unless they show that the debts were contracted for immoral purposes, and that the purchasers had notice that they were so contracted.”

The case of Sahu Ram Chandra v. Bhup Singh (2) has thrown fresh light on the question of what is antecedent debt for the purpose of supporting an alienation of family property, but it has not in any way abrogated the principle laid down by the Privy Council in the earlier case.

KUNHI KUTTY v. RAMAN.

We concur entirely with the observations on this subject contained in the decision in Basdeo Lal v. Mahabir (3). It is open to a son who is not made a party to a suit to show that a debt in respect of which the mortgage was executed was not really antecedent in the sense accepted by the Privy Council, or that, if antecedent, it was for a purpose either illegal or immoral, but where the mortgage was within the scope of the father's authority, the sons are bound by the decree: Lachhman Shukul v. Ram Kishore (4). There is direct authority of the Privy Council itself in a case, relied on by the learned Subordinate Judge for the proposition that the father may represent the sons in foreclosure proceedings, Sheo Shankar Ram v. Jaddo Kunwar (5). In another recent Privy Council case, Ganpat Lal v. Bindbasni Prashad (6), their Lordships refused to allow a right of redemption to a plaintiff who was not made a party where the mortgage was made by the father for a purpose which bound the whole family property, and the son did not impeach the propriety of the decree or of the sale made under it. In this case also the plaintiffs do not allege any fact, such as fraud or misrepresentation, which would vitiate the decree. They base their claim solely on the omission to make them parties.

The appellants have relied strongly on section 85 of the Transfer of Property Act, which was in force at the time of the decree, and have urged that this provision is independent of Hindu Law, and requires every person having an interest in the property to be specifically joined. This contention was considered and overruled in the Full Bench decision of the Allahabad High Court in Hori Lal v. Nimman Kunwar (7). It was held by the Full Bench of five Judges in that case, that the sons were sufficiently represented by their fathers for the purposes of that section, and that there was no necessity to implead them by name. We entirely concur with the reasoning of this judgment, and it is unnecessary, therefore, to discuss the matter in further detail. The appellants also rely on certain decisions of the Calcutta High Court and on two single Judge decisions of this Court: Drigpal Singh v. Sukhnandan Lal (8) and Jadu Nath Singh v. Afzal Khanam (9). It is sufficient to say that, in so far as these cases decide any thing contrary to the principles laid down above, we are unable to follow them.

For the reasons already given, we dismiss the appeal with costs.

JUDGMENT.—The suit is one for partition by the plaintiff who is a member of the Thatttan caste in North Malabar, which caste follows Makhattayam Law. Various issues were framed, but the original Court dealt with two only, Issue No. II, whether the properties are impartible and Issue No. XIV, whether the plaintiff is not the legitimate son of the deceased Valia Nambi, the owner of the property sought to be partitioned. The original Court held that the property is impartible which finding was enough to dispose of the suit, and that the plaintiff was what is known as Veetukutti, or the son of a Sambandham wife who is not brought to her husband's house, and that such a Veetukutti is not entitled to share in his father's property. The Appellate Court agreed with the original Court on the last two points but did not consider the first. It is urged before us by the plaintiff, who is the appellant before us, that the lower Courts have erred in law in coming to these conclusions.

To take the first issue as to partibility, we think the original Court has wrongly thrown the onus of proof on the plaintiff, though the frame of the issue threw it on the contesting defendant, and that it was wrong in holding that there is any presumption of law in favour of impartibility in the case of Thatttan caste. The Thatttans are Hindus; therefore, under section 16 of Act III of 1873, the Courts have to apply to them the principles of Hindu Law, unless and until it is proved that they follow any other Customary Law. The rule of Hindu Law is in favour of partibility, and impartibility is the exception. Makhattayam Law, which the Thatttan caste admittedly follows, corresponds in the main to the ordinary Hindu Law. Marumakhattayam, in which partibility is unknown, is an exception to the general rule. Hence, prima facie, Makhattayam involves partibility. The original Court has relied on various rulings of this Court to rebut that legal presumption, but, in our opinion, these do not justify any such inference. The case in Rarichan v. Perachi (1) merely says that those who follow Makhattayam must not be taken to be necessarily governed by Hindu Law, that is, that it is open to them to prove a custom at variance with Hindu Law; but it is no authority for the proposition that even if such a custom is not proved Hindu Law will not apply. The ruling in Raman Menon v. Chathunni (2) proceeded on a definite finding that among Thiyyans there is no custom of compulsory partition. It may be noted that this ruling relates to Thiyyans and not to Thatttans, and that its correctness has been gravely called in question in a later ruling of a Bench of this Court reported as Karuppaliyal P. K. Raman v. Ramulathaparukkal V. Muthu (3). In Imbichi Kandan v. Imbichi Pennu (4) the decision follows the general principle of Hindu Law either of impartible or of divided property. The ruling in Kunhi Pennu v. Chiruda (5) also substantially follows the ordinary Hindu Law as opposed to that of Marumakkattayam. In Velu v. Chamu (6), which deals with the case of the Illuvans, the Court refused to extend to that caste the ruling of impartibility among Thiyyans as laid down in Raman Menon v. Chathunni (2) and held that the Illuvans had proved a custom of partibility. There is, therefore, no good ground why this Court in the case of the Thattans should not follow the principle laid down in the Karuppalaiyal P. K. Raman v. Ramulathaparukkal V. Muthu (3), or depart from the ordinary rule that the ordinary Hindu Law has in the first instance to be applied, unless and until proof of custom to the contrary has been established. This principle has also been adopted in the two unreported cases of this Court coming from Malabar, Second Appeal No. 518 of 1901 and Second Appeal No. 1056 of 1919.*

As to proof in this case of any custom to the contrary, we find none, no proof of the sort which is required to establish a uniform, continuous, and definite practice submitted to for so long a period that it should be accepted as an established governing rule of the caste. The original Court rejected Exhibit E, perhaps with reason, but if the law of Thiyyans is to be used to prove a custom of impartibility, amongst Thattans, then, Exhibit G, which lays down that the law among Kanichans is partibility, should be used in favour of the Thattans. But it is right that each caste should stand on the footing of its own rules and customs. Beyond the evidence noted there is only the vague evidence of three Thattans, D. Ws. Nos. 2, 3 and 4, that custom sanctions no compulsory partition, as against that of P. W. No. 2, another Thattan, who says it does. The evidence is very vague and seems to be based merely on the fact that the witnesses D. Ws. Nos. 2, 3 and 4 have never known a case of partition. We cannot hold that such evidence affords in law sufficient proof of a valid custom, which would suffice to rebut the presumption of law that the property is partible. We hold, therefore, that the Trying Court on this issue has committed an error of law.

As to the next point, both the lower Courts have failed to address themselves to the proper legal points at issue. Assuming for the moment that there is a concurrent finding of fact that the plaintiff is illegitimate, it does not follow, as a matter of course, as the lower Courts suppose, that he is not entitled to a share in the joint family property. Among Sudras, under the ordinary Hindu Law, an illegitimate son is entitled to a share, and it was, therefore, open to the plaintiff to contend, as he does here, either that he is a Sudra for the purpose of Hindu Law, (which prima facie applies to his caste), since Hindu Law brings together as Sudras all castes below the Vaisyas; or to contend that his caste follows Sudra custom in the matter of the inheritance of an illegitimate child. On the merits of these contentions we say nothing at present, but would point out only that if the Hindu Law for Sudras is to be applied to the plaintiff's caste, he will prima facie, even if illegitimate, be entitled to a share without further proof or disproof of the custom; while if his case is to rest on proof of a custom by which Sudra custom is applied to his caste or on proof of independent custom altogether, then such custom will have to be proved. In the former case the onus of disproving the presumption of law will rest on the defendant; in the latter the onus of proving the custom will lie on the plaintiff.

Now, the only issue on this part of the case, and the only point, therefore, to which the parties had to direct their attention, was whether the plaintiff is not the legitimate son of the deceased Valia Nambi. Instead of trying that issue, both Courts have tried an issue not framed, whether the plaintiff is a Veetukutti, apparently assuming, first, that a Veetukutti is illegitimate as the word is used in Hindu Law, and, secondly, that to find that plaintiff is illegitimate puts him out of Court. It may be here pointed out that among the caste of Mukhavars in Malabar, also an inferior caste, it would appear that the children of a Sambhandam connection may inherit their father's property (Vide the Gazetteer of Malabar, page 182). We think there should be definite findings on these points in the case of the Thattan caste, since the customs of this caste appear not yet to have been the subject of judicial decisions, and a decision in this case will affect the whole caste.

In order that the matter may be re-opened and properly tried, the findings that the plaintiff is a Veetukutti and that a Veetukutti has no share in his father's property must be set aside and we do so on the ground that they were never in issue in the case. The finding of the Trying Court on Issue No. 2, as to partibility, is also set aside for reasons already given. The decisions of the lower Courts, based on these findings, are set aside.

The whole case is remanded to the original Court with a direction to re-hear the case after framing and trying the following issues in the light of the above remarks:—

I. Does the ordinary Hindu Law of partibility of joint family property not apply to the Thattan caste in North Malabar, or is there any caste custom to the contrary?

II. Is the plaintiff a Veetukutti, as that word is used by the Thattan caste?

III. Is a Veetukutti illegitimate in the legal sense of that word?

IV. Does a Veetukutti have no share in the joint family property?

V. Does an illegitimate Thattan have no share in the joint family property?

VI. If the property is partible and the plaintiff is illegitimate, to what share is he entitled?

VII. If the property is partible and the plaintiff is a Veetukutti, is he entitled to any share, and if so what?

VIII. If the property is partible and the plaintiff is illegitimate, is he entitled to any share and, if so, what?

Fresh evidence may be taken as offered by either party or by the Court.

If the findings are that the property is impartible or that the plaintiff is not entitled to any share, it is not, of course, necessary to decide the other issues as the plaintiff's suit will fail in limine.

Costs up to date in both lower Courts will abide the result. Appellant will get his costs in this Court.

The general rule is that, except on proof of irreparable injury, the High Court will not interfere in revision when there is another remedy open to the applicant. The same rule applies to interlocutory orders. [p. 148, col. 2.]

There is no rule, however, that the High Court is not justified in interfering with an order even where there has been a refusal to exercise jurisdiction. [p. 149, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.

Mullick, J.—The plaintiff brought a suit for enhancement of rent on two grounds, namely, that there had been a rise in the price of staple food crops, and that the rent paid by the defendant was lower than the prevailing rate paid for similar lands with similar advantages.

The Munsif framed an issue with regard to the first ground but declined to frame an issue as to the prevailing rate. An application was made to him to re-consider his decision, but that application was unsuccessful, and the plaintiff now seeks the assistance of this Court in revision.

It is quite clear that the general rule is that, except on proof of irreparable injury, this Court will not interfere in revision under section 115 of the Code of Civil Procedure, when there is another remedy open to the applicant. Interlocutory orders are not exempted. Upon the pleadings here, clearly an issue arises whether the rent payable by the defendant is below the prevailing rate and the learned Vakil for the defendant cannot assign any reason why that issue was not framed. He contents himself by suggesting that possibly the Court may have been under the impression that section 31 (A) of the Bengal Tenancy Act did not extend to the locality to which the suit relates, but that is not a sufficient answer. The plaintiff is entitled to have the issue raised and to give evidence as to the subject-matter of it. The learned Vakil for the opposite party next falls back upon the plea that, the Munsif having decided in exercise of a jurisdiction which he possesses, this Court cannot interfere either under section 115, Code of Civil Procedure, or under section 107 of the Government of India Act, and he cites Chandi Roy v. Kirpal Roy (1). In that case Mr. Justice Woodroffe and Mr. Justice Carn-duff declined to interfere where the Court had refused the plaintiff's prayer for the amendment of the plaint, but the learned Judges did not lay down any rule that, where there has been a refusal to exercise jurisdiction, the High Court will not be justified in interfering. The case before us is perhaps near the border line so far as section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code is concerned, but it is clear to us that under section 107 of the Government of India Act it is a fit case for our interference.

The application will, therefore, be allowed and the Munsif will frame the issue which arises as to the prevailing rate and proceed with the trial in accordance with law. The petitioner will get his costs. Hearing fee one gold mohur.

DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Arbitration—Suit before Court having no jurisdiction—Agreement to abide by decision—Appeal, right of, if terminated—Suit before Court having jurisdiction—Agreement to have dispute settled by special procedure, effect of.

When parties to a dispute agree to a Court proceeding without jurisdiction, extra cursum curiae, they cannot appeal from its decision. Parties to a suit may agree not to appeal from a decision of a Court and such an agreement will be inferred from the fact that they agreed to the Court taking a course which is altogether outside its ordinary powers. [p. 150, cols. 1 & 2.]

This does not, however, apply to mere deviations from procedure if the Court has jurisdiction over the subject, unless there is an attempt to give it a jurisdiction it does not possess, so that a Court of Appeal cannot properly review the decision. Such deviations do not deprive either of the parties of the right of appeal. The real question in such cases is whether the agreement results in the Court assuming jurisdiction which it otherwise could not have, or involves the Court going so outside its ordinary course of procedure that it is impossible for the Appellate Court to review its decision. [p. 150, col. 2.]

A right of appeal can only be given up by a clear agreement and a Court will not imply a term in an agreement giving up a right of appeal unless it is driven to do so. [p. 151 col. 1.]

In order to make a Court an arbitrator there must be a clear agreement to that effect. A Court acting extra cursum curiae does not involve an application of the provisions contained in the second Schedule to the Code of Civil Procedure. [p. 151, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.

Schwabe, C. J.—This case is of considerable importance, because circumstances of a similar nature have been before the Courts on several occasions, and they have given rise to some considerable divergence of opinion.

The facts are that a suit came before the District Munsif as to whether the defendants had unlawfully diverted some water from the land of the plaintiff and so injured his land. When the case came before the District Munsif certain plans and documents were put before him, and then the plaintiff and some of the defendants agreed in writing, and the Pleader acting for the other defendants, I have no doubt, agreed to what appeared in writing, that the learned Munsif should himself go and inspect the land. The terms of the agreement signed by the plaintiff and two of the defendants are contained in an affidavit which ran as follows:—"We agree to the matter being decided according to the opinion which the Court might entertain on the aforesaid local inspection without going into any further evidence." The plaintiff endorsed on that affidavit an agreement to abide by any decision which the Court may arrive at after making a local inspection of the land and perusing certain plans and other records. The learned Munsif agreed to act on that agreement and went to the place, some seven miles off, two days later. The case was again before the Court when some documents were put in according to the plaintiff's statement and the judgment was given and a decree passed in the ordinary form of a decree.

The issues in the suit were issues of fact and issues of law. The learned Munsif found the facts in a certain way and in view of those facts gave a finding. In due course there was an appeal to the Subordinate Judge, and he expressed his view that the learned Munsif was wrong in law. He held that no appeal lay to him by reason of the agreement referred to above. He purported to follow a case in Chengalraya Chetti v. Raghava Ramanuja Doss (1), where a very similar agreement was held to result in the decree being not appealable on the grounds, as I understand it, that the decree was not a decree of a Judge as such but as an arbitrator. The law, as I understand it, is this. Where parties agree to a Court proceeding without jurisdiction, extra cursum curiæ, as it has been put, the parties cannot appeal from the decision of the Court. The parties in fact may agree not to appeal from the decision of the Court and such an agreement will be inferred from the fact that they agreed to the Court taking a course which is altogether outside the ordinary powers of the Court. But this does not apply to mere deviations from procedure if the Court has jurisdiction over the subject unless there is an attempt to give the Court a jurisdiction it does not possess, so that a Court of appeal cannot properly review the decision. Such deviations do not deprive either of the parties of the right of appeal: Pisani v. Attorney-General (Gibraltar) (2). See also the decision of the House of Lords in Burgess v. Morton (3). So in these cases the question to be decided is, whether an agreement between the parties does result in the Court assuming jurisdiction which otherwise it would not have or involves the Court in going so outside its ordinary course of procedure that it is impossible for the Appellate Court properly to review its decision.

Further, the giving up of a right of appeal is giving up a very important right possessed by all litigants and, in my judgment, such right of appeal can only be given up by a clear agreement. It may be that an agreement is in such terms that the Court will be driven to imply a term that the right of appeal was given up, but a Court would not imply such a term unless it was driven to do so.

Turning to the agreement in this case I can find nothing in it to show an intention to give up a right of appeal. I think it merely means that the parties agree to the evidence being taken in an irregular way or in an unusual way, viz., by the Munsif going to the place and seeing for himself what had happened and what was happening and not relying on what witnesses in Court told him had happened or was happening and the parties agreed to the case being decided in that way and to abide by the decision. If an appeal had been attempted on the ground that the learned Munsif took a wrong view of the facts, that his eyes have deceived him or that the procedure of dispensing with the evidence was irregular, I can well understand the argument that the parties had agreed not to take any such point, and indeed, I think, that would be right. But I can find nothing in the words used to indicate that the parties intended to give up all rights of appeal on questions of law which might arise, or did arise in the case. I do not think, it is right to say, that, even though there was an agreement of the kind indicated, the Court becomes an arbitrator, and, in my judgment, in order to make a Court arbitrator, there must be a clear agreement to that effect, as indeed there was in Sayad Zain v. Kalabhai Lallubhai (4). A Court acting extra cursum curiæ has been said to act as quasi-arbitrator which may be a convenient expression, but it does not involve an application of the 2nd Schedule to the Code of Civil Procedure which is applicable to arbitrators. Such agreement merely involves that the parties who agree expressly or impliedly not to appeal will not be allowed by the Court to appeal. I do not think it is necessary to go in detail into the cases that have been cited but would observe that it follows from what I have said that I do not agree in the reasoning in Nidamarthi Mukkanli v. Thammana Ramayya (5) and Chengalraya Chetti v. Raghava Ramannuja Doss (1). It may be that the result of those decisions is correct. Rao Bahadur Raoji Trimbak v. Govind Vinayak (6) is a case where the agreement stated that the decision was to be final and conclusive. I do not think it is necessary to consider whether the mere inclusion of those words is sufficient, for in this case there are no words to that effect. In Jamnadas v. Gordhandas (7), where the words were "we are not going to produce evidence, and agree to the decision which the Court shall pass after inspection" it was held, and I think rightly, that the Munsif did not thereby become an arbitrator and that an appeal lay from his decision. In Chengalraya Chetti v. Raghava Ramannuja Doss (1), the terms of the agreement were "we shall abide by any kind of decree passed by the Court after a personal inspection of the place in dispute." It was held that the District Munsif acted thereafter as arbitrator and that he acted illegally and with material irregularity in accepting the position of an arbitrator, as all the parties had not consented. It follows from what I have said above that I do not agree with the finding that he acted as arbitrator nor do I agree that the agreement before the Court in that case amounted to an agreement that the Court should act extra cursum curiæ.

This appeal must be allowed with costs and the matter must go back to be disposed of on the merits.

Wallace, J.—I agree. The respondent rests his case not on the footing that the District Munsif's decree was really an arbitration award but on the principle of estoppel. In order that there may be an estoppel prohibiting an appeal by either party there must be an agreement, implicit or explicit, not to appeal. I think the words of the plaintiffs' and respondents' own undertakings read together as a contract, are enough to dispel any such idea, and to show that what the parties agreed to was nothing more than that the finality of the District Munsif's decision by which they agreed to abide was limited to the point which the District Munsif in the absence of other evidence, was required to settle by personal inspection, that is, the point of fact necessary for the decision of the first issue, and the agreement went no further. Now, it is open to the parties in an ordinary suit tried by the ordinary procedure, to dispense with evidence and it is open to the Judge on application by the parties to inspect the place, and what he sees on his inspection is evidence within the meaning of the Indian Evidence Act, on which he may decide issues in the suit, and this and no more is what, I conceive, the original Court has in this case done. Hence, I can see nothing in the agreement between the parties which puts the suit extra cursum curiæ.

I agree, therefore, that no estoppel exists except on the point of fact decided by the Munsif by his inspection of the ground. As to whether on the facts he found he came to a wrong decision on the law, I cannot see how there can be any estoppel of the right of appeal. If there was no agreement not to appeal, there cannot possibly be any question of the appellant intentionally permitting the respondents to believe that he had waived that right and to act according to that belief. I, therefore, agree in the order proposed by the learned Chief Justice.

Acknowledgment has the effect of legitimation according to Muhammadian law, where either the fact of the marriage or its exact time with reference to the legitimacy of the child's birth is a matter of uncertainty. [p. 153, col. 2.]

Where, however, the finding is that there could not have been a valid marriage between the parents, the question of acknowledgment does not arise. [p. 153, col. 2.]

Appeal from a decision of the Subordinate Judge, Patna, dated the 31st July 1920, confirming a decision of the Munsif of Patna, dated the 20th September 1919.

Mr. Chandra Sekhar Banerji, for the Appellants.

Mr. Hassan Jan, for Rai Tribhuban Nath Sahai, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the defendants in a suit brought by the plaintiffs for recovery of possession of one bigha

of land forming part of the compound of their house in Muradpur. The plaintiffs allege that they and the pro forma defendants are the heirs of Nasir Nawab and that they are entitled to the land in suit. There was a case under section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code which was decided in favour of the defendants, and the plaintiffs, therefore, brought this suit for recovery of possession of the land. In the written statement it is alleged that Bibi Munirunnissa, the second wife of Nasir Nawab, left a son and two daughters who were necessary parties. The shares of the plaintiffs in the property were also disputed. It is further alleged that the disputed land had been in cultivating possession of the defendants since 1871 and that their possession had been declared by the Criminal Court in a proceeding under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, on the 3rd of July 1916; and that they had been granted a lease by a registered deed from Bibi Munirunnissa of the land in suit on the 14th of July 1916.

The Munsif disbelieved the alleged settlement in 1871 and the receipts produced by the defendants. With regard to the lease granted by Bibi Munirunnissa, he went into the question of the status of that lady but seems to have left the question open, observing that "one cannot be definite on the point in the absence of the particular evidence required by Muhammadian Law to prove the marriage." He also seems to have held that, whatever might have been the legal effect of a lease granted by her, this particular lease remained a lease on paper only and was never followed by possession and was a collusive act. He gave the plaintiffs a decree for confirmation of possession. The learned Subordinate Judge on appeal also disbelieved the settlement in 1871 and the receipts. In dealing with the settlement by Munirunnissa he considered the question of her status. His finding is to the effect that there was no evidence of actual marriage, and, even if there had been, the marriage it could not have been valid in law. His finding is thus much more definite than the Munsif's. He further held that the lease was executed in order to create evidence and did not confer any title, and that the defendants were not in possession of the land.

It is now contended, in the first place, that the decision in the case under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, being in the appellant's favour on the question of possession and their possession being confirmed by the lease of 1916, the onus was on the plaintiffs to show that they had no possession and that the plaintiffs had both title and possession. Reference was made to the decisions in Lillu v. Annaji Parashram (1) and Dinomoni Chowdhurani v. Brojo Mohini Chowdhurani (2) as showing that the decision of the Criminal Court in a case under section 145 is conclusive of the fact of possession and that the fact thus established remains. The judgments of the Courts below are not altogether precise on this point. The Munsif's decree was for confirmation of possession. The Subordinate Judge, although he did not vary the decree, evidently thought that it should have been a decree for recovery of possession. On the facts found as to the defendant's want of title and possession except under the decision in the case under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, in 1916, such a decree is correct.

In the second place, it is argued with regard to the title of the appellants, first, that no issue was framed as to the marriage of Munirunnissa and that the suit should be remanded for a decision on this point after framing an issue. I do not think that the fact that no issue was raised necessitates a remand of the case. If the defendants wanted an issue on the question of marriage, they should have taken it. The questions that they put in issue, in their written statements were questions of parties and the shares. These questions indirectly raised the question of the status of Munirunnissa and evidence was gone into on both sides. The fact that no issue was framed was not material; the defendants cannot say that they were taken by surprise. Secondly, it is argued that Munirunnissa was acknowledged as his wife by Nasir Nawab and that this is proof of marriage. Reference was made to the case of Bibee Fazilatunnessa v. Bibee Kamarunnessa (3). I do not see how that decision helps the appellants. All that was decided there was that, "unless there is an absolute bar or impediment to a valid marriage, acknowledgment has the effect of the legitimation according to Muhammadan Law where either the fact of the marriage or its exact time with reference to the legitimacy of the child's birth is a matter of uncertainty." The law is stated more fully in Syed Habibur Rahman Chowdhury v. Syed Altaf Ali Chowdhury (4), and under the rule in that case the finding of fact by the Subordinate Judge that there could not have been a valid marriage disposes of the acknowledgment as proof of marriage—see also the judgment of Mahmood, J., in Muhammad Allahdad Khan v. Muhammad Ismail Khan (5) and Liaqat Ali v. Karimunnissa (6). Although, in my opinion, for the purposes of the present litigation in which the question of the marriage of Munirunnissa arises only incidentally, the decision might equally well have been given as the Munsif gave it without definitely coming to any conclusion on the point, the findings of the Court below cannot be disturbed on the ground of the Muhammadan doctrine of acknowledgment.

Finally, it is argued that the appellants took settlement from Munirunnissa as a co-sharer landlord and, therefore, acquired a non-occupancy right. Reference was made to Binad Lal v. Kalu Pramanik (7), but that decision can have no application where it is found that there was no real settlement of the land by Munirunnissa.

All the grounds urged in this appeal, therefore, fail. The decree of the Court below is modified by making it a decree for recovery, and not for confirmation of possession and with this formal modification of the decree the appeal is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

N. SUBRAMANIA AIYAR—PLAINTIFF
—RESPONDENT.Presidency Small Cause Courts Act (XV of 1882), ss. 41, 43, 47, 49—Ejectment suit, stay of.

When proceedings of a summary nature are taken under section 41 of the Presidency Small Cause Courts Act the occupant whom it is proposed to eject is entitled as of right to a stay of the suit, pending a suit in the High Court where he is prepared to bind himself with sureties to institute a suit for compensation for trespass.

The application under section 47 of the Presidency Small Cause Courts Act may be made at any time during the currency of the proceedings and need not necessarily be supported by an affidavit.

Petition, under section 115 of Act V of 1908 and section 107 of the Government of India Act, praying the High Court to revise the order, dated 27th March 1922, of the Court of Small Causes, Madras, in Ejectment Suit No. 739 of 1921.

Mr. W. V. Rangaswami Iyengar, for the Petitioner.

Mr. S. Venkataramana Iyer, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the learned Judge of the Court of Small Causes has held that he has a discretion under section 47 of the Presidency Small Cause Courts Act as to whether or not to stay a suit in the Small Cause Court pending a suit in the High Court when the occupant is prepared to bind himself with sureties to institute a suit for compensation for trespass. He says that the application is not bona fide, and he bases his decision on the acts of the occupant that he has already delayed his proceedings in the Small Cause Court under section 41 and in a manner which quite properly did not commend itself to the Judge of the Small Cause Court, and he also puts his decision on another ground, namely, that the application was not supported by an affidavit. The case here is also argued on a further ground, viz., that in section 47, the words "Whenever on an application being made under section 41" mean at some early stage in the proceedings on that application, it is suggested, either at the first hearing or within a reasonable time thereafter. In my judgment the words of the section leave no discretion to the Judge of the Court of Small Causes at all. The rule is that, when the proceedings of a summary nature are taken under section 41, the occupant whom it is proposed to eject shall have a right to say to the Small Cause Court, "I want to have this case tried in the High Court, and am prepared to bind myself with two sureties for the probable costs of the suit." In my judgment, the Legislature in its wisdom, in section 47, gave no discretion to any one to refuse such an application when made. I can find no ground to say that such an application must be supported by an affidavit. My attention has not been called to any rule to that effect, and the Statute says nothing about affidavits, though I must not be understood to say that the learned Judge would not be justified, if he thinks that the application was not a genuine one at all, in adjourning the case for some short time for an affidavit.

Generally, I should think, he would be satisfied on the material before him, viz., a statement in writing by the Vakil for the first defendant and the first defendant saying that they are ready to file a suit in the High Court and to give the necessary bond, though there may be cases where he would be justified in requiring more; and then it would be open to the Small Cause Court Judge to call upon them to put in an affidavit. In my judgment it was not open to him to dismiss the application as frivolous on the ground that it was not supported by an affidavit.

As to the point taken as to the proper interpretation of the words "on an application" in section 47, that these words mean "at some early time during the currency of such proceedings," I can find nothing in the Act to justify such an interpretation. It seems that the idea of the Act was that these proceedings are not to last long, and

BARU MAL v. SUNDER LAL.

I think it was intended that at any time during the currency of the proceedings this application could be made, and I am confirmed in this view by the sub-clause to section 47, which obviously contemplates such an application being made after an order has been made under section 43 of the Act.

This revision petition must, therefore, be allowed with costs, and the case must go back to the Small Cause Court to proceed according to the provisions of section 47, as explained above.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 11 —Question of title—Decision by Revenue Court—
Res judicata.

In an ejectment suit against an alleged tenant in the Revenue Court, if the tenant sets up the plea of proprietary title and the Court elects to try the question, its decision must be deemed to be the decision of a Civil Court and operates as res judicata in a subsequent suit for the establishment of title in the Civil Court.

Appeal, under section 10 of the Letters Patent, from a judgment of Mr. Justice Smart, dated the 13th of July 1921.

Dr. S. N. Sen, for the Appellant.

Dr. M. L. Agarwala and Mr P. L. Banerji, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The question in this case is whether a previous decision operates as res judicata under the provisions of section 11 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The plaintiff claims certain property by virtue of a sale-deed, dated 29th. of July 1917. Before the institution of the present suit the defendant had brought a suit in the Revenue Court to eject the plaintiff from 5 plots out of the property comprised in the sale-deed, on the allegation that the plaintiff was the tenant of the defendant. In that suit the plaintiff claimed proprietary title in respect of that property by virtue of the sale-deed, which is the basis of the present claim in this suit. The Revenue Court, upon that plea being raised, could have adopted one of two courses. It might have referred the parties to the Civil Court, or it might have constituted itself a Civil Court and tried the question itself. It did not refer the parties to the Civil Court, and must be deemed to have elected to try the question of title. Its decision was adverse to the present plaintiff who was defendant in the previous suit, and the Court held that the plaintiff had failed to prove the proprietary right set up by him. In the present suit the plaintiff claims not only the plots which were in dispute in the suit in the Revenue Court but also other plots. It has been held that the present claim is barred by reason of the decision in the previous suit. The decision in that suit must be deemed to be the decision of a Civil Court. It is true that the property in dispute in the previous suit did not comprise the whole of the property now in dispute, but the question of the plaintiff's title to both descriptions of property is identical and must be deemed to have been decided in that suit. The decision negatived the title, and, therefore, the issue as to the title must be deemed to have been decided in the previous suit. As we have stated above, the Court in the previous suit was, by reason of the action taken by it, equivalent to a Civil Court which could have tried the subsequent suit. The title of the plaintiff was the matter in issue in the previous suit, and having been once decided against the plaintiff, it cannot be raised and decided in this subsequent suit. In this view, this appeal is not sustainable and is dismissed with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. I, r. 10—Suit against Hindu widow to recover properties on footing of adoption—Reversioners, whether can be made parties.

In a suit by a plaintiff to recover certain properties against a Hindu widow on the footing of an adoption made by her, the reversioners of the latter's husband can be properly added as party defendants under O. I, r. 10 (2) of the Code of Civil Procedure. [p. 156, col. 2.]

N. 799, referred to.

The mere fact that the reversioners had failed to sue within six years from the date of the alleged adoption would not debar them from the benefit of an adjudication in proceedings, such as the above otherwise legitimately instituted. [p. 157, col. 1.]

Petition, under section 115 of Act V of 1908, and section 107 of the Government of India Act, praying the High Court to revise an order of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Tanjore, in I. A. No. 263 of 1921, in O. S. No. 19 of 1921.

Mr. S. Ramaswami Iyer, for the Petitioner.

Messrs. A. Krishnaswami Iyer, M. S. Venkatarama Iyer and S. Jagadisa Iyer, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The order I am asked to revise is one made in a suit by the plaintiff, here petitioner, for the recovery of possession of properties comprised in an estate, of which the last male owner was one Sundaram Ayyar. The plaintiff's father was, it is the plaintiff's case, adopted by the first defendant; the widow of Sundaram Aiyar. The plaintiff sues on the ground that he has been unlawfully excluded from the plaintiff properties by that widow on account of an invalid agreement entered into between her and second defendant. The lower Court's order is one made on the petition of the present respondents alleging that they are the nearest reversioners to Sundaram Ayyar and asking that they may be made defendants in the suit. There was in this petition an allegation of collusion between the plaintiff and the first defendant. But in its order making the respondents parties the lower Court has not referred to any grounds for the allegation or recorded any finding in favour of it; and no stress has been laid upon it in this Court.

The question then is, whether the lower Court's order was one which it was competent to make under O. I, r. 10, clause (2), Civil Procedure Code; that is, whether the presence of the respondents before the Court was necessary in order to enable the Court effectually and completely to adjudicate upon and settle all the questions involved in the suit.

It is clear that the question, and probably the most important question, involved in the suit was whether the plaintiff's father's adoption to Sundaram Ayyar was true and valid. That question arises now as between the plaintiff and the first defendant. It will, in the natural course, if the plaintiff persists in his claim, arise again on the first defendant's death between him and the reversioners, whosoever at that time they may be. It is further the case that the adoption is alleged as having taken place over 35 years back and that a complete trial is advisable in the interests of the perpetuation of testimony, if on no other account. All convenience in the circumstances is in favour of the lower Court's order. Objection to it has accordingly been urged on strictly legal grounds, mainly, with reference to the interpretation which has been placed on the words of the rule. The rule is in fact identical with the English rule on the subject and reference has, therefore, been made to Norris v. Beazley (1) and Sitaramaya v. Ramappaya (2), in which that decision was applied in this country. It does not, however, seem to me that these authorities are of much use in the present case, because in them the question, in which the persons alleged to have been wrongly joined were interested in having a decision, was distinctly outside the original scope of the proceedings. Here, as has been pointed out, the question which the present respondents are concerned with is a question which will have to be decided eventually even if no addition is made to the parties originally on the record.

It is then urged that the respondents, having failed to sue within six years from the date of the alleged adoption allowed by the Limitation Act, have lost their right to an adjudication on the adoption, until the succession opens in their favour or in favour of the reversioners at the time of the death of the widow. It is not, however, clear that inability to sue independently debars them from the benefit of an adjudication in proceedings, which have been otherwise legitimately instituted. On the other hand, it is pointed out that the widow in such proceedings as these represents the estate and that a decision against her will be binding on those eventually entitled, in the absence of collusion on the part of the respondents. See Risal Singh v. Balwant Singh (3) and the cases collected in the judgment of Mookerjee, J., in Ganga Narayan Dutta v. Indra Narayan Saha (4). The argument is, then, that it would be strange if a person, who, it cannot be disputed, would be represented by a party on the record, and bound by the decision against that party, is to be debarred from himself appearing to protect his interests. The question thus raised has not, so far as I have been shown, been the subject of any direct decision, but that a party so affected would be entitled to be impleaded is indicated by the language used in Nugenderchunder Ghose v. Sreemutty Kaminee Dossee (5), Veerabadr Aiyar v. Marudaga Nashar (6), and the decision of Mookerji, J., already referred to. Taking this view, I hold that the lower Court's order was not made without jurisdiction. The revision petition, therefore, fails and is dismissed with costs of respondents Nos. 1 and 2. Third respondent widow will pay her own costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 115—Burden of proof, wrong allocation of—Revision—Landlord and tenant—Right to timber—Record of Rights, entry in, value of.

The mere wrong allocation of the burden of proof is not ordinarily a ground for interference in revision with the order of an Appellate Court. [p. 158, col. 1.]

Where, however, an Appellate Court shifts, in appeal, the burden of proof, without giving the party on whom it lays the burden an opportunity of producing additional evidence it commits an error of procedure and its order is open to revision. [p. 158, col. 2.]

The general law is that a landlord is entitled to half the value of the trees cut down by the tenant. If the tenant denies this right he must prove an exception to the general law in the form of a local custom entitling him to the timber on the holding. If he produces an entry in the Record of Rights in support of his claim, the burden is shifted to the landlord to prove the contrary. [p. 158, col. 2.]

The plaintiffs claimed to recover half the price of the timber of certain trees cut by the defendants. The defendants pleaded that they were entitled to the timber. They relied on the entry in the Record of Rights, which showed that they had the entire rights in the timber, and also on the village note. The grounds of the present application are that the learned Subordinate Judge erred in disregarding the village note and in throwing the burden of proof of the custom alleged by the defence on the defendants in spite of their production of the Record of Rights. But the learned Vakil for the opposite party argues that, even if the learned Subordinate Judge was wrong, revision will not lie on such grounds as these; and that in fact he is right in the view he has taken of the law. With regard to the village note I see no reason why it should not have been considered as a piece of evidence and given such weight as the Court was prepared to attach to it, and the Subordinate Judge, in my opinion, was wrong in leaving it out of consideration altogether. But on this ground alone it would not be proper to interfere in revision. In this case, however, the view that the Subordinate Judge has taken has, in my opinion, involved him in an error in procedure. The Munsif held that as the Record of Rights was in favour of the defence in recording their rights in the trees, it was for the landlord to establish his claim. The Subordinate Judge was of opinion that, as the general law was in the landlord's favour, the entry in the Record of Rights was not enough to establish the custom alleged by the defence in view of the fact that it was for them to prove the custom. He, therefore, rightly observed that, "there can be no doubt that the procedure adopted was faulty" and that "the respondents, (that is, the defendants) should have been called upon to prove the custom of appropriating the entire timber. That was not done." Now, if the Subordinate Judge took that view, he ought clearly to have remanded the case in order to give the defendants an opportunity to adduce evidence sufficient to discharge the burden of proof which he thought lay upon them.

The Munsif had taken a different view of the burden of proof, and the proof tendered by the defence was according to that view. When the Subordinate Judge threw the burden otherwise, he ought certainly to have given the defence a further opportunity to discharge it. He, therefore, erred in procedure and this is a sufficient ground for revision of his judgment. But, in my opinion, he was clearly wrong in his view of the burden of proof. The general law is in the landlord's favour. The tenant has to prove an exception to the general law in the form of a local custom entitling him to the timber of the trees. He does this by producing the Record of Rights and this throws the burden on the landlord: [See Janki Kuer v. Wali Muhammed (1)]. In my opinion, the view taken in this case by the Munsif was correct and that of the Subordinate Judge was wrong. This application must, therefore, be allowed and the decree of the Subordinate Judge set aside and the appeal remanded for re-hearing. The hearing fee is assessed at one gold mohur. Costs will abide the result.

Mr. M. R. Bobde, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of this case are that, in execution of a decree obtained against the defendant by the plaintiff, field Survey No. 62, area 6 acres 23 gunthas, assessment Rs. 11, was sold and purchased by one Nainsukhdas Gokuldas on 22nd August 1917 and the purchaser subsequently sold the same to the plaintiff on 8th November 1917. Plaintiff got symbolical possession through the Court on 2nd February 1918. It is contended that defendant withholds actual possession from the plaintiff. Plaintiff, therefore, sues to recover possession and Rs. 1,100. as mesne profits for the year 1917-18. The sale in execution was admitted, but it was contended that the field only was attached and sold and not the bungalow thereon with its compound. It is stated that in January 1900, on an application made by him, the site on which the bungalow with the compound stood was converted into a building site under the orders of the Deputy Commissioner and ceased to be a portion of the field Survey No. 62 of Khamgaon. That site and building was neither attached nor sold. The sale certificate issued to the plaintiff's vendor and the subsequent deed of sale executed by him in favour of the plaintiff do not include the bungalow and the compound. It was further contended that the plaintiff himself was the real purchaser and aware of these facts. He denies that possession was obtained by auction-purchaser. As to mesne profits, it was stated that, as the sale to plaintiff was made on 8th November 1917, he is not entitled to any crops for that year and in fact there were no crops in 1917-18. Plaintiff denied that the site of the bungalow and compound was converted into building site.

The case went to trial on the following issues:—

"(1) What property was ordered to be sold and what was sold in execution of the decree against the defendant?

"(2) Under the sale certificate and the deed of assignment of the same in favour of the plaintiff whether the plaintiff can claim possession of the bungalow also?

"(3) Whether the plaintiff is entitled to mesne profits for the year 1917-18; if so, what amount?"

The Trial Court finds that the contentions of the defendant should be upheld, holding that the defendant had proved that the site of the bungalow and compound ceased to be a portion of the field Survey No. 62 and this portion was never attached and sold. As to mesne profits, parties agreed that the questions about the right to recover the mesne profits and the amount of such profits should be left for execution proceedings. A decree was passed directing the defendant to deliver possession of the field portion of Survey No. 62 to the plaintiff and to pay costs calculated at five times the revenue assessment of that portion, and Pleader's fee at 10 times that amount. Defendant has been allowed costs on the amount of the claim dismissed. Subsequently, the above order was modified and the Court-fee on the plaint and Pleader's fee were assessed on Rs. 7,000, the value of the land proved to be a garden.

This appeal has been filed by the plaintiff and I admitted it subject to objection on the point of limitation at the hearing. That objection has been taken. The decision of the lower Court is dated 9th February 1921. Copies were applied for on 23rd February 1921 and obtained on 15th March 1921 and the appeal was presented to the District Judge on 29th March 1921. It was returned for presentation to the proper Court, namely, this Court, on 13th December 1921, and was filed here on 14th December 1921. It is admitted for the appellant that the appeal lay to this Court and not to the Court of the District Judge, Akola, and, further, it is admitted that the appeal here is barred by some months; but I am asked to show leniency because it was through a mistake of the Pleader that the appeal was filed in the District Judge's Court. In support of this plea for leniency and for extension of time under section 5 of the Limitation Act, I am referred to the following cases; Seth Nerbada Prasad v. Nathuram (1); Sunderbai v. Collector of Belgaum (2); Brij Indar Singh v. Kanshi Ram (3) and Basvanappa Shivrudrappa v. Krishnadas Govardhandas (4). The case of Shib Dayal v. Jagannath Prasad (5) is also relied upon.

It is explained here by the Pleader who appears in this Court, Mr. V. K. Raiwade, that he thought he could urge that the value for jurisdiction would be five times the assessment of the field and not the market-value and, therefore, he filed the appeal in the Court of the District Judge. I have great difficulty in believing this explanation, because, when the lower Court assessed the value of the land as garden land making the whole value of the land, bungalow and kotha Rs. 8,600, an application for revision, Civil Revision No. 58-B of 1919, was presented to this Court and my brother, Kotval, A. J. C., dismissed that application upholding the decision of the lower Court. The revision case was disposed of in this Court on the 15th April 1920 and, as the case in the lower Court was not disposed of until the 9th February 1921, it is obvious that the Pleader must have known that this Court had decided what the value of the suit was and that it was not in the province of the District Court to change that valuation.

Another reason given by the same Pleader for his action in filing the appeal in the Court of the District Judge is, I regret to say, untrue. He tells me that he intended in the District Court to rely on the case of Harba v. Raghunath (6). He states that when the revision was argued before Kotval, A. J. C., this authority was not in existence and, therefore, could not be brought to the Judge's notice and he hoped by mentioning it to get the District Court to accede to his wishes as regards the value of the land in suit. Now, I have taken the trouble to ascertain that Harba v. Raghunath (6) was published in the Nagpur Law Reports in April 1919 and, as the revision application was not argued until the 7th April 1920 the case could have been brought to the notice of this Court in those revision proceedings. The truth is, that the Pleader was grossly negligent in advising his client to file the appeal in the District Court.

In Bholagir v. Bhaddelal (F. A. No. 11 of 1905, decided on 18th August 1905) it was held in a similar case that time should not be extended and in Vithia v. Sakhya (7) where the appellant's Counsel presented a memorandum of appeal which was of the jurisdictional value of over Rs. 5,000 to the Court of the Divisional Judge, having failed to notice that the value had been wrongly entered by his clerk who wrote the memorandum as below Rs. 5,000, it was held that, given due care and attention, the mistake might have been avoided and that the delay thus caused was, therefore, not a "sufficient cause," within the meaning of section 5 of the Indian Limitation Act. Following this ruling, I decline to condone the delay, because the former revision case must have brought it home to the appellant and to his Pleader what the real value of the suit was, and no mistake should have been possible. It cannot be said, in the words of section 5 of the Limitation Act, that the appellant had sufficient cause for not preferring this appeal within due time, and, though there may be no hard and fast rule to control the discretion of a Court in this matter, each case must be examined as to its own circumstances to see whether they make it fall within or without the terms of the general rule. In the present case those circumstances make it fall without the section. Where a litigation has been settled in favour of a particular litigant, that litigant has, upon the termination of the time allowed for appealing, a vested interest in his favour of which he ought not to be deprived in the absence of special circumstances. These circumstances have not been established in the present case. I dismiss this appeal as time-barred. The appellant will pay his own and respondent's costs.

Penal Code (Act XL V of 1860), s. 193—Perjury—Proof.

In order to sustain a successful charge of perjury it is not enough to show that the statement in question is probably not true, it must be shown that it is certainly false. It is necessary for the prosecution to prove either that on its face the statement must be necessarily regarded as deliberately perjured or that it is so from extrinsic circumstances. It must be proved beyond any reasonable doubt that the statement is deliberately false. [p. 164, col. 2; p. 165, col. 1.]

Application from a decision of the Sessions Judge, Chapra.

Sir Ali Imam, Messrs. E. N. Mittler and S. N. Bannerji, for the Petitioners.

The Assistant Government Advocate, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—This was an application made in Criminal Revisional Jurisdiction by two men, one known as Lalmoni Nonia and the other known as Gangabishun. These men were convicted by a Magistrate of the 1st class of Chapra of an offence against the provisions of section 193, Indian Penal Code. They were tried separately, each was sentenced to two years' rigorous imprisonment; the circumstances in each of their cases were identical and when both of them appealed to the Sessions Judge of Saran the appeals were dealt with simultaneously. The learned Sessions Judge on the 11th of October 1922 upheld the decision which had been come to by the Magistrate of Chapra on the 19th of September.

Now, the circumstances which gave rise to this affair are extremely simple, although there has been a good deal of discrepancy of view held in connection with the matters out of which have come these trials and other litigation connected with them. The position may very shortly be put as follows:—

In April of 1916 a man called Ram Lagan Nonia of Lakhnoura was killed; and investigation was held and a certain Durga Prasad was implicated in the matter by the deceased's brothers named Tapsi and Bujhawan. Now, apparently, Durga Prasad was placed upon his trial in connection with this homicide together with other persons, but he was discharged in the course of the preliminary enquiry by virtue of the provisions of section 209 of the Criminal Procedure Code. Durga Prasad then brought a suit claiming damages for malicious prosecution against the deceased's brothers Tapsi and Bujhawan. He succeeded in obtaining judgment in his favour for nearly Rs. 5,000 on the 30th April 1919. In that suit he seems to have proved to the satisfaction of the Tribunal before which his case came, that he was not present when the homicide took place and that he was in fact lying on a bed of sickness at Benares, a considerable distance from the place where this crime is alleged to have been committed. Now, in the course of this suit the two applicants who are now before me and who, it is said, are relatives of the deceased, adduced some evidence on behalf of the defendants and in their testimony they made certain statements as a consequence of which Durga Prasad applied for sanction to prosecute them both for an offence with which they were eventually convicted, namely, of perjury in contravention of the provisions of section 193, Indian Penal Code. This sanction was granted on July 3rd, 1919; but the trial of these two men was stayed until after an appeal, which had been filed in the suit for damages for malicious prosecution, had been by this Court decided. The result of that appeal was that the decision of the Subordinate Judge was affirmed, and then the prosecution, trial and conviction of these two applicants now before me proceeded in the manner which I have already indicated.

Now, the Magistrate, by whom these two persons were convicted, and the Sessions Judge, who confirmed his sentence, have, I must point out at the outset, taken an entirely different view as to the alibi put forward by Durga Prasad to that which had been taken by the Subordinate Judge before whom the suit for damages for malicious prosecution had been preferred and tried. The Magistrate says that, "in spite of the oral as well as documentary evidence I do not see my way to accept this version of the prosecution." When the Magistrate makes use of the words "this version of the prosecution" he refers to the endeavour made by the prosecution to show that the evidence which was given by the two applicants before me in the suit brought by Durga Prasad for damages for malicious prosecution was false, because Durga Prasad was at the date of the murder lying ill of dysentery at Benares. The learned Sessions Judge elaborates the same theme and appears also to be clearly of the opinion that Durga Prasad's alibi was virtually incapable of credence. It is remarkable that he states that in his view the alibi is a very suspicious one. I mention this feature before I discuss the facts upon which the prosecution has here founded its case other than in connection with the alibi, because I think that it indicates in a very marked degree the considerable uncertainty which the circumstances in this case have introduced into the minds of different Tribunals who had to deal with it; whilst the Subordinate Judge in the Civil Court was satisfied of the truth of Durga Prasad's alibi, and whilst apparently on the appeal from that decision in this Court the question of alibi was not seriously contested (it may have been because it really appeared to be one purely of fact), yet both the Magistrate, who tried this case of perjury, and the learned Sessions Judge, who heard the appeal from his decision, came to precisely a contrary opinion.

Having said that much and having pointed out that the evidence which was given in the murder trial, was in the year 1916, whilst that in the damage suit was in 1919, and that in the present prosecution for perjury in 1922, I will pass now to the exact details as to the nature of the charge which has been brought against these two applicants and in connection with which they have been convicted. I think that, as the two cases are substantially identical, it is only necessary that I should deal fully with one.

Now, when giving evidence in 1919 on behalf of the defendants in the suit brought against them for malicious prosecution. The first applicant here, Lalmoni Mahton, or as he is called here Nonia, is stated to have deposed as follows: "I have seen Ram Lagan's Baharghara. My house is in west of it, at a distance of 20 laggis. It was on Saturday night, the day of murder, that I was sleeping at my Darwaza when a pahar night was remaining, Sheoprasad shouted aloud that Gurtali was cutting Ram Lagan. Then I went there running. I met in the way Durga Prasad, Gurtali Sain, Aliman, and Sohawan. They were running away. I went to where from Sheoprasad was shouting. I found there Sheoprasad, Tapsi and Gangabishun. Sheoprasad was telling Tapsi (and I had also enquired) that Aliman and Sohawan were pressing Ram Lagan with lathi and that Gurtali had killed him with Garasi and that they were running away and that Durga Prasad was standing. After hearing it, I came back to my house. I was examined before the Police after 2 or 3 days of occurrence;" and in cross-examination Lalmoni says: "I had met Durga Prasad and others at a distance of 10 laggis from the place of murder. I had asked them why were they running away. Upon this Gurtali Sain scolded me and said, 'keep quiet' (Chup raho). They were a laggi from me, when I met them. They had not their faces concealed . . . I had not made this statement before the Magistrate on (query of) the Police, viz., that I had met Durga, Gurtali, Aliman and Sohawan in way. As no one had questioned me, I did not make that statement." Gangabishun says substantially the same thing. He deposed on the same day as Lalmoni's deposition was taken, that is to say, on April the 22nd, 1919:—"I know about Ram Lagan's murder. It was on Saturday (night) when a pahar night was remaining that. Sheoprasad shouted that Gurtali Sain was cutting Ram Lagan. I heard this shout at my darwaza, which was a rassi from the place of occurrence. I ran from my place and came to the place of murder. I saw Durga Prasad, Gurtali, Aliman and Sohawan running away. I recognised them. Sheoprasad on enquiry by Tapsi said that Aliman and Sohawan were pressing down Ram Lagan with lathi and Gurtali had murdered with Garasi and Durga Prasad was standing. Lalmoni had also come; after that many came but I don't recollect their names . . . I had not made any statement before the Police on Sunday, as Asharfi Sahu was threatening to have murdered who would depose before the Police. I had stated before the Police that on the first day for fear of Asharfi I did not depose before the Police;" and in cross-examination he adds—"I saw Durga Prasad and others running when I was at a distance of 5 or 6 laggis from them. They were running away in southerly direction. I saw their full faces. I had not asked them any question . . . Out of fear, I had not named Durga Prasad before the Police."

Now, what is alleged is false and concocted in these statements and what is alleged is the perjured statement by these men is that they had actually seen, on the night of the murder, at the scene of the crime and running away, Durga Prasad himself. Now, the way in which it is sought to show that this statement made by these two applicants is one which must be regarded as constituting a perjury, is perhaps somewhat a round-about one. It is freely admitted that had not the Magistrate and the Sessions Judge come to the conclusion that Durga Prasad's alibi was not true, and had they, on the contrary, decided that Durga Prasad's presence at Benares ill at the time when this homicide took place had been indubitably proved, the position of these two applicants would have been, to say the least of it, highly precarious. The learned Sessions Judge in a syllogism, the logic of which I do not altogether follow, says that "though the alibi might be false it does not necessarily follow that the statements in question must be true." This is such an obvious truism that it seems to me to be hardly worth stating; but in order to be entirely fair to the accused it should start with much wider premises and it might almost be taken to read properly that, as the alibi was false, the statements of the applicants must be dealt with at best on their own merits and on the assumption that it was not impossible for the purposes of this Criminal trial that Durga Prasad had in fact been present at the time of the occurrence.

Now, the only gravamina of the charge against the two accused lie in two factors; the first of these is that an Inspector of Police gave evidence in the criminal prosecution of these two men that, when he had examined them very shortly after the occurrence six years previously to the time when he was giving his testimony, neither of them had told him that they had seen Durga Prasad. "Lalmoni had," so this Inspector states, "told me, however, that on hearing the golmal he (Lalmoni) had gone to the spot and had seen Sheo Prasad who had told him that Gurtali was running away after cutting Ram Lagan and that Durga Prasad had come and got him murdered." I take it that the last part of this sentence refers to the narrative of Sheo Prasad. The Inspector, according to the learned Sessions Judge, never questioned Lalmoni as to whether he had seen Durga Prasad himself, and it should be noticed that in Lalmoni's testimony before the Subordinate Judge in the case of malicious prosecution, he himself bears out exactly what the Police Inspector had there stated. The Inspector of Police says, that Gangabishun did not tell anything about Durga Prasad having been seen by him running away, but that on the two occasions when he (the Inspector) had endeavoured to elicit some information from Gangabishun, he had given somewhat different statements in which, in the second, he added materially to what he had stated in the first. In the former he had stated that he had only heard of the murder in the following morning; whilst in the second, given nearly a month later, he is said to have told the Inspector that he heard the noise and went to the place where he found Ram Lagan dead from a cut, Sheo Prasad Nonia, Tapsi Nonia, Lalmoni Nonia and Deonandan Koeri. Sheo Prasad and Tapsi were saying that Gurtali and Sohawan and Aliman had run away after killing Ram Lagan. According to the Inspector's evidence, this Gangabishun never even said as much as Lalmoni had said and had not stated that Tapsi or Sheo Prasad had even mentioned the name of Durga Prasad, a possibility which, in view of the gradual manner in which he was adding to the amount which was being elicited from him by successive investigation, is not at all unlikely.

Now, I have no doubt that, so far as it goes, the evidence which was given by the Inspector of Police may be regarded as of some importance and also as being, so far as he can remember, correct. I think, however, it is desirable to mention casually that a long period had elapsed between what took place in 1916 and the giving of his testimony in 1922, that it is not altogether unreasonable to suppose that the enquiries directed to these two men were not, as indeed can be seen by the evidence which was subsequently given before the Sub-Divisional Officer, pursued with great minuteness (as there were, it is clear, other witnesses who ostensibly purported to know more about the matter and who were ready to give far more important evidence than was apparent from the statements which were elicited from Lalmoni and Gangabishun), and, lastly, that, even assuming that the Inspector's memory is complete as to minutiae and that what he states is perfectly correct, it does not seem to me to amount to more than that before him these two men may not have told everything which they alleged they knew. They themselves now give explanations, such as they are, indicating why they did not tell the Inspector everything which they told the Subordinate Judge.

One must now pass from that first portion of the case which has weighed with the learned Magistrate and with the learned Sessions Judge to the second part which, no doubt, is perhaps of greater gravity; and that is the depositions which were in fact made by these two men before the Sub-Divisional Officer in 1916. Lalmoni deposes very much to the same effect as that which he is said to have stated before the Police Inspector. The material part of the evidence reads thus:—

"On Saturday night over 3 months ago 3 gharis night remaining I was sleeping at my door. Sheo Prasad called out loudly that Gurtali Sain had cut. I was awoke then. I ran up and saw Sheo Prasad, and questioned him. He said Gurtali had cut. Durga was standing by, Sohawan and Aliman were pressing. I went, Ram Lagan was lying on a charpai, with a cut on the right side of his face . . . I went home. The Sub-Inspector examined me."

Nothing is elicited from him in cross-examination, and in re-examination he says: "I bolted from fear." Gangabishun also says very much the same thing as he is said to have said in his second statement to the Inspector of Police. He deposes:—

"On Saturday night over 3 months ago

I was at my door. Sheo Prasad called out that Gurtali is cutting. I ran up to the place, at Ram Lagan's out-house. I saw Sheo Prasad. He told me Gurtali cut Aliman and Sohawan Prasad and Durga Prasad was standing there. I understood he had seen it. Ram Lagan was on a charpai, with a cut across his face—" and in cross-examination, he said:—

"I do not know why, when the Sub-Inspector came, I denied all knowledge on that day from fear. I did not tell the Sub-Inspector that I heard of the murder at sunrise or that I heard of the murder, but no names of any accused, or that I suspected none. On Monday the Inspector and Sub-Inspector came. Sub-Inspector took my statement. I told the Sub-Inspector the name of Gurtali only from fear of Asharfi 3 days after I gave all 4 names to the Sub-Inspector and made a full statement."

Then in re-examination he adds—"Asharfi said that all the witnesses for Ram Lagan would meet with him first."

Now, I do not know after a careful consideration that this evidence given before the Sub-Divisional Officer carries the matter very much further. I, of course, do not for one moment suggest in any way that Durga Prasad was present at the time of the occurrence, or that the statements which were made by these two applicants before the Subordinate Judge were necessarily true. I should only like to point out that it must be shown, in order to sustain against them a successful charge of perjury, that they were certainly false.

Now, I do not think that the evidence which they gave before the Sub-Divisional Officer is in any way more than the statements which they are said to have made to the Inspector of Police and is inconsistent with the possibility of the truth of the statements which they made before the Subordinate Judge; and the criterion and the test of that is indicated when I state that it is conceivable that they for some reason or another omitted to state to the Inspector and before the Sub-Divisional Officer what they afterwards stated, under totally different circumstances, to the Subordinate Judge in the suit for damages for malicious prosecution. It is not merely sufficient for the prosecution to point to the fact that in a trial or, rather, at a preliminary stage of an investigation, Durga Prasad was dismissed, no doubt rightly, under the circumstances, from the serious accusation which had been made against him. It is not, I think, even sufficient to show that there has been discrepancy between what was stated by these men before the Sub-Divisional Officer or before the Inspector of Police and what was stated before the Subordinate Judge. Putting aside altogether that the latter evidence appears, when examined, to be an addition to previous statements, it is necessary for the prosecution to prove either that on their face the latter statements must be necessarily regarded as deliberately perjured or that they are so from extrinsic circumstances, such as the fact that in these prosecutions Durga Prasad had satisfied the Trying Officer and the Sessions Judge that he was not in fact present at the place. I must admit that when one looks at the circumstances of this case one's mind is filled with serious suspicions. It may very well be, as is suggested by the learned Assistant Government Advocate, the case that these two men recklessly went into the witness-box in order to help their relatives when they saw their relatives being sued for damages in connection with this claim brought against them by Durga Prasad for malicious prosecution; and it may be that these statements which they made were not in fact true. But, when one has said that, I think that one has said practically all. But that is not enough. It must be proved beyond any reasonable doubt that those statements are deliberately false. I doubt, whether in this case that can really properly be said. It has been suggested to me quite rightly that in revisional jurisdiction of this kind it is necessary to be exceptionally careful before interfering with findings of fact of Subordinate Courts, and with that I entirely agree, and, if I could find here any decisions based upon fact alone upon which these applicants had been convicted, I should hesitate more than once before coming to a conclusion that these convictions should be set aside. But in this case I do not find any such findings of fact; what I do ascertain from the papers which have been placed before me, is that there have been inferences drawn as to probabilities which may be deduced from facts and from circumstances which formed the environments of this somewhat peculiar affair; and, where one has to make up one's mind as to inferences and the correctness of those inferences and as to what is probable and what is reasonable and what is possible, there is often introduced, in my view into a case such an element of doubt as should properly cause a Court to give accused persons under such circumstances such as these the benefit of whatever doubt there is. Here, I think, there is a loophole in this case; although a suspicious and sinister affair, I cannot think that the charge has been fully maintained against these two men by the prosecution.

I, therefore, now have no hesitation in setting these convictions aside.

CRIMINAL REVISION CASE NO. 212 OF 1922.

M. N. PRABHU—COMPLAINANT

—RESPONDENT.

*Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 499, Except.
V I I—Interdict issued by head of mutt—Defamation—Caste—Swamis, powers of—Principles of natural justice.*

Accused, the head of a mutt, on receipt of a formal accusation signed by several members of the caste stating that complainant had taken part in a dinner which disqualified him from taking part in caste functions, issued a temporary interdict against the complainant which was prima facie defamatory pending the issue of a final order after enquiry. It was found that, although the complainant was aware that the accusation had been preferred against him, no formal notice of the matter was given to him before the issue of the provisional interdict;

SUKRALENDRA THIRTHA SWAMI OF KASI MUTT v. PRABHU.

Held, that the interdict having been issued bona fide to meet the urgency of the case was covered by Exception VII to section 499 of the Penal Code. [p. 169, col. 1.]

Per Oldfield, J.—A caste is an autonomous association, the powers vested in its constituted heads being, subject to any special custom, those necessary for the protection of the interests committed to their charge. When a dispute arises as to the proper exercise of those powers the only duty of the Court is to see whether those powers are exercised in accordance with the principles of natural justice; that is, in the majority of cases, after the person to be affected by their exercise has been heard and his defence has received fair consideration. [p. 167, col. 2.]

Per Ramesam, J.—It is not for the Courts to dictate the details of procedure to persons in the position of heads of a caste. [p. 170, col. 1.]

Though an interdict issued by the head of a caste against a member of the caste who is not guilty of any moral offence savours of tyranny and oppression from the point of view of an advancing community and becomes almost intolerable as the community becomes more catholic, so long as submission to the headship of a Swami remains the usage of the caste and the members of the community do not shake themselves off from such headship, the Swami is perfectly within his rights to resort to the orthodox methods of conventional discipline and of vindicating caste usage, provided principles of natural justice are not violated. The advancing community is not justified in expecting its own progressive opinions to be reflected in the immutable minds of the Swamis or their faithful followers, nor can they be coerced to change with the times by fear of criminal prosecution. [p. 170, col. 2.]

Petition, under sections 435 and 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, praying the High Court to revise the judgment of the Court of Session of the South Kanara Division, in Criminal Appeal No. 35 of 1921, preferred against the Judgment of the Court of the Sub-Divisional First Class Magistrate, Mangalore Division, in Calender Case No. 66 of 1920.

Mr. Nugent Grant for the Accused:—The Accused, the head of a mutt, has been convicted of defamation in issuing an interdict prohibiting the community of which he was the head from social intercourse and association with certain persons for having attended a cosmopolitan dinner.

On the findings of the learned Sessions Judge, the conviction is altogether unsustainable; on his own reasoning the conclusion is wrong. The Judge found there was no excessive publication, there was no malice, that the accused had jurisdiction to issue interdicts and the procedure adopted was not opposed to rules of natural justice, but thought the case was taken out of the Exception VII to section 499 on the view that a temporary interdict was unnecessary and improper having regard to the undertakings in the case and that a final order should have been passed without delay.

The question of the necessity or otherwise of the interdict is entirely immaterial on the bona fides of the Swami. He could not be hustled to take any precipitate course of action.

The caste dinner was coming off and the passing of a provisional order was in accordance with practice. The undertakings might or might not have been effectual or adequate. A disturbance was possible, if they were broken. The Swami was the sole Judge as to whether or no a provisional order was necessary. The Court has no right or jurisdiction to put itself in his place and consider the situation. A provisional order was considered urgently necessary by the religious head of the community to effectually discharge his duty to it and on the facts it was not unreasonable, and it cannot be subject of review by a Court.

There was no unnecessary delay either. The matter was one of great importance arising before him in the present form for the first time and had evoked much feeling and controversy on all sides. Difficult questions of religious and ceremonial law were raised and it is impossible to say there was any intentional delay.

The observation of the Judge as to Queen v. Sri Vidya Sankara Narasimha Bharathi Guruswamulu (1) not applying to the present day conditions, is manifestly wrong. The rule governing membership of caste as laid down in that case continued still to be good law.

[RAMESAM, J.—Your position is that continuance of membership in the community and the consequent acceptance of the headship involve submission to jurisdiction to the exercise of religious authority and discipline in all caste and social matters.]

Exactly; the conviction is clearly wrong and unsustainable.

SUKRALENDRA THIRTHA SWAMI OF KASI MUTT v. PARBHU.

The Advocate-General (with him Mr. S. T. Sreenivasagopala Chariar), for the Respondent:—The ad interim punitive interdict without any inquiry is opposed to all rules of natural justice and is, therefore, bad. In the present case there has been no inquiry even now. His subsequent conduct pendente lite could be excellent evidence of his mala fides in issuing the prior interim interdict.

In the face of the undertaking, it was uncalled for and improper. Further the conduct of the accused in refusing to give a definite answer as to the date of the final inquiry is also indicative of want of good faith.

The language of the interdict is very much in excess of the purpose intended: "Yavavidha samparkam mada kudutha, (i. e.) association of any sort or kind is prohibited," an order much in excess of the bona fide necessities of the situation. The decisions establish the position that where a member of a caste or community is subjected to disciplinary order of ex-communication or the like, they can be justified only if all the rules of natural justice had been observed and the person affected had been given an opportunity to state and explain his case before an adverse order is passed.

See Queen v. Sri Vidya Sankara Narasimha Bharathi Guruswamulu (1); Gompertz v. Goldingham (2); Krishnasami Chetti v. Virasami Chetti (3); Vallabha v. Madusudanani (4); Ganapati Bhatta v. Bharati Sami (5); Cuppusawmi Chetty v. Doraisawmy Chetty (6); Jagannath Churn v. Akari Dassia (7).

An interim order of suspension without notice is also bad: see Jagannatha Chariar v. Seenu Bhattachariar (1); Venkata Narayana Pillai v. Ponnusawmy Nadar (9).

On the whole, it is submitted the language of the order is much in excess of the necessities of the purpose; it was ad interim and punitive in character without notice or opportunity to explain and in the face of the undertakings was unnecessary without any good faith. The conviction is, therefore, justified.

ORDER.

Oldfield, J.—I adopt the statement of facts in my learned brother's judgment, which I have had the advantage of reading, but give my own reasons for concurring in his conclusions, because the questions raised are important and may arise with increasing frequency in the future. They relate to the conditions of membership in associations, castes and sects, which as regards their adult members at least are consensual, but which probably have no counterpart in the West, because the obligations of membership in them are on the one hand so loose, that they have never been formulated by Statute or any written constitution and, on the other, so strict that their breach is visited, as in the case before us, with the severest penalties. With the advantage or stability of such social conditions I am not concerned. It is sufficient that the law which regulates the internal rights of those subject to them has been laid down clearly in Queen v. Sri Vidya Sankara Narasimha Bharathi Guruswamulu (1) and Krishnasami Chetti v. Virasami Chetti (3); and it is not disputed that these associations are autonomous, the powers vested in their constituted heads being, subject to any special custom (none being relied on in the present case), those necessary for the protection or the interest committed to their charge. The Court's only duty is to see whether those powers are exercised in accordance with the principles of natural justice; that is, in the majority of cases, after the person to be affected by their exercise has been heard and his defence has received fair consideration.

There is no dispute before us that the accused petitioner, is the head of the religious community to which complainant belongs; or that he has authority to exclude from it permanently or in appropriate cases until the offence against its customary law has been atoned for by penance; or that Exhibit F, the notice by which complainant's exclusion pending the passing of a further order was published, was prima facie defamatory. The only question before us is, whether Exhibit F was covered by Exception VII to section 499, Indian Penal Code, because, notwithstanding that complainant had not been heard, it was published in good faith, provisionally to meet the urgency of the case. It is alleged that it was not so published, because circumstances did not require a provisional order and because its provisional character was a pretence, the real intention being to exclude complainant permanently or for an indefinite period, without hearing him or passing a final order at all.

The passing of a provisional order, such as Exhibit F, without enquiry or hearing the person to be affected was, as the evidence shows, in accordance with precedent and can be justified so far as it was essential to the effectual execution of accused's power and duty to protect the interest of the community in his charge by saving its members from the risk of contamination from intercourse with one whose orthodoxy was in doubt. Even if immediate action had not been necessary on account of the communal feasts which were to take place on the day of, and two days after, the publication and which were distinct reason against delay, precautions had in any case to be taken against the wider consequences of ordinary association between the complainant and the community at large. Before the publication of Exhibit F, on the 23rd November 1920, there had been no reasonable opportunity for enquiry, because the formal representation, Exhibit III, on which accused wisely insisted before he would act, reached him only on 20th November 1920. No doubt, since complainant's alleged breach of caste law was committed on 24th October 1920 and since the matter was first brought to accused's notice shortly after 4th November 1920, there was before accused sent his reply, Exhibit XI, on 20th November 1920, an interview with 11th and 12th prosecution witnesses, who said that complainant would undertake not to attend the feasts and that a provisional interdict might be prepared for publication in case he attempted to do so. But the Court has no right to review the accused's exercise of his discretion in rejecting this undertaking and the alternative, the issue of an interdict in case complainant broke his word would probably have been ineffectual to prevent the consequences, including very likely a disturbance, of his doing so. It is clear from the evidence that complainant's conduct raised difficult questions of fact and religious law. For in his lawyer's letter, Exhibit A, he had referred to the newspaper report of the original occurrence, a dinner at which he and Pariahs had eaten together, as false without qualification and it appears from the evidence that there was much to be said as to the exact conditions in which such intercourse would be sinful; and that some of the accused's advisers were raising the question whether any penance could be effectual. In these circumstances, there is, regard being had to the limitation on the Court's right to scrutinize the accused's proceedings, more than enough to show that they were up to this stage taken in good faith.

In fact this account of what happened has really been necessary for the appreciation of complainant's further contention that the provisional form of Exhibit F was and was intended to be a device by which the permanent or indefinite postponement of the passing of a final order after enquiry and hearing of his defence could be secured. But, in view of the circumstances already stated, the further short delay until 9th December 1920, when the complaint was filed, needs no separate justification.

No doubt the later periods until 4th October 1921, the date of the Magistrate's decision, and until 6th February 1922, that of the hearing of the appeal, both (it may be observed) unduly prolonged by those responsible for the conduct of the proceedings, passed without a final disposal by accused of the case; and they may be relied on, not as supporting directly the charge, which had been made before they began, but as evidence of accused's original intention. But they go very little, if any, way towards establishing what complainant requires and what, the form of Exhibit F being provisional, it is for him to prove. In that sense there is nothing direct to support him, his evidence going no further than that, when 11th, 12th and 18th prosecution witnesses apparently on 30th November 1920 and 1st December 1920, remonstrated with accused and asked whether he would hold an enquiry, say within a year, he gave them no answer, a natural course when it is remembered that this prosecution had already been threatened and that such enquiries were inconsistent with respect for his spiritual supremacy. After the complaint, which was made mainly without reference to the failure to hear complainant and on the ground that the interdict was unjustifiable on its merits, accused may well have hesitated before proceeding to a final sentence, which might be regarded as an aggravation of what he had done. It may be true that, as 18th prosecution witness says, he represented, there have in the past under accused's predecessors, been cases, in which the interval between the provisional and final orders was long enough to raise suspicion as to the intention of the former. But that is not sufficient to justify the affirmative conclusion, for which complainant contends and which he can support only on the negative ground, of a delay which is intelligible in the circumstances of the case. It is not, in those circumstances, possible to hold that the accused intended the order, Exhibit F, to be other than provisional, or that he acted in bad faith. The result is that Exception VII to section 499 is applicable and that the conviction and sentence must be set aside, the fine, if levied, being refunded.

Ramesam, J.—This is a revision petition filed against the order of the Sessions Judge of South Kanara, confirming the conviction and sentence by the first Class Magistrate of Mangalore under section 500 of the Indian Penal Code (Defamation). The accused is the petitioner. He is the head of the Kasi Mutt in South Kanara District, and a section of Gowd Saraswat Brahmins are the disciples of the Mutt.

On 24th October 1920, in celebration of the 56th Anniversary of the Brahmo Samaj, there was a dinner at which about 150 people of all castes, including Pariahs, Muhammadans and Christians, were present. There were also three Gowd Saraswat Brahmins, two of whom were Messrs.

M. N. Prabhu (the complainant) and M. Mahadeva Rao, Vakils, practising at Mangalore. The dinner was by invitation and it appears that no Pariahs were invited nor were any Pariahs named on the list of invited guests. Mr. Prabhu was in the row opposite to the one in which Pariahs sat. An account of the dinner appeared in the local vernacular paper—Kantirava (Exhibit I dated 26th October 1920). This was followed by a memorial (Exhibit II dated 29th October 1920) signed by more than a hundred people of the Gowd Saraswat community to the Mukteessars of Sri Venkataramana Temple in Mangalore, calling attention to the report in the paper and to the fact that three members of their community had been present at the dinner and requesting the Mukteessars to take action lest those persons should attend the temple dinners, which were to come off on November 23rd and 25th and there should be a disturbance. The Mukteessars then called a meeting (Exhibit VIII) for November 2nd and at the meeting a resolution was passed that the Memorial should be forwarded to the Swamis of the Kasi and Gokarna Mutts for disposal. The resolution was confirmed at another meeting and the memorial was forwarded by Exhibit XIII dated 4th November 1920 to the accused who happened there to be at Mangalore. On the 14th November Messrs. Prabhu and Mahadeva Rao addressed Exhibit S to one Mr. Vencoba Rao (P. W. No. 12) in which, after referring to the caste trouble now pending before the Swami of Kasi Mutt, they gave an undertaking not to attend the temple dinners or even enter the temple premises during the Kartika Pournami celebration (November)—without prejudice to any action they may be advised to take in the matter in future. The 11th and 12th witnesses for the prosecution had about this time two interviews with the accused. The first one was on the invitation of the accused. The second one was three or four days afterwards. Between the two, Mr. Prabhu met Mr. Srinivasa (P. W. No. 11) and told him of his willingness to do Prayachittam, if necessary, and to request the Swami not to issue an interdict. P. W. Nos. 11 and 12 at their interviews did their best to induce the Swami not to take any strong course of action against Mr. Prabhu. Mr. K. Sadasiva Rao, an Advocate of Mangalore also sent Exhibit A (dated 16th November 1920) to the Swami on behalf of Messrs. Prabhu and Mahadeva Rao, complaining that the report in Kantirava was false and malicious (but without giving any particulars as to the matters in respect of which the report was inaccurate) and warning that the Swami will be held wholly and solely responsible in law if he should issue, arbitrarily and without full enquiry and before hearing what his clients have to say in the matter, any interdict against them. On the 20th November the accused replied to Exhibit XIII by calling for the original Memorial and a mucchilakka (a statement) solemnly affirming the facts stated in the paper. Exhibit III dated 20th November 1920, a statement signed by a number of persons confirming the report in the paper, was accordingly sent to the accused. The interdicts, Exhibits F and H, were thereupon issued on the 23rd November. They purport to be interim orders and are to remain in force until a second order is issued.

The present complaint was launched on 8th December. The Sessions Judge finds (1) that there was no excessive publication, (2) that there was no violation of the principles of natural justice in the procedure adopted by the accused, and (3) that a temporary interdict was unnecessary and that a final order without unnecessary delay ought to have been issued once for all. On this last ground, he held that the accused did not act in good faith and affirmed the conviction.

Taking up this last ground I am unable to concur with the learned Sessions Judge. It is not for the Courts to dictate the details of the procedure to persons in the position of the accused. Considering that there was conflict of opinion as to how far the action of Messrs. Prabhu and Mahadeva Rao was reprehensible and that the matter was urgent, as the temple dinner was to come off on the 23rd, it cannot be said that temporary interdicts (like Exhibits F and H) were not called for. On the other hand, the very fact that the accused was not in great haste to make up his own final opinion one way or the other argues in favour of the view that he was acting with great caution. Though society has marched far (one would think it is not very far) since 1883, the law as laid down in Queen v. Sri Vidya Sankara Narasimha Bharathi Guruswamulu (1) has not changed and it cannot be said that greater promptitude is required from caste authorities in 1920 than in 1883. It must be remembered that, though action like that of the accused savours of tyranny and oppression from the point of view of an advancing community and becomes almost intolerable as the general community becomes more catholic, so long as submission to the headship of a Swami remains the usage of the caste and the members of the community do not shake themselves off from such headship, the Swami is perfectly within his rights to resort to the orthodox methods of conventional discipline and of vindicating caste usage, provided principles of natural justice are not violated. The advancing community is not justified in expecting its own progressive opinions to be reflected in the immutable minds of the Swamis or their faithful followers nor can they be coerced to change with the times by fear of criminal prosecution.

The learned Advocate-General, who appeared for the complainant attempted to support the conviction on two grounds:— (1) that the interdicts were issued without due notice to Mr. Prabhu and in effect, without giving him an opportunity of being heard, and (2) that the temporary interdict was really intended to be permanent, as no final order has yet been issued. As to the first ground, the interview of P. W. Nos. 11 and 12 with the accused and the notice (Exhibit H) sent by Mr. Sadasiva Rao show that Mr. Prabhu anticipated the action of the Swami and had an opportunity of making such representation to him as he thought fit and it must be held that, for the purpose of a temporary order at least, the absence of a more formal notice could not be taken as indicating want of good faith.

As to the second it is enough to observe that it cannot be said that a reasonable time for a complete enquiry had elapsed by the time the prosecution was launched. It is true that no final order has been issued up to date. The Counsel for the accused explains that this is due to the present Proceedings. Though the explanation is not such as a man of business should advance I still think it is true. The Advocate-General says that when the accused was asked to state when he would hold his final enquiry, he did not give any answer. It is difficult to hold that he was bound to give an answer to such a question especially having regard to the manner in which it was put to him. Any how, the materials on the record are totally inadequate to enable me to come to the conclusion that it was clear by the 8th December that the accused had no intention to hold the final enquiry within a reasonable time.

In my opinion no offence has been made out and the conviction and the sentence must be set aside. I only wish to add, I have no doubt that Mr. Prabhu had been the victim of an oppression nothing short of cruel and he has all my sympathy. I do not in the least sympathise with the accused or his followers. The fault lies in the social system of which Mr. Prabhu is a member and the sooner one sets about to improve it the better, and it is futile to attempt to make persons like the accused responsible for the persecution.

*Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898),
s. 144 (4)—Jurisdiction to rescind or alter order, nature cf.*

The jurisdiction conferred by clause (4) of section 144 of the Criminal Procedure Code upon a Magistrate to rescind or alter an order made under the section by himself or by any Magistrate subordinate to him or by his predecessor-in-office is neither Appellate nor Revisional jurisdiction. It is a special jurisdiction conferred by a special provision in a Statute.

Application against the order of the Deputy Commissioner, Hazaribagh.

Messrs. H. L. Nandkeolyar and G. C. Pal, for the Petitioner.

Messrs. S. P. Varma and S. Saran, for the Opposite party.

JUDGMENT.—This application is directed against an order passed by the learned Deputy Commissioner of Hazaribagh on the 22nd July last. It appears that there are considerable disputes between the parties in regard to Chauni Akhra, and Maulvi Riyassik Karim, one of the Magistrates in Hazaribagh, drew up proceedings under section 144 of the Criminal Procedure Code against both the parties. The matter came up before the learned Deputy Commissioner under section 144, clause (4), and he rescinded the order passed by the learned Deputy Magistrate under section 144 and directed the learned Deputy Magistrate to draw up proceedings under section 145. Mr. Nandkeolyar appearing on behalf of the petitioners urges before me first that the learned Deputy Commissioner had neither revisional nor appellate jurisdiction in the matter and that, consequently, his order ought to be set aside and, secondly, that he had no jurisdiction to direct the learned Deputy Magistrate to draw up proceedings under section 145 of the Code. Now, it may be conceded at once that there is neither revisional nor appellate jurisdiction in the Magistrate under clause (4) of section 144 of the Code, but there is still a jurisdiction to rescind or alter any order made under section 144 either by himself or by a Magistrate subordinate to him or by his predecessor-in-office. It seems to me that it is useless to enter into a controversy as to the exact jurisdiction exercisable by the Magistrate under clause (4). It is sufficient to say that it is a special jurisdiction under special Statute and the Statute gives him ample power to rescind or alter any order made under section 144 either by himself or any Magistrate subordinate to him or by his predecessor-in-office. The learned Deputy Commissioner was satisfied that there was a question of possession to be tried between the parties and, in my opinion, he was entirely right in rescinding the order passed by the learned Deputy Magistrate.

The next point is, had he any jurisdiction to direct the learned Deputy Magistrate to draw up proceedings under section 145 of the Code? It seems to have been held in various cases that he has no such power, but in my opinion the point is without any substance. It is merely a question of words; nothing more than that. The proper order to pass in such a case would be to say that if the learned Deputy Magistrate thinks that any action is still necessary he will proceed under section 145 of the Code and not under section 144. If no action has in the meantime been taken either by the learned Deputy Commissioner or by the learned Deputy Magistrate, then the learned Deputy Magistrate will proceed under section 145 of the Code if he considers that it is still necessary to proceed in the matter.

Mr. Nugent Grant, for the Petitioner.

Mr. K. V. Madhavan Nair, for the Crown Prosecutor, on behalf of the Crown.

ORDER.—This is an application to revise the conviction and sentence passed upon the accused by the Second Presidency Magistrate, George Town, in Calendar Case No. 7381 of 1921 on his file. The accused has been convicted of criminal breach of trust under section 406, Indian Penal Code, and sentenced to four months' rigorous imprisonment by the Magistrate.

It is contended by the learned Counsel for the accused that his client is not guilty of any offence on the facts found by the Magistrate.

The facts of the case as found by the Magistrate are as follows:—The accused entered into two contracts with the firm, of which complainant is a clerk, for the delivery to him of 400 bags of castor seeds of a particular kind at Rs. 16 per bag; each bag weighing 165 lbs. and again for the delivery of 300 bags of another kind of castor seeds at the rate of Rs. 15 per bag, here also each bag was to weigh 165 lbs. The delivery in each case was to be at Royapuram. With reference to these two contracts, all but 200 bags under the first contract was delivered. The only dispute in this case is about these 200 bags. The complainant asserted that those bags had been delivered at the accused's godown. The accused denied receipt of those bags. The Magistrate held on the evidence in the case that the 200 bags were actually delivered as the complainant asserted; and as the accused denied delivery of those bags, he came to the conclusion that the accused has committed the offence of criminal breach of trust, and has convicted him of that offence.

In the first place, it may be mentioned that about the same time when the criminal case was going on, there was a civil suit filed in the High Court by the complainant firm for the value of these 200 bags alleged to have been delivered, or, for the return of the bags. That case was decreed by the learned Judge on the Original Side, and the decree has been filed in this case as Exhibit

CHANDI CHARAN MITRA v. MANINDRA CHANDRA ROY.

XVI. That decree is for the payment of the price of the bags. On appeal, it is stated before me, and it is not contradicted by the other side, that a Bench of this Court came to the conclusion that the alleged delivery of the 200 bags to the accused was not true. If I were to accept this as the basis of my judgment now, there can be no doubt that the conviction is clearly, wrong, as the very foundation of it, namely, the alleged delivery of the 200 bags, is gone; and there is authority in favour of admitting such judgment in evidence in Markur, In re (1). But I do not propose to rest my judgment on that authority. Taking for the purposes of this case that the finding of the Magistrate that the 200 bags were delivered is correct, even then it is clear that no kind of criminal offence has been committed, the matter being one purely in the nature of a civil dispute. The 200 bags were delivered in pursuance of a contract for their purchase. No doubt, there was an undertaking between the parties that the bags were to be weighed to ascertain whether they contained 165 lbs., but this was entirely for the purpose of ascertaining the actual price to be paid for the quantity of goods delivered. It did not in any way affect the delivery that was made in pursuance of the contract, and, on delivery of the goods, it was entirely open to the accused to insist upon weighing, or, to waive it, if he thought fit to do so, and to accept the bags as containing 165 lbs., as the complainant firm sent them. I do not think the Magistrate was right in thinking that the weighing had anything to do with the passing of the property. When the goods were delivered, they were appropriated for the contract, and all that remained to be done was to ascertain the actual amount of money to be paid, the rate being already fixed by contract. The Magistrate says that the mere delivery of possession was an entrustment which would give rise to a trust. That cannot be so in a case where the delivery is made in pursuance of a contract to deliver at a fixed price, and his view that there was a breach of trust is entirely unsupportable. It is not possible even to hold that any criminal misappropriation, which is a lesser offence than breach of trust, was committed in this case, for, if the goods become the goods of the accused, when they were delivered to him, there can be no misappropriation at all of those goods. In this view, the conviction even on the finding of the Magistrate is untenable. It follows, therefore, that the accused should have been acquitted. It seems to me that this case was merely an attempt on the part of the complainant to convert a civil dispute into a criminal case and to try to bring pressure on the accused to pay up the value of the 200 bags.

The conviction of the accused is set aside, and his bail-bond is cancelled.

CRIMINAL REVISION No. 548 OF 1922.

August 2, 1922.

Present:—Justice Sir Lancelot Sanderson, Kt., Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice Chotzner.
CHANDI CHARAN MITRA—PETITIONER

MANINDRA CHANDRA ROY CHOWDHURY—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 202, 203—Postponement of issue of process—Notice to show cause to accused—Improper and irregular procedure.

The petitioner made a complaint to a Magistrate against the opposite party with regard to the cutting and removal of certain paddy. The Magistrate directed notice to be served upon the opposite party to show cause why process should not issue against him. Thereupon the opposite party put in a petition and a Pleader appeared for him and showed cause why process should not issue. The result was, that no process was issued and the complaint was dismissed.

Held, that the Magistrate did not act in accordance with the provisions of the Criminal Procedure Code as laid down in sections 202 and 203 and the procedure adopted by him was improper and irregular.

Criminal revision against the order of the Sessions Judge, Rungpur, dated the 9th May, 1922, affirming that of the Sub-Deputy Magistrate, Rungpur, dated the 15th March 1922.

JUDGMENT.

Sanderson, C. J.—This was a Rule issued by two of my learned brothers, Mr. Justice Walmsley and Mr. Justice C. C. Ghose, and obtained by the complainant calling upon the District Magistrate and on the opposite party to show cause why the orders complained of should not be set aside.

The facts of this case, so far as they are necessary for me to state for the purpose of my judgment, are these :

The complainant made a complaint against certain persons with regard to the cutting and removal of certain paddy and the allegation was that the paddy was removed by certain Barkandazes with the connivance or at the instigation of Manindra Chandra Roy Chowdhury who was called accused No. 1. It was alleged by the complainant that one of the persons who actually cut and removed the paddy was one Mokimuddin. The Magistrate who took cognizance of this case asked for a report and on receipt of the report issued a summons against Mokimuddin only. The Sub-Deputy Magistrate, to whom the case was made over for disposal, after hearing the evidence which the complainant produced dismissed the case against Mokimuddin on the ground, as I understand, that there was not sufficient evidence to identify Mokimuddin with regard to this alleged offence. Then the complainant desired to proceed against the accused No. 1, Manindra Chandra Roy Chowdhury, who was the zemindar of the complainant. The Sub-Deputy Magistrate then directed notice to be served upon Manindra Chandra Roy Chowdhury to show cause why process should not issue against him. Cause was shown by Manindra Chandra Roy Chowdhury. We were informed by the learned Vakil who showed cause in this Rule, that a petition was put in by Manindra Chandra Roy Chowdhury and that a learned Pleader appeared for him and showed cause why process should not issue. The result was that the Sub-Deputy Magistrate came to the following conclusion, to use his own words: "I do not find any reason to issue any process against Manindra Babu." I assume that that amounted to an order dismissing the complainant's complaint as against Manindra Chandra Roy Chowdhury.

Thereupon the complainant applied to the learned Sessions Judge for the purpose of setting aside the order of the Sub-Deputy Magistrate and that application was dismissed, although the learned Sessions Judge came to the conclusion that the procedure adopted by the Sub-Deputy Magistrate in calling upon Manindra Chandra Roy Chowdhury to show cause why he should not be proceeded against, was improper and irregular. The learned Sessions Judge came to the conclusion on the facts that there was no case against the first accused and consequently he dismissed the application.

I agree with the learned Sessions Judge that the procedure adopted in this case as between the complainant and Manindra Chandra Roy Chowdhury was improper and was not in accordance with the provisions of the Code of Criminal Procedure. My learned brother Mr. Justice Walmsley and I had to consider a case, in which a similar point arose, see Balai Lal v. Pashupati Chatterjee (1). I desire to draw the attention of the Magistrate to that case. I refer to two passages in the judgment in that case which are to be found at page 608* or 129† in the (other) report. they are as follows :

"The second irregularity which is relied upon was that the learned Magistrate did not confine himself to the evidence of the complainant and the report which was made by the Police Officer but that he allowed the accused to be represented by a learned Pleader and to address him to argue the points which arose in the case and to put in a detailed statement of the points and the facts upon which the defence relied.

"To my mind this procedure is quite inconsistent with the scheme of this Legislation: I do not understand how the accused person ever goes before the Magistrate until the Magistrate has made up his mind to issue process. The Magistrate is directed by the Statute to enquire into the case in certain specified ways, and then having investigated the matter in one or other of the specified ways, he is to decide whether process ought to issue, and then if he thinks that process ought to issue he should direct process to issue. Then the accused person appears, and if he has got a defence, his defence is investigated as well as the case for the prosecution. That being so, it appears to me that the learned Magistrate has not acted in this case in accordance with the procedure which is laid down by the Criminal Procedure Code."

In this case I am of opinion that the Magistrate did not act in accordance with the provisions of the Criminal Procedure Code as laid down in sections 202 and 203 of the Criminal Procedure Code, and the learned Sessions Judge was quite right in saying that the procedure was improper and irregular. I hope that the judgment, which we are delivering in this case and the judgment which this Court delivered in the case of Balailal v. Pasupati (1), will be brought to the notice of Magistrates and that they will observe in this respect the plain provisions of the Code of Criminal Procedure. If Magistrates do not comply with the provisions in the Code, the inevitable result is that Rules are applied for in this Court and they have to be granted because the Magistrates do not follow the provisions of the Code of Criminal Procedure, and much time is unnecessarily wasted.

In this case we do not intend to send the case back for further investigation, and we propose to discharge the Rule on the ground that the two lower Courts, that is, the learned Sessions Judge and the Sub-Deputy Magistrate, both came to the conclusion on the facts of the case that there was no ground for the complaint against the first accused; and having regard to additional matters which have been brought to our notice at the hearing of this Rule, I am of opinion that it will be mere waste of time to direct this case to be reheard. As far as it is possible to foresee, the result would be the same if we were to send this case to the Magistrate for rehearing. Although we are not sending the case back to the lower Court, it must not be understood that we approve of the procedure which was adopted in this case.

The Rule is discharged.

Chotzner, J.—I agree.

CRIMINAL REVISION CASE NO. 728 OF 1922.

December 20, 1922.

PETITIONERS—ACCUSED.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 5 (2), Ch. XIV—Madras Abkari Act (I of 1886), ss. 40 to 47, 55—Offence under Abkari Act—Investigation—Procedure.

Section 5 (2) of the Criminal Procedure Code governs and controls Chapter XIV of the Code.

Lakshmi Narasayya v. Narasimhachari 21 Ind. Cas. 685; (1913) M. W. N. 1000; 25 M. L. J. 577; 14 Cr. L. J. 637, relied on.

Under the Madras Abkari Act, the accused person has the right to a special procedure regulating the course of investigation and from the moment the suspected person is arrested and produced before the Abkari Officer, the Abkari Department alone has the conduct of the proceedings.

The Police have, therefore, no right to file a charge-sheet or otherwise to proceed under Chapter XIV of the Criminal Procedure Code in respect of an offence under the Abkari Act, and proceedings so instituted by a charge-sheet by the Police, are without jurisdiction and liable to be set aside by the High Court in revision.

Petition, under sections 435 and 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, praying the High Court to revise the order of the Court of the 3rd Class Magistrate of Cheyyar Taluk, in Calendar Case No. 240 of 1922.

Mr. V. N. Kuppu Rao, for the Petitioners.

Mr. J. C. Adam, (Public Prosecutor), for the Crown.

ORDER.—In this case we are asked to exercise our powers of revision and to set aside what is referred to as an order by the 3rd class Magistrate of Cheyyar Taluk, holding that he has jurisdiction to go on with a case and rejecting the petition from the accused, petitioners here, for discontinuance of the proceedings on a complaint pending against them. We are not clear what section of the Criminal Procedure Code authorised the passing of a formal order at the stage in question or that it was necessary or advisable that such an order should be passed. If the Magistrate proceeded without jurisdiction, that would be a ground for appeal, which could be dealt with by the Appellate Court in case the proceedings ended in a conviction. As, however, the matter is before us, we deal with it on the merits.

KUPPUSWAMY NAIDU, In re.

The case against the accused was instituted on a charge-sheet alleging that they had committed offences punishable under section 55 of the Abkari Act I of 1886. It is sufficient for our purpose that all the accused before the Court were arrested by the Police after investigation by the Police into the case. The charge-sheet had been filed with reference to Chapter XIV of the Criminal Procedure Code. The ground, on which the Magistrate was asked to discontinue the proceedings was, that the Police had no right to file a charge-sheet or otherwise to proceed under Chapter XIV of the Criminal Procedure Code in respect of an offence under the Abkari Act, because Chapter XIV of the Criminal Procedure Code is controlled by section 5 (2) of the Code and this is an offence under a special law, which can be investigated and tried only according to the provisions of that law. We assume for the purpose of the present case that the offence defined in section 55, Abkari Act, is a cognisable offence. We have been shown no authority directly in point. But we think that on general grounds, if section 5 (2) is to be given effect to, the decision must in the present proceedings be in favour of the petitioners. If the question were merely of a charge of an offence under a special Act, made after an investigation carried on in the ordinary way and not differing in material particulars from the investigation, after which offences under the Penal Code are charged, our conclusion might be different. But in fact under the Abkari Act the accused person has the right to a special procedure regulating the course of the investigation; and in the absence of any statement that this right has been respected by the Police, we must hold that he has been obliged to forego it owing to the Police holding the investigation instead of the Abkari Officers, who would, it is to be presumed, proceed in accordance with the Abkari Act.

The proceedings, preliminary to the filing of a charge under the Abkari Act, begin with the steps provided in section 40 for securing the production of the suspected person before the Abkari Officer, who has jurisdiction to enquire into the case, by whomsoever the arrest has been made, whether by the Abkari Officer or Police Officer or any of the persons specified in section 31. From that point, the Act contemplates that only the Abkari Department shall have the conduct of the proceedings and in the succeeding sections 41 to 47, there is provision for a much more formal enquiry than any contemplated in Chapter XIV, Criminal Procedure Code. There is, no doubt, no explicit statement, so far as we can see, in those sections that the accused is to be present at that enquiry or is entitled to cross-examine the witnesses or submit his contentions. But we are told that in fact the practice is to allow him to do so; and in any case these sections direct a much more elaborate enquiry than is provided for in the Criminal Procedure Code, giving much more definite powers to the Abkari Officer who holds that enquiry, and in some sections for instance sections 42 and 43, making the intervention of an officer of a certain status in the department obligatory. In these circumstances the submission of the charge-sheet by the Police Officers instead of the Abkari Officers, presumably in accordance with the Police instead of the Abkari Procedure, has, in our opinion, placed a considerable disability on the accused, depriving them of the procedure, to which they would ordinarily be entitled.

That being so, we cannot hold that the offence here has been investigated according to the provisions of the special law, the Abkari Act. The case, it seems to us, is similar to Lakshmi Narasayya v. Narasimhachari (1), although there is no distinct reference in the judgment to section 5 (2), Criminal Procedure Code. Taking this view we decide that the lower Court's order and the submission to it by the Police of the charge-sheet offend against section 5 (2), which for the present purpose must be regarded as controlling Chapter XIV. We must, therefore, set aside the lower Court's order on the ground that there are no proceedings properly instituted by means of any legal complaint or charge-sheet before it. It will be for the Magistrate in communication with the Abkari Department to consider whether the proceedings can be revived on the latter presenting a proper charge-sheet.

Registration Act (XVI of 1908), ss. 17, 49—Unregistered document—Admissibility in evidence—Collateral purpose—Oval evidence, whether admissible—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 11—Res judicata—Erroneous decision on question of law—Landlord and tenant—Tenancy, permanent—Burden of proof—Origin of tenancy, meaning of—Improvements—Compensation—Appeal, second—Questions of fact and law.

A Court must decide whether the purpose for which it is sought to use an unregistered document is really a collateral one or is to establish directly title to the property sought to be conveyed by the document. [p. 180, col. 1.]

An unregistered deed of lease is not admissible in evidence to prove that the property to which it relates was let for a term of years, nor can the terms of the lease be proved in such a case by oral evidence. [p. 181, col. 1.]

Niatar Mal v. J. Rank, 63 Ind. Cas. 90, followed. (Case-law discussed.)

In deciding whether a decision in a former suit does or does not operate as res judicata in a subsequent one the facts of each case must be considered. [p. 181, col. 2.]

An erroneous decision on a question of law cannot be allowed to operate as res judicata so as to prevent a Court from deciding the same question on its arising between the same parties in a subsequent suit in accordance with law. [p. 183, col. 2.] (Case-law discussed.)

The question whether a tenancy is a permanent one or a tenancy-at-will, if not a question of law, is certainly a mixed question of law and fact and as such is open to examination in second appeal. [p. 183, col. 2.]

Surendra Nath v. Dwarika Nath, 35 Ind. Cas. 605; 44 C. 119; 24 C. L. J. 350; 21 C. W. N. 530, Mohoram Sheikh Chaprasi v. Telamuddin Khan, 13 Ind. Cas. 605; 15 C. L. J. 220; 16 C. W. N. 567, Krishna Kishore Neogi v. Mir Mahomed Ali, 3 C. W. N. 255 and Sulatu Dass v. Jadu Nath, Das 8 C. W. N. 774 at p. 775, relied upon.

The onus of proving the permanent nature of a tenancy lies upon the person asserting it. [p. 183, col. 2.]

The expression "origin of the tenancy" means something more than commencement, though it may also include that term. It means the circumstances in which the tenancy was created. [p. 184, col. 1.]

Long possession of a tenure by a tenant and his ancestors, and the landlord having permitted them to erect substantial structures, which have been added to by successive tenants, and the transfer of the tenure from time to time by succession and purchase, with the permission of the landlord, express or implied, may warrant the presumption that the tenure is of a permanent character. [p. 185, col. 1.]

A similar presumption may also arise when it can be definitely found that land had been leased for building purposes. [p. 185, col. 2.]

But in coming to a decision as to whether a tenancy is of a permanent nature in any particular case it is on the facts of that case alone that the decision must be arrived at. [p. 185, col. 2.]

(Case-law discussed.)

As a general rule if a tenant-at-will chooses to erect buildings on land leased to him he does so at his own risk. [p. 186, col. 1.]

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Delhi, dated the 18th December 1917, reversing that of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Delhi, dated the 5th January 1917.

Bakhshi Tek Chand and Lala Durga Das, for the Appellant.

Mr. C. Bevan Petman and Lala Sardha Ram, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The suit out of which this appeal has arisen relates to a plot of land 2,200 square yards in area situated in one of the by-lanes in the Sadar Bazar at Delhi. This land originally belonged to one Hafiz Banna alias Khuda Bakhsh, and in 1871 was owned by Karim Bakhsh, son of Khuda Bakhsh, and others. In 1875 a partition took place between the proprietors and this plot of land was allotted to Mohammad Mirza, Musammats Anwar Jahan and Mehr Jahan. At the time of this partition certain buildings existed on the plot in question which belonged to Desraj-Khemraj, who, it is alleged, had taken the land on lease and had built thereon. In 1899 Rai Bahadur Sagar Chand secured a mortgage of an annas thirteen pies eight share of this land. Subsequently, he brought a suit on the strength of this mortgage, had the mortgaged property put up for sale, and, with the sanction of the Court bought it himself on the 19th July 1901. The necessary sale certificate was issued to him on the 16th December 1903. On the 15th August 1903 the said Rai Bahadur Sagar Chand purchased the remaining annas two pies four share from the owner Abdul Gafur. Abdul Gafur was a minor and the sale by him was sanctioned by the Court.

As has been stated above, certain buildings existed on this land in 1875 which buildings belonged to Desraj-Khemraj. On the 23rd August 1885 Lachman Das, successor of Desraj-Khemraj, sold the amla (buildings) to Mool Chand, Thaker Chand, Lahouri Mal, Parmeshari Das and Raghubar Dyal, for Rs. 4,000, vide Exhibit P-31, a registered deed of sale. In this deed of sale, while the vendors covenanted for title so far as the structures and Cotton Presses were concerned, they specifically refused to covenant for title so far as the land was concerned.

On the 26th of January 1904, Rai Bahadur Sagar Chand issued a notice to Mul Chand, Ghamandi Lal and Thana Mal, who were the representatives of the purchasers of the amla, demanding an increase of rent from Rs. 12-8-0 to Rs. 25 and calling upon them to vacate the site if they did not wish to pay the enhanced rent. On the 19th January 1905, Rai Bahadur Sagar Chand instituted a suit against Mul Chand, etc., for rent at the enhanced rate from 1st March 1904, to date of suit.

The defendants pleaded that they were permanent tenants and that the rent was not liable to enhancement. The Trial Court decreed the suit holding that the tenancy was not a permanent one and the rent could be enhanced. The defendants appealed, and the learned Divisional Judge, while remarking that he was disposed to differ from the view taken by the Trial Court on the question of the permanency of the tenancy, held that whether the tenancy was a permanent one or not the rent was liable to enhancement. The decree passed was, therefore, maintained.

Rai Bahadur Sagar Chand attempted to get a review of this judgment by the Divisional Judge on the question of the nature of the tenancy. The learned Divisional Judge, however, rejected the application for review on the ground that it did not lie.

Since the decree the tenants have continued to pay rent at the enhanced rate of Rs. 25 per month. In 1911 a portion of the amla was destroyed by fire. On the 25th May 1911, the owner of the site issued a notice to the tenants warning them against re-erecting the buildings without permission.

In spite of this, however, the tenants re-built them. On the 10th November 1913, Rai Sahib Moti Sagar, son of Rai Bahadur Sagar Chand, sent a notice to the tenants calling upon them to remove their buildings by the 31st December 1913, and warning them that, in the event of their not doing so, they would be ejected and would have to pay rent in the interval at the rate of Rs. 200 per mensem.

On the 9th July 1915, Rai Sahib Moti Sagar instituted the present suit in which he prayed for the ejectment of the tenants-defendants and for recovery of Rs. 1,700 being rent for seventeen months at the rate of Rs. 100 per mensem.

The defendants pleaded that the tenancy was a permanent one and that the rent was not liable to enhancement. It was also pleaded that the decision in the former suit operated as res judicata on the question of the permanency of the tenancy.

The Trial Court held that the former suit did not operate as res judicata and that the tenancy was not a permanent one. The plaintiff was, therefore, granted a decree for ejectment, the defendants being given one year within which to remove their buildings. The rent was decreed at the rate of Rs. 50 per mensem.

The defendants appealed to the District Judge and the plaintiff filed cross-objections as to the rent decreed.

The learned District Judge found that the tenancy was a permanent one and the defendants were not liable to ejectment and also that the rent was not liable to be enhanced. The plaintiff's suit being thus dismissed, he has come up to this Court in second appeal through Messrs. Tek Chand and Durga Das while Mr. Bevan Petman has addressed us on behalf of defendants-respondents.

The first point argued at the Bar was as to the admissibility of the document Exhibit P-12, dated the 10th January 1871. This document purports to be a lease executed by one Ghasi Ram on behalf of Desraj-Khemraj in favour of Karim Bakhsh, etc., the owners of the site, and contains a recital that the land had been leased for a period of five years for the purpose of having a Cotton Press built thereon. The rent settled was Rs. 12 per mensem. This document was not registered. Mr. Tek Chand contended that, as it did not amount to a lease, registration was not compulsory. He drew our attention to Beni v. Purn Das (1) where it was held that a unilateral document of this nature was not a lease and, therefore, not compulsorily registrable. At the same time, the learned Vakil drew our attention to a Full Bench decision of the Madras High Court reported as Syed Ajam Sahib v. Ananthanarayana Aiyar (2) which took an opposite view. To the same effect is a decision reported as Kantipudi Somayya v. Khataya Begam (3). We have considered the authorities cited and Mr. Tek Chand's arguments, and have no hesitation in holding that the document in this case is a lease and, as such, is compulsorily registrable.

(1) 27 A. 1901 A. W. N. (1904) 212.

MOTI SAGAR v. DHANNA MAL;

It was next contended that, even if this document required registration, it was admissible for the purpose of proving the nature and character of the possession held by the defendants since the year 1871, i.e., whether the tenancy was a permanent one or a tenancy-at-will. In support of this contention reliance was placed on Varada Pillai v. Jeevarathnammal (4); Jhamphu v. Kutramani (5); Venkatachari v. Rangaswami Iyengar (6); Ram Sarup v. Suraj Din (7); Raghoba v. Palhoba (8); Thakore Fatesingji v. Bamanji (9); Basdeo v. Behari Lal (10); Jagannath Marwari v. Chandni Bibi (11) and Rajah of Venkatagiri v. Narayan Reddi (12).

In Varada Pillai v. Jeevarathnammal (4) the plaintiffs sought to establish their title in certain lands and the defence set up was a gift followed by possession which possession had ripened into full ownership by the lapse of time. The gift had been effected by means of certain petitions filed by the donors and donee in accordance with which the Collector had registered the land in the name of the donee. These petitions being unregistered could not be admitted in evidence to prove the gift, but it was held that they could be "referred to as explaining the nature and character of the possession thenceforth held by" the donee, (p. 251*).

In Jhamphu v. Kutramani (5) one of two joint owners of certain immoveable property executed a deed of relinquishment in favour of the other. The deed was not registered, but the owner, in whose favour it was, remained in possession of the entire property. It was held that the deed was admissible in evidence for the purpose of showing the nature of occupant's possession since its execution.

In Venkatachari v. Rangaswami Iyengar (6) the facts are not fully stated and the judgment is brief. It appears that the plaintiff sued the defendant to enforce the acceptance of a "pattah." The defendant pleaded that the plaintiff's father had executed a document, whereby in consideration of services rendered by the defendant, he had agreed to give the defendant a rent-free pattah. It was held that the document, though unregistered, was admissible to prove the nature of the defendant's possession for a number of years.

In Ram Sarup v. Suraj Din (7) it was held that the lease in that case could be "admitted in evidence to explain the circumstances under which the defendants got into possession. The defendants got into possession of the land leased by the license or permission of Gokal Das and it is not open to them to deny the title of the person who gave them possession."

In Raghoba v. Palhoba (8) an unregistered lease was held to be admissible to prove that the relation between the parties was one of landlord and tenant.

In Thakore Fatesingji v. Bomanji (9) it was laid down that an unregistered document may be looked to, "not in any way as creating a title, or as showing a transaction that affected the property, but merely as containing a clear and exhaustive statement of the adverse possession which was set up by a person whose claims were admittedly limited to the rights enunciated in such document."

In Basdeo v. Behari Lal (10) an unregistered receipt was held inadmissible to prove the redemption of a mortgage but admissible as evidence of the fact that a particular sum was paid on a particular day by the mortgagor to the mortgagee.

In Jagannath Marwari v. Chandni Bibi (11) an unregistered deed of gift was held admissible to explain the reason why the donee received the income of the property gifted as if she was a joint owner in possession of the same.

In Rajah of Venkatagiri v. Narayan Reddi (12) the point was quite different. There the action was one for damages for breach of the contract to execute the lease and the kabuliyat was admitted in evidence, though unregistered, to prove the contract alleged to have been broken. Mr. Petman contended that practically all these authorities dealt with the question of adverse possession and that they were not authorities for the proposition enunciated by Mr. Tek Chand, namely, that the document could be looked at for the purpose of ascertaining the nature of the tenancy.

It seems to us that no hard and fast rule can be laid down having regard to the provisions of section 49 of the Registration Act and each case must be decided on its own facts, the Courts having to decide whether the purpose for which it is sought to use an unregistered document is really a collateral one, for, as pointed out in C. Bevan Petman v. Ganesh Das (13), there is a clear difference between the use of a document for a collateral purpose and its use to establish directly title in a part of the property conveyed. The decisions of this Court in the past have not adopted the view laid down in the cases cited by Mr. Tek Chand. In Dyal Singh v. Gian Singh (14) it was held that an unregistered document cannot be received in evidence of any transaction affecting that property. In Jat Mal v. Bell Ram (15) it was held that the documents sought to be there used in evidence, being unregistered, were inadmissible for any purpose "tending to indicate" that the plaintiff had lost by partition his original share in the shop. Their Lordships say at page 102*: "We are clear that these documents cannot be looked at in this case for possession of the immoveable property they purport to dispose of, for the adoption of a different course, would permit them to affect that property and to be received as evidence of a transaction affecting that property." Again, in Jaman v. Chandiya Ram (16) the question involved related to adverse possession. A gift had been set up and, as the deed of gift was unregistered, it was sought to use the said deed in order to show the nature of the donee's possession.

Thakore Fatesingji v. Bamanji (9) was considered but its correctness doubted on the grounds that to allow the defendants to prove their title, in any capacity, to the land by means of the document would be to infringe the provisions of section 49 of the Registration Act. In Kanai Mandal v. Shyama Charan (17) it was held that an unregistered lease for a period exceeding one year cannot be received in evidence to prove a present demise of the property constituting the relation of landlord and tenant between the parties, inasmuch as it could not be received in evidence of any transaction affecting the property. The decision in Maung Po O. v. Muniandy Servai (18) is against the admissibility of the lease in this case. It was there held that a tenant could not prove the permanent nature of his possession by means of an unregistered lease which is inadmissible in evidence. That case is a converse one to the present one but the principle there enunciated is clearly applicable.

MOTI SAGAR v. DHANNA MAL.

Samban (19) it was held that a document which affects immovable property, and which is required by law to be registered is, if it is not registered, inadmissible in evidence to prove the nature of possession of the person claiming under it, such as the adverse character of the possession. The force of this decision, however, is somewhat negated by the decision of their Lordships in Varada Pillai v. Jeevarathnammal (4) on this particular point.

The case which appears to us to be practically on all fours with the present one is that reported as Niadar Mal v. J. Rank (20) where it was held that an unregistered deed of lease is not admissible in evidence to prove that the property to which it relates was let for a term of three years. This was a decision of a Division Bench of this Court, and we consider is clearly applicable, for in the present case the plaintiff seeks to use the document to prove that the land was originally leased for a term of five years. We, therefore, hold that the document in this case cannot be used for the purpose it is sought to be utilized for want of registration.

Mr. Tek Chand, then, attempted to argue that the terms of this lease could be proved allunde. This point was not taken in any of the grounds of the appeal and we refused to hear any arguments regarding it. We would note that Niadar Mal v. J. Rank (20) would exclude any attempt to prove the terms of the lease by oral evidence.

It was next contented by Mr. Tek Chand that, the liability to enhancement having been decided against the present defendants-respondents in the former suit, that decision operated as res judicata and that, as the liability to enhancement was incompatible with a permanent tenancy it should be held that the tenancy in this case was a tenancy-at-will. Our attention was drawn on the question of res judicata to Kiran Chandra v. Bono Behari Datta (21); Amzad Ali v. Naimuddin (22); Saiyiduddin

v. Avadh Behari Singh (23); Gopinath v. Bhugwat Pershad (24), Bhagwati Prasad Singh v. Parmeshwar Dutt (25); Mune Muhammad Nasya v. Dhanu Muhammad (26), Kasimaddi Muhammad v. Shib Prasad Das Chowdhury (27) and Kali Kumar Ghosh v. Bidhu Bhushan Banerji (28).

Before examining these cases and the authorities cited by Mr. Petman it will be as well to set down clearly the matters that were decided in the former suit between the parties. As already stated, in the former suit the plaintiff sued to recover rent at the enhanced rate of Rs. 25 per mensem. The defendants denied their liability to pay rent at that rate on the ground that they were permanent tenants. The Trial Court found that the tenancy was not a permanent one and that the rate of rent payable was Rs. 25 per mensem. The Divisional Judge on appeal came to no clear finding on the question of the nature of the tenancy but held that, whether it was permanent or not, the rent was liable to enhancement and that the rent payable was at the rate of Rs. 25 per mensem. It has been conceded that this finding as to the liability to enhancement was based on a mistaken view of the law.

Mr. Petman contended that a decision on a question of law could not operate as res judicata in subsequent suits; still less so when that decision was manifestly erroneous. Mr. Tek Chand, on the other hand, urged that the rule of res judicata applied to decisions on questions of law as well as to decisions on questions of fact. The point is not free from difficulty, but it has to be borne in mind that in deciding whether a decision in a former suit does or does not operate as res judicata in a subsequent one, the facts of each case must be considered. Taking the cases cited by Mr. Tek Chand in chronological order, the first is Gopinath v. Bhugwat Pershad (24), where it was held that, when in a suit for malkana the issue between the parties substantially raised the question of the proprietary right to the estate in respect of which the malikana was claimed and when the question of the proprietary right had been decided in a previous suit between the same parties, a subsequent suit for malikana would be barred by res judicata.

It is clear that the liability to pay malikana depended on the question of the proprietary right to the estate and a decision on this question having been clearly arrived at, the doctrine of res judicata was manifestly applicable.

In the present case the liability to pay an enhanced rent depended on whether the tenancy was a permanent one or not and on this point no clear finding was arrived at by the Divisional Judge. In Kali Kumar Ghosh v. Bidhu Bhushan Banerji (28) the facts were different but it was held that when an issue has been raised on a disputed point in a suit for rent and has been heard and finally decided the decision operates as res judicata in a subsequent suit.

Here, again, it will be seen that it was the decision on the first point that ended the controversy and precluded the re-opening of the other point in issue.

Mane Muhammad Nasya v. Dhani Muhammad (26) is to the same effect and merely lays down that a decision on a matter in a previous rent suit operates as res judicata in a subsequent suit if the matter in question is directly and substantially in issue in both suits.

Kasimaddi Muhammad v. Shib Prosad Das Chowdhury (27) does not afford any assistance. It was there held that the rate at which rent was decided to have been payable in a previous rent suit was res judicata in a subsequent rent suit for the same land for another period.

Satyiduddin v. Avadh Behari Singh (23) relates to the question of the liability to pay malikana, and, following Gopinath v. Bhugwat Pershad (24), it was held that a decision on this point arrived at in a former suit operated as res judicata in a subsequent suit.

In Amzad Ali v. Naimuddin (22) the question before the Court was what was the amount of rent annually payable, and it was held that a decision of that question having been arrived at in a former suit, the question was res judicata.

In Ehagraty Prosad Singh v. Parmeshwar Dutt (25) it was held that a decision on a question of law may operate as res judicata.

In Kiran Chandra v. Bono Behari Datta (21) it was laid down that in a suit for enhancement of rent the question of the rate of rent is an issue which must necessarily be decided by the Court, and the Court's decision on that point would operate as res judicata in a subsequent suit for rent in which the same question is in issue. We are unable to see that this authority affords any assistance in deciding the matter before us.

The present suit is one for the ejectment of the defendants, their liability to ejectment depends on the nature of the tenancy, and this question has not been previously adjudicated upon. What has been decided in the former suit is:—

Firstly, that the rent payable is liable to enhancement whatever the nature of the tenancy may be, and Secondly, that the rent payable is Rs. 25 per mensem.

On the above authorities in a suit for arrears of rent claimed at the rate of Rs. 25 per mensem the defendants would be barred by the doctrine of res judicata from raising the defence that any lesser rate of rent was payable. Can it, however, be said that the same doctrine applies to the finding that the rent is liable to enhancement?

Admittedly, this finding is based on an erroneous view of the law, and Mr. Petman referred us to Chamanlal v. Bapubhai (29); Baij Nath Goenka v. Pudmanand Singh (30); Alimunnissa Chowdhurani v. Shama Charan Roy (31); Mangalathammal v. Narayanswami Aiyar (32); Vishnu v. Ramling (33) and Jotindra Mohun Tagore v. Shumbku Chunder (34).

MOTI SAGAR V. DHANNA MAL.

Chamanlal v. Bapubhai (29), where it was laid down that a point of law, though decided between the same parties, can never be res judicata.

In Jotindra Mohun Tagore v. Shumbhu Chunder (34) the point for decision was entirely different and this case affords no assistance.

In Vishnu v. Ramling (33) the decision in Chamanlal v. Bapubhai (29) was followed, and it was held that "the mere fact that in the former suit thal or the produce of betel-nuts may have been wrongly awarded could not alter the provisions of the law and, therefore, under the circumstances, no question of res judicata arose."

Mr. Petman's contention was that in the present case, too, the decision that the rent was liable to enhancement did not operate as res judicata, as the said decision proceeded on an erroneous view of law.

Mangalathammal v. Narayanswami Aiyar (32) is to the same effect. It was there held that "the erroneous decision by a competent Tribunal of a question of law directly and substantially in issue between the parties to a suit does not prevent a Court from deciding the same question arising between the same parties in a subsequent suit according to law," although the correctness of the former decree could not be impugned in the later suit nor its effect set at naught in whole or in part.

In the present suit the liability to pay the rent decreed in the former suit is not disputed in any way.

In Alimunnissa Chowdhurani v. Shama Charan Roy (31) an erroneous decision on a question of law was not allowed to operate as res judicata, although it was not held that a point of law could never constitute res judicata.

Baij Nath Goenka v. Pudmanand Singh (30) deals with execution proceedings; but at page 853* their Lordships of the Calcutta High Court say that when a decision lays down what the law is and is found to be erroneous it cannot have the force of res judicata in a subsequent proceeding for a different relief.

Now, we are not prepared to lay down that a decision on a point of law can never constitute res judicata but we are of opinion that an erroneous decision on a question of law cannot be allowed to operate as res judicata so as to prevent a Court from deciding the same question on its arising between the same parties in a subsequent suit in accordance with law.

In this view we are supported by the authorities referred to above, as well as by Muazam Shah v. Alam Khan (35), and we hold that the decision in the former suit does not operate as res judicata in the present one and that the defendants are not precluded from proving that they are permanent tenants and, as such, not liable to ejectment.

It also follows from what has been said above that the question of the permanent nature of the tenancy is not res judicata, inasmuch as the Divisional Judge did not come to any definite decision on the point. Even if he had, however, we do not think it could operate as res judicata, inasmuch as the finding could not have been attacked on appeal by the plaintiff in whose favour a decree had been passed, vide Mulla's Civil Procedure Code, pages 59 and 60, and Aggarwala's Indian Practice, page 85 and the authorities cited thereunder.

It is, however, clear that the onus of proving the permanent nature of the tenancy lies on the defendants-respondents. Mr. Petman contended that, as this point had been decided by the learned District Judge in his favour, the finding being one of fact could not be assailed in second appeal. After giving every consideration to the arguments advanced by him, we are of opinion that the question whether the tenancy is a permanent one or a tenancy-at-will, if not a question of law, is certainly a mixed question of law and fact, and as such open to examination, vide, inter alia, Surendra Nath v. Dwarka Nath (36); Mohorram Sheikh Chaprasi v. Telamuddin Khan (37); Krishna Kishore Neogi v. Mir Mahomed Ali (38) and Sulatu Dass v. Jadu Nath Das (39).

MOTI SAGAR V. DHANNA MAL.

Now, the learned District Judge has found that the origin of the tenancy is unknown and that the land was leased for building purposes. Also that it had been built upon by successive tenants to the knowledge of the ground landlords who by receiving the rent must be held to have permitted the building operations. Further, he has held that the defendants had been in possession for a long period and that the buildings had been transferred by succession and purchase. From these findings he has drawn an inference that there was an implied contract by which the tenancy was to be permanent.

As to the origin of the tenancy being unknown, Mr. Tek Chand contended that there was ample material on the record to show that the tenancy was created in 1871, and he argued that, therefore, it was wrong to say that the origin of the tenancy was not known. He maintained that the expression "origin" was synonymous with "commencement" and drew our attention to 9 Bombay Printed Judgments, page 372 (?) and Civil Appeal No. 1125 of 1905 (unpublished). We have studied these authorities and are unable to find that they support the contention put forward. We consider that the expression "origin" means something more than commencement, though it may also include that term. There is, no doubt, some evidence to show that the tenancy was in existence in 1871. Indeed it may be said that it commenced in that year. But from this fact alone we do not think that it can be said that the origin, i. e., the circumstances in which the tenancy was created, is known. We must, therefore, accept this finding as one by which we are bound.

Then, Mr. Tek Chand attacked the finding that the land had been leased for building purposes and contended that there was no evidence on the record to warrant such a conclusion. The learned District Judge deals with this question on page 12, lines 31 to 49 of the printed book. It appears to us that his finding on this point is really based on inferences drawn from certain circumstances. These are:—

(a) That the land is situated in the Sadar Bazar;

(b) That there was a Cotton Press building on it in 1871 which belonged to the defendants' predecessors-in-title;

(c) That there is evidence to show that in the Sadar Bazar while one man owns a piece of land another owns a building on it;

(d) That it is in evidence that after the Mutiny the land in the Sadar Bazar was given for settlement purposes;

(e) That Hardeo, D. W. No. 1, deposes that the land in suit was leased for the erection of a Cotton Press; and

(f) That the plaintiff had stated that this Cotton Press belonged to the defendants' predecessors-in-title.

Now, the mere fact that the land in suit is situated in the Sadar Bazar is not, by itself, sufficient to show the object for which the tenancy was created, nor does the mere fact that the defendants' predecessors-in-title owned the Cotton Press on it show that the land was leased for building purposes.

Again, it has not been shown that the whole of the land in the Sadar Bazar is owned as alleged, and the mere fact that various plots of lands situated in the said Bazar are so owned would scarcely warrant the conclusion arrived at.

Again, seeing that the buildings in suit only came into existence in 1871, the reference to what occurred after the Mutiny is scarcely in point. The facts of the present case are materially different from those in the case reported as Afzal-un-nisa v. Abdul Karim (40). We have not been able to find that Hardeo, D. W. No. 1, made the statement attributed to him, and it seems scarcely equitable to use the statement of the plaintiff in the manner it has been used. The plaintiff was not deposing from personal knowledge, but from knowledge derived from documents, one of which, the most important one, is inadmissible in evidence. It seems clear that none of the above circumstances taken singly can properly give rise to the inference that has been raised, nor, in our opinion, can they do so collectively.

MOTI SAGAR v. DHANNA MAL.

In this view of the case it is not necessary to discuss the authorities cited by the learned Counsel. We would note that our attention has been drawn to Prosunno Coomaree Debea v. Sheikh Rutton Bepary (41); Secretary of State for India v. Luchmeswar Singh (42); Beni Ram v. Kundan Lal (43); Mohim Chandra v. Rup Manjari Das (44) and Ismail Khan v. Jagun Bibi (45) by Mr. Tek Chand, while Mr. Petman referred to I. L. R. 4 Calcutta 648 (?); Naba Kumari Debi v. Behari Lal Sen (46); Rungo Lall v. Wilson (47); Mohoram Sheikh Chaprasi v. Telamuddin Khan (37); Grey v. Ram Shashi Roy (48); Prosunno Coomar v. Jagun Nath (49); Navabram Shankar Das v. Javerilal Govandram (50); Raja Promoda Nath v. Sri Govindo (51) and Madho Rao v. Govindbhat (52).

Mr. Petman also referred to Gour's Transfer of Property Act, pages 1673, 1674 and 1678. All these authorities we have examined, but it seems to us that in deciding a question of this kind the facts of each case must be considered and that no hard and fast rule can be, or has been, laid down. No doubt, long possession of a tenure by a tenant and his ancestors, and the landlord having permitted them to erect substantial structures, which have been added to by successive tenants, and the transfer of the said tenure from time to time by succession and the purchase with the permission of the landlord, express or implied, would warrant the presumption that the tenancy was of a permanent character.

Further, a similar presumption may also arise when it can be definitely found that land had been leased for building purposes. But in coming to a decision as to whether a tenancy is of a permanent nature in any particular case it is on the facts of that case alone that the decision must be arrived at.

In the present case the origin of the tenancy is doubtless unknown, but we are unable to agree with the Courts below in the inference that has been drawn as to the purpose for which the land was leased. A Cotton Press, no doubt, existed on this land in 1871, and it may be taken that Desraj-Khemraj, the owners of the Cotton Press, were tenants. These buildings were transferred in 1885 by Exhibit P-31, and the fact that the purchasers paid Rs. 4,000 is an indication that the buildings then in existence were of a substantial nature. It is to be remembered, however, that in the deed conveying these buildings the vendors definitely refused to covenant for title so far as the land was concerned, a circumstance which we consider is an indication that the vendors were uncertain of the nature of their tenancy. Mr. Petman alleged that in 1895 the buildings, including the tenancy of the land, again changed hands. It, however, appears that this change of ownership took place in accordance with a partition, and it seems to us that such a transfer is not what is contemplated by the authorities cited.

In the present case, moreover, there has not been the transfer of the tenancy by succession and purchase that existed in the authorities cited by the learned Counsel on both sides. Again, it seems to us that it cannot be said that there has been a fixity of rent. It is true, as pointed out by Mr. Petman, that a small enhancement in rent in the course of long possession as tenant would not be of much importance. In the present case, however, it will be seen that the rent was increased very substantially, i.e., by 100 per cent. in 1905.

Again, the possession of the defendants has not been for so long a period as was the case in Caspersz v. Kedar Nath (53), on which the learned District Judge has relied. Assuming that the buildings came into existence in 1871, the rent was doubled in 1905 after a possession of 34 years, and not 46 as the learned District Judge has stated.

Again, our attention has not been drawn to any evidence to support the finding that buildings had been erected on this land from time to time by successive tenants. So far as we know, the only occasion when any additional buildings were erected was after the fire in 1911, and it must be noted that the then ground landlord promptly issued a notice to the defendants warning them against re-erecting the premises without permission. The defendants thus were fully aware that their ground landlord was objecting to the erection of any structures. It appears to us, therefore, that in the present case there is an absence of long possession coupled with fixity of rent.

We are, therefore, unable to agree with the lower Appellate Court's conclusion that the circumstances of the present case raise a presumption that the tenancy was a permanent one or that there was an implied contract that it should be permanent. The onus, as has been said above, was on the defendants and, in our opinion, has not been discharged. We must, therefore, hold that the tenancy is either a tenancy-at-will or a yearly one.

It was then contended that, having regard to all the circumstances of the case, the defendants were not liable to ejectment. We cannot, however, agree with this contention. The tenancy not being permanent, the tenants must be held to have been aware of their liability to ejectment. In 1911 when the buildings or a portion of them were demolished they were warned against re-building and, in spite of that, proceeded to re-build. We are, therefore, unable to hold that the plaintiff is in any way estopped from claiming the eviction of the defendants.

Next, it was contended that in any event the plaintiff should be made to pay the price of the buildings. As a general rule, if a tenant-at-will chooses to erect buildings on land leased to him he does so at his own risk. The plaintiff, however, expressed his willingness to pay the sum of Rs. 23,479-5 which was the amount fixed as the value of the premises when the proceedings were in the Courts below. It has not been urged that this sum did not represent the value of the premises at that time, although it is possible that the present value is more. We think that it would be equitable to allow the defendants to elect to remove their buildings or accept the sum offered, and our reason for this course is that in the former suit the finding on the question of the nature of the tenancy was not clear and might have led the defendants to consider that their position was stronger than it really was.

We, accordingly, accept this appeal, and, setting aside the order of the lower Appellate Court, restore that of the Trial Court with this modification that the defendants are to elect within a period of three months from this date whether they will accept the sum of Rs. 23,480 as the price of the buildings. If they fail to accept this sum within the period fixed, they will be compelled to remove the buildings as directed by the Trial Court's decree.

There remains the question as to the amount of rent payable. In our opinion the amount fixed by the Trial Court is a reasonable one, and we grant the plaintiff a decree for Rs. 850 on account of arrears of rent and at the rate of Rs. 50 per mensem from the date of suit till the date when the buildings are removed or the compensation referred to above is accepted.

In all the circumstances of the case, we think it equitable to allow the parties to bear their own costs throughout.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. II, r. 2—Mortgage—Principal and interest payable separately—Suit for interest alone, whether bars subsequent claim for realisation.

If a mortgage provides for an independent obligation to pay the principal and the interest, in a suit brought to obtain a personal judgment in respect of the interest alone, O. II, r. 2 of the Civil Procedure Code would not prevent a subsequent claim for payment of the principal, as in such a case the cause of action is distinct. The matter is, however, different if the non-payment of the interest causes the principal money to become due, as in that case the cause of action—the non-payment of interest—gives rise to two forms of relief which the Code of Civil Procedure provides, shall not be split. JUDGMENT.

Lord Buckmaster.—The difficulty in this case is due to the provisions of r. 2 of O. II of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908. This rule provides that every suit shall include the whole of the claim which the plaintiff is entitled to make in respect of the cause of action. But the plaintiff may relinquish any portion of his claim in order to bring the suit within the jurisdiction of any Court. The illustration given shows that a personal claim for the mortgage-money under a mortgage and the enforcement of the security for the debt are to be regarded as one and the same cause of action. This provision is in marked distinction to the law of this country, where a mortgagee is at liberty to appoint a Receiver under his deed to sue for the debt and to take proceedings for sale or foreclosure independently and at the same time. It is important, therefore, in considering the effect of the Code, to bear in mind that its obvious intention is to establish a rule of law different from that accepted here.

The appellant was a mortgagee under a mortgage executed on the 19th January

1904, by the three respondents. It was a mortgage to secure Rs. 11,748 with interest at Rs. 8 per month, and provided that the money was to be paid in two years. The conditions of the mortgage enabled the mortgagors to redeem within the two years if they thought fit. It also contained an express promise on the part of the mortgagee to pay interest for the first year, and provided that if the interest were not paid for the first year it should be competent to the mortgagee to cancel the fixed term and to realise. Clause 5 dealt with the conditions that would arise if the interest were paid for the first year and there was difficulty thereafter. It is one of the critical clauses in the present dispute, and it is in the following terms:—

“5. If we do not pay the interest on the expiry of the first year, we shall pay the interest on the mortgage-money after every three months after the expiry of the first year. If by chance we are unable to pay the interest after every three months, we shall pay it after six months without any objection. If we do not pay the remaining interest after six months, the mortgagee will be at liberty to cancel the term of two years and to realise with costs all the principal mortgage-money with interest by means of a suit from the mortgaged property and our other moveable and immoveable property and our person. If the mortgagee of his own accord wishes to maintain the term of mortgage, he will have a right to realise only the remaining interest by means of a suit from the said property and our person. We and our representatives shall have no objection and refusal.”

The interest was paid up to the 4th July 1905, but no further payment being made in respect of interest, on the 17th November 1908 the mortgagee sued the mortgagors, and the first question that arises is what was the effect of that suit.

The plaint set out the mortgage, set out payment of the interest up to the 4th July 1905 and certain further payments on account of principal. It then stated that the plaintiff only sued for the remaining interest, and that a suit for the recovery of the principal and of the future interest would be brought later on, and it asked for a decree in the following terms:—

“A decree for Rs. 2,390-8-0 interest at the above rate from Asarh Sudhi 2, Sambat 1962, to Mansgar Badi 8, Sambat 1965, corresponding to the 16th November 1908 with costs in favour of the plaintiff against the defendants, recoverable from the mortgaged property and the other property and the persons of the defendants."

The only question that appears to have been tried was what was the correct amount of interest; and a decree passed by the Subordinate Judge on the 27th January 1909, was a decree for Rs. 2,226-13-0, which it was stated should be charged on the mortgaged property. The mortgagee then attempted to get the equity of redemption sold, and in this he succeeded before the Subordinate Judge, but failed on appeal. He thereupon on the 19th of November 1914 instituted the proceedings out of which this appeal has arisen, asking the full mortgagee's relief in respect of the mortgaged property. The District Judge held that r. 2 of O. II barred the case and dismissed the suit; this decree was supported in the Chief Court of the Punjab; and from this judgment the present appeal has been brought.

That r. 2 of O. II of the Code of Civil Procedure is the relative section of the Code applicable to the dispute is not in contest. The whole question is, what does it mean? It does not appear to their Lordships that if the mortgage had provided, as mortgages always do in this country, for an independent obligation to pay the principal and the interest, that in a suit brought to obtain a personal judgment in respect of the interest alone the rule would have prevented a subsequent claim for payment of the principal. In such a case the cause of action would have been distinct. The matter is, however, different if the non-payment of the interest causes the principal money to become due, as in that case the cause of action—the non-payment of the interest—gives rise to two forms of relief which the Code provides shall not be split. This is illustrated by the present suit. The interest was paid during the first year, and the interest in arrears was that under clause 5. If, therefore, the plaintiff originally brought came to be properly interpreted as claiming only a personal relief in respect of the unpaid interest, the appellant's case would be on surer ground, but, although their Lordships are anxious that claims for a just debt should not be defeated by the intricacies of legal procedure, yet they are unable to hold that the plaintiff that was originally issued by the appellant can properly bear that interpretation. The claim is for a decree for the interest "recoverable from the mortgaged property," and the other property and persons of the defendants. The words are not dissimilar from the words of clause 5 of the mortgage-deed, which clearly points to the interest being payable (that is, by sale) out of the mortgaged property. Their Lordships are unable to give any other interpretation of the phrase "recoverable from the mortgaged property" in the appellant's plaintiff than a claim for realisation, and the fact that the decree he obtained was not a decree for sale but in the nature of a personal judgment, does not alter its effect, for r. 2 of O. II provides that every suit shall include the whole of the claim. The suit so brought by the plaintiff did not include it, and this consequently barred the institution of a further suit in respect thereof. Indeed, when once it be accepted that the original plaintiff did seek, by its prayer, for realisation, this case becomes indistinguishable from the case of Muhammad Hafiz v. Muhammad Zakariya (1) where a similar question arose and was determined by this Board.

There were, no doubt, good grounds of policy that caused the introduction into the Code of Civil Procedure of the provisions which, in the result of this case, will involve the appellant in some pecuniary loss, and it is the duty of the Courts to interpret and carry into effect those rules uninfluenced by the consideration of the individual loss that may be occasioned by disobedience of the provisions.

Their Lordships think that this case was rightly decided; that the appeal should be dismissed with costs, and they

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 64, O. XXI, rr. 46, 51—Negotiable Instruments Act (XXVI of 1881), ss. 9, 78—Attachment of pro-note—Prohibitory order, effect of—Endorsement in favour of one of several decree-holders—Holder in due course—Pro-note, whether extinguishes debt.

The proper method of attaching a promissory-note under O. XXI, r. 51 of the Civil Procedure Code is by actual seizure and by bringing it into Court and a mere prohibitory order issued to the judgment-debtor and the maker of the note forbidding the latter to pay and the former to receive the amount due does not create a valid attachment of the pro-note. [p. 190, col. 2; p. 191, col. 1.]

A number of decree-holders in execution of their respective decrees attached a promissory-note executed in favour of the judgment-debtor, but the attachment in every case was effected not by actual seizure but by mere prohibitory orders issued to the judgment-debtor and the maker of the note under O. XXI, r. 46 of the Civil Procedure Code. One of the decree-holders with knowledge of the prohibitory orders obtained an endorsement of the pro-note in his own favour from the judgment-debtor :

Held, (1) that though the attachments were invalid as not having been made in the manner prescribed by law, and section 64 of the Civil Procedure Code was not, therefore, applicable, the title of the judgment-debtor to the pro-note was defective on account of the prohibitory orders which imposed a disability on him with respect to the pro-note and the endorsee-decree-holder who took the note with notice of the defect was neither a holder in due course under section 9 of the Negotiable Instruments Act nor even a holder within the meaning of section 78 of the Act; [p. 191, col. 2; p. 192, col. 1.]

(2) that the conduct of the decree-holder was fraudulent, being designed to secure himself and to defeat the other creditors who had obtained prohibitory orders and amounted to an abuse of the process of the Court. [p. 192, col. 1.]

The execution of a promissory-note in satisfaction of a debt does not necessarily mean that the original debt is extinguished, the note may operate as a substitute for the debt and the original debt kept in abeyance pending the discharge of the pro-note, but it is also open to the parties to treat the original debt as discharged and substitute therefor the obligation under the pro-note. The question is one of fact and depends on the intention of the parties in each case. [p. 191, col. 1.]

Second appeals against the decrees of the District Court of East Tanjore at Negapatam in Appeal Suits Nos. 18 and 17 respectively, preferred against the decrees of the Court of the Third Temporary Subordinate Judge of Tanjore in Mayavaram in Original Suits Nos. 50 and 49 of 1919.

Mr. T. M. Krishnaswami Aiyar (with him Mr. N. S. Sivaramakrishna Iyer), for the Appellants.—The debt to be attached is only the original book debt. There cannot be any merger of the account debt in the pro-note debt. The finding that the account debt has merged in the pro-note debt is not sustainable.

Secondly, the respondent has himself attached the very same debt and having known of the attachment by the other creditors including the plaintiff, his conduct in getting an assignment in his own favour is clearly fraudulent, and under section 9 of the Negotiable Instruments Act he cannot be a holder in due course, as he cannot be said to be a person who had no sufficient cause to believe that any defect existed in the title of the person from whom he got the assignment. Again, the second defendant cannot be said to be a holder under section 78, Negotiable Instruments Act, as he cannot maintain a suit on the note in his name.

Thirdly, the attachment of the note by a prohibitory order under O. XXI r. 46, instead of under O. XXI, r. 51, amounts only to an irregularity. The attachment can be only under O. XXI r. 46. Again, as the amount due to the appellant was borrowed by the father of the judgment-debtor, the deceased father's debt becomes a charge on the properties in the hands of the judgmentdebtor: See Bazayet Hossein v. Dooli Chund (1).

Mr. K. Bhashyam Aiyenger (with him Mr. A. Sri Rangachariar, for the Respondents.—Taking the last point first, the debt cannot become a charge on the properties: Bazayet Hossein v. Dooli Chund (1) is a case under Muhammadan Law and the properties can be distributed only after the discharge of the debt on the properties. Bazayet Hossein v. Dooli Chund (1) does not apply to the case of Hindus.

Secondly, the question of merger by the account-debt in the pro-note is a question of fact.

Subramanian Chetty v. Muthia Chetty (2); Kodali Mallayya v. Tarigopala Ramayya (3); Jambu Chetty v. Palaniappa Chettier (4).

In second appeal the High Court cannot go behind the finding of the lower Court. So the only debt to be attached is the pro-note debt and the only provision for the attachment of a pro-note is that prescribed in O. XXI r. 51, and that is by actual seizure. When the pro-note is not seized, section 64 cannot operate and an assignment in the absence of a proper attachment will be good.

Nur Ahmad v. Altaf Ali (5); Satya Charan v. Mahdub Chunder (6); Ramasami Moopan v. Srinivasa Iyengar (7); Sinnappan v. Arunachalam Pillai (8); Attar Singh v. Ghulam Muhammad (9).

The judgment-debtor has not disobeyed any order of the Court. Exhibit II only prohibits him from receiving any amount from the garnishee and it prohibits the garnishee from paying the amount to the judgment-debtor. Here the judgment-debtor has already assigned the note for debt due by him. There is no disobedience in fact or in law. There is no question of any fraud and there is no evidence in support of the same and, the point was not urged in the lower Courts or even in the grounds of appeals to this Court.

The respondent is a holder in due course. The judgment-debtor's title to the note cannot in any sense be said to be defective as he can maintain a suit on the note.

JUDGMENT.

Phillips, J.—The facts of this case are as follows:—One Chokalinga Mudali (called the first defendant) received a sum of Rs. 3,000 from one Kumaraswamy Pillai. The latter died and on 29th June 1917 the first defendant executed a promissory-note for the Rs. 3,000 to Kumaraswami Pillai's son, Sadasiva Pillai. There were many creditors of Sadasiva Pillai and suits were brought against him and several orders were passed in respect of this promissory-note. Subramania Iyer (called the plaintiff) is the receiver in one of those suits in which a decree was obtained against Sadasiva. In that suit an order was passed on the 31st July 1917 attaching this promissory note. On the 20th August 1917 a similar attachment was taken out by Kupuswami Iyengar (called the second defendant). There were various other attachments also, and, on the 18th March 1918, the promissory-note was endorsed by Sadasiva to Kupuswami Aiyengar. The plaintiff now brings the suit to recover Rs. 3,000 from the maker of the note, and Kupuswami Iyengar, the second defendant in that suit, has also filed a suit to recover the amount due under the promissory-note. The lower Courts have found that there was no valid attachment of the promissory-note and that the second defendant is a holder in due course and have consequently decreed the second defendant's suit and dismissed the plaintiff's suit. The plaintiff, therefore, appeals in both cases.

Under O. XXI, r. 51, the method of attaching a promissory-note is by actual seizure and by bringing it into Court. Admittedly, this has not been done with reference to the promissory-note executed by the first defendant. The orders that were passed are said to be orders of attachment but are really prohibitory orders that were addressed to Sadasiva Pillai and the first defendant forbidding them to receive or pay, respectively, the amount due under the note. It does appear from one execution petition of the 7th October 1917 that an attempt was made to seize the note but it could not be found and an attachment was not effected.

It is now contended in the appeal, firstly, that the attachment was a valid attachment and that, therefore, the endorsement in favour of the second defendant was invalid and, under section 64 of the Civil Procedure Code, is void as against the plaintiff's claim and, secondly, that, even if the attachment is not a valid attachment, the second defendant has abused the process of the Court by getting an endorsement of the note after he had obtained the orders of the Court prohibiting the parties to the note from taking action thereon. As regards the first ground, it is said that, although there was no attachment in the form prescribed for attachment of negotiable instruments, the prohibitory orders must be deemed to be attachment of the original book-debt which has not been discharged by the promissory-note. The execution of a promissory-note in satisfaction of a debt does not necessarily mean that the original debt is extinguished, but the note may operate as a substitute for that debt and the original debt is kept in abeyance pending the discharge or otherwise of the promissory-note. It is, however, certainly open to parties to treat the original debt as discharged and substitute therefor the obligation under the promissory-note, and in this case we have the finding of both the lower Courts that the book-debt of Rs. 3,000 was discharged by the execution of the promissory-note. This finding is based on the intention of the parties and, consequently, I do not think it is open to this Court in second appeal to interfere with that finding. We must take it, therefore, that the book-debt had been discharged on the date of the prohibitory order, and consequently, the procedure prescribed for the attachment of debts not secured by negotiable instruments is inapplicable to the present case. It is, therefore, quite clear that the attachment of the promissory-note was not a valid attachment. One of the most important questions to be considered in deciding whether an attachment is valid or not is, whether the order has been communicated to all parties concerned so as to make it effective. If a promissory-note is left in the hands of a party and there is merely a prohibitory order telling him not to receive the money due thereunder it is always possible that he may negotiate the instrument or, in the case of a note payable to bearer, he may hand it on to a third party who would be quite unaware that there was any order of Court restricting dealings with the note; unless, therefore, the actual note is seized there is always a danger that third parties may bona fide become possessed of it, and, if the prohibitory order was held to be a valid attachment, they would be prejudiced by such an order of which they were unaware. I, therefore, agree with the lower Courts that the attachment was invalid, and consequently section 64, Civil Procedure Code, is not applicable.

I next have to consider the question whether the second defendant has abused the process of the Court. The order obtained by him, Exhibit II, was an order prohibiting Sadasiva from receiving any amount on account of the promissory-note from the first defendant and an order prohibiting the first defendant from paying any amount under the note. Most of the prohibitory orders were in similar terms but it does appear that one of them, Exhibit II (c), prohibited the first defendant from receiving any amount on account of any promissory-note or from adjusting that promissory-note in any other way. The second defendant died during the pendency of the proceedings, but Sadasiva was examined and he admits that the second defendant was a friend of his and that he was probably aware of the many orders. I think we may take it that the second defendant was undoubtedly aware of the many orders which had been passed against Sadasiva and realized the risk he was taking in dealing with this promissory-note. He himself obtained an order of Court prohibiting the first defendant from paying the amount and Sadasiva from receiving the amount, and having obtained this order and knowing that many similar orders had also been obtained, he went to Sadasiva and obtained an endorsement from him in contravention of the letter of Exhibit II and of the spirit of the other prohibitory orders. It seems to me that this action on his part was fraudulent, being designed to secure himself and to defeat the claims of the other creditors who had obtained prohibitory orders.

It is suggested that he did not actually disobey the orders of Court or induce Sadaseva to disobey it, but, assuming that he was aware of Exhibit II (c), that argument is certainly incorrect; and, even as regards the other orders it is clear that he intended to obtain the money from the first defendant notwithstanding the order prohibiting the payment. I am, therefore, inclined to hold that the whole of this transaction of endorsement is vitiated by fraud, and that second defendant's claim being based on his own fraud should not be allowed, but in the view I take of the next ground of appeal, it is unnecessary to finally decide the case on this point.

There is yet another point which has been taken in appeal and that is that the second defendant was not a holder in due course as found by the lower Courts, and this I think is a valid objection. Under section 9 of the Negotiable Instruments Act a holder in due course means "the payee or the endorsee thereof (namely, the promissory-note) if payable to order before the amount mentioned in it becomes payable, and without having sufficient cause to believe that any defect existed in the title of the person from whom he derived his title." In this case the title to the note still remained in Sadasiva after the prohibitory order, but he was unable to deal with the note, or to receive money under it and to that extent his title was defective, for I do not think it can be said that, when a person is under a disability with respect to his property, his title thereto is without defect, as is argued for the respondents. The second defendant was aware of this disability and, therefore, he had sufficient cause to believe that a defect existed. He is not, therefore, a holder in due course.

It is then argued that, although he is not a holder in due course he is yet the holder of the note and that, under section 78 of the Negotiable Instruments Act, payment of the amount due on a promissory-note must, in order to discharge the maker or the acceptor, be made to the holder of the instrument. A holder of the promissory-note means any person entitled in his own name to the possession thereof and to receive or recover the amount due thereon from the parties thereto. At the time the second defendant became the actual possessor of the note, Sadasiva was restrained from receiving the amount from the maker and also from adjusting the note in any way. He cannot transfer any better title to the second defendant. The endorsement is invalid for the purpose of making the second defendant a holder in due course and I do not think it can then be treated as being sufficient to make the second defendant a holder, for it is an invalid endorsement.

Apart from that endorsement, the second defendant is not entitled in his own name to the possession of the note nor to receive or to recover the amount due thereon. If he is neither the holder nor the holder in due course within the meaning of the Act, it follows that he has no right to recover the amount of the note from the first defendant; on the other hand, the plaintiff is entitled to recover the amount from the first defendant as garnishee and, therefore, these appeals must be allowed and the plaintiff's suit decreed with costs throughout and the second defendant's suit similarly dismissed. The first defendant is in no way liable for these proceedings, and his costs in each case must be paid by the unsuccessful party.

The provisions of paragraphs 20 and 21 of Schedule II to the Civil Procedure Code give a Court power to file the award and pass a decree in accordance with it or to refuse to file it. No other course is open to the Court. The Court has no power to file the award in part or to decide which part, if any, of the award is invalid. Unless the award is valid in its entirety, the only course open to the Court is to refuse to file it. [p. 194, col. 1.]

Where arbitrators have determined a matter not referred to arbitration, the Court to which an application is made to file the award, must refuse to do so, even though the portion of the award which is in excess of the reference is separable. The Court has no power to separate or amend the award in any way. [p. 193, col. 2.]

Ma Chaung v. Ma Aing, 2 U. B. R. (1897-01), 297, Thiruvengadathiengar v. Vaidinatha Ayyar, 29 M. 303, Dinabandhu Jana v. Chiniamoni Jana, 26 Ind. Cas. 697; 19 C. W. N. 476, relied on.

Where the Court to which an application is made to file an award refuses to do so because it is in excess of the reference, that does not necessarily mean that the award is entirely invalid but merely that the procedure provided by paragraphs 20 and 21 of Schedule II to the Civil Procedure Code for enforcing the award is not open to the applicants. [p. 194, col. 1.]

Mr. P. Bose, for the Applicants.

JUDGMENT.—The applicants filed an application in the Township Court of Kanbalu to file an award of arbitrators under the provisions of paragraph 20 of the Second Schedule of the Code of Civil Procedure. The Trial Court neither filed the award nor refused to file the award, but passed orders confirming the award partially. The respondent appealed to the District Court and that Court set aside the decree of the Trial Court and passed orders dismissing the suit. The applicants at first came to this Court in second appeal, but as no second appeal lies, they have since been given permission to amend the memorandum of appeal and to treat it as an application in revision.

The applicants were engaged by the respondent to do certain work for him, and claimed wages for their work. The respondent claimed that he had paid the applicants in full. And this dispute between the parties was referred to the arbitrators to decide. The arbitrators passed an award in which they directed the respondent to pay not only the balance of wages found due, but also certain other expenses, the total payment ordered being Rs. 66-6-0. The Trial Court "confirmed" the award as regards Rs. 47-2-0, but held that the sum of Rs. 19-4-0 incurred as costs in the Trial Court was outside the reference. The District Court agreed with the Trial Court that the arbitrators in awarding the costs in question had exceeded the terms of reference, and held that the award was invalid on the face of it.

The first ground stated in the application before this Court is, that the reference did include the whole matter. But it has not been seriously argued that it is competent for this Court to interfere with the concurrent finding of the two lower Courts on this point in revision. The contention is, that none of the grounds for avoiding the award set out in paragraphs 14 and 15 of the Second Schedule of the Code of Civil Procedure have been made out, and that the part of the award which is in excess of the reference is severable from the rest of the award. Assuming that the excess is so severable, I am unable to see how the award can be filed in this case. It was held by this Court in the case of Ma Chaung v. Ma Aing (1) that, in dealing with an application to file an award the Court had no power to modify or correct the award, to remit it for consideration or to set it aside. Its power is limited to filing the award and decreeing in accordance with it, or to refusing to file it. In the case of Thiruvengadathiengar v. Vaidinatha Ayyar (2), it was held that, when arbitrators had decided a matter not referred to arbitration the only course open to a Court before which an application to file an award had been made was to refuse to file the award. And in the case of Dinabandhu Jana v. Chiniamoni Jana (3) a similar view of the law was taken. In that case the question was considered whether, having regard to the provisions of rule 14 (a), the portion of the award which was in excess of the reference could not be struck out. It was held that, even if the invalid portion of the award was separable, it would still not be enforceable by the summary procedure of r. 20. The provisions of paragraphs 20 and 21 of the Second Schedule only give the Court power to file the award and pass a decree in accordance with it, or to refuse to file it. No other course is open to the Court. Paragraph 21 gives the Court no power to file the award in part, or to decide which part, if any, of the award is valid. Unless the award is valid in its entirety then the only course open to the Court is to refuse to file it. The award in this case has been held to determine a matter not referred to arbitration, and that is one of the grounds mentioned in paragraph 14 (a). It is true that the ground is not a good ground for the purposes of paragraph 14, if the matter not referred is capable of separation from the rest of the award. But paragraphs 20 and 21 give the Court no power to separate or amend the award in any way. It appears clear that an award cannot be filed which contains an order that the arbitrators had no power to pass. It must, therefore, be held that the fact that the award is in excess of the reference is a ground such as is mentioned in rule 14, and that the only course open to a Court in such a case is to refuse to file the award. That does not necessarily mean that the award is entirely invalid, but merely that the procedure provided by paragraphs 20 and 21 of the Second Schedule for enforcing the award is not open to the applicants.

It does not, therefore, appear to me that any good ground has been made out for interfering with the orders passed by the District Court.

I dismiss this application.

Contract Act (IX of 1872), ss. 128, 134—Principal and surety—Merger of estates of creditor and debtor—Liability of surety—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 145.

Pending an appeal against a decree for mesne profits, stay of execution was ordered on security being furnished. A security bond was executed by a surety. The appeal was dismissed. The judgment-debtor died and the decree-holder succeeded to his estate. On an application by the decree-holder to enforce the security bond against the surety:

Held, that the debt due by the judgment-debtor was extinguished in consequence of the merger of his estate with that of the decree-holder and, that under sections 128 and 134 of the Contract Act, the decree-holder could not proceed against the surety. [p. 196, col. 1.]

Ordinarily, the liability of a surety is co-extensive with that of the principal debtor, unless it is otherwise provided for; and the liability ceases when the principal's debt has been extinguished by an act which causes the merger of the estate of the creditor and the debtor. [p. 195, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.

Spencer, J.—This appeal raises a question as to the liability of a surety when his principal's debt has been extinguished by an act which causes the merger of the estates of the debtor and the creditor. As the facts have been set out in my learned brother's judgment, I will not recapitulate them. Ordinarily, the liability of a surety is co-extensive with that of the principal debtor, unless it is otherwise provided for. There is no provision to the contrary in the security bond executed on January 16th, 1917, by the appellant and his mother. Therein they declared that they would stand as sureties and make themselves responsible for the amount of Rs. 225 that might be found due to the plaintiffs (from the defendants). An illustration of the effect of section 128 of the Contract Act occurs in Shek Suleman v. Shivram Bhikaji (1) where it was observed that if an amount recoverable by a plaintiff from a defendant debtor is diminished in appeal, the surety's engagement, being one of indemnity, would diminish in like proportion. So, if the sum recoverable became zero owing to the decree being reversed, the surety's liability would also be reduced to nothing. The present is not a case of a continuing guarantee, or of time being given to the principal debtor, or of the terms of any contract between the creditor and the debtor being varied. Therefore, the references by the respondent's Vakil to sections 129, 130, 133 and 135 of the Contract Act and to Subroja Chetty v. Ragammall (2) are not to the point. Nor is there any question of the remedy against the principal debtor becoming barred by limitation, or being kept alive by payment, as to which it was held in Brojendra Kissore v. Hindusthan Co-Operative Insurance Society (3) that section 128, Contract Act, would not prevent the liabilities of the principal and the debtor being distinct in matters of limitation, and in Jambu Ramaswamy Bhagavathar v. Sundararaja Chetti (4) that section 134, Contract Act, would not help the surety.

The main question to be decided in this case is, whether the first defendant's debt became extinguished in consequence of the merger of his estate with the estate of the plaintiffs-respondents. If that question is answered in the affirmative it will follow from sections 128 and 134 of the Indian Contract Act that the respondents cannot proceed to recover anything on account of mesne profits from the appellant who stood as surety for the first defendant. In other words, the question is, whether the legal consequence of the creditor's act in taking over the first defendant's estate was to discharge the principal debtor. The principle of merger has been described in Banarsi Das v. Maharani Kuar (5) as a union in the same persons of the character of debtor and creditor and its origin has been traced to the confusio of Roman Law. In Kudhai v. Sheo Dayal (6), it has been further explained by Mahmood, J., who observes at page 575 that a man cannot be his own creditor or the mortgagee of his own rights. Lord Halsbury in Volume 13 of his Laws of England, page 146, states:—"At Law, when a less estate was vested in the same person as a greater estate without any intermediate estate between them, the less estate merged in the greater and extinguished, without regard to the intention of the parties concerned. But equity is not guided by the rules of law as to merger," and so the question whether merger takes place "depends upon the intention, actual or presumed, of the person in whom the interests became united." So, as I observed in my judgment, in Civil Revision Petition No. 980 of 1917 [Chidambaram Pillai v. Meenakshiammal (7)], the question of merger is one of intention, and in the case of a limited owner the presumption is against a merger. Section 101 of the Transfer of Property Act which creates a statutory merger has no application to the present case of a personal decree obtained against the first defendant for future mesne profits at the rate of Rs. 75 per annum. But the principle of merger exists independently of Statute, and the Transfer of Property Act has been treated as codifying the law that already existed prior to its enactment. In Kudhai v. Sheo Dayal (6) the principle is stated to apply, whenever rights devolve either by inheritance or, are acquired under a valid transfer, if the result of such devolution or acquisition is that the estates of the judgment-creditor and the judgment-debtor, or of the mortgagee and the mortgagor become united in whole, or in part in the person of a single individual. From the intention of the parties, in the present case, it might be held that there was no merger when the second defendant, Naggammal, succeeded to the estate of her deceased son first defendant, as the former was a limited owner and the decree remained executable against the first defendant's estate under section 50, Civil Procedure Code. But when she surrendered the whole estate to the plaintiffs as being the nearest reversioners, reserving for herself nothing but a right of maintenance under Exhibit II, it cannot be supposed that these reversioners intended to keep alive a debt owed by the estate to themselves, a debt of which no mention is made in Exhibit II. They took over among others the properties which were pledged by the first defendant's guardian as security for reimbursement of the sureties in the event of their having to pay the first defendant's decree debt for mesne profits. What they must be deemed to have got in succession, by first defendant's untimely death and his mother's release deed, was the balance of his estate, after wiping out his debt to them.

Respondent's Vakil attempted to support the lower Appellate Court's judgment by several other arguments. He contended that, the rules as to creditors and debtors would not apply to this case, as the bond was executed under section 145, Civil Procedure Code, in favour of the Court in the form given in Appendix H, No. 13. He maintained that, this procedure made the Court the creditor and prevented the surety from pleading discharge under section 133 or 135 of the Contract Act, on account of any variance of the terms of any composition between the creditor and the debtor. It is impossible to conceive how the execution of the surety bond in favour of the District Munsif converted that officer into a creditor in respect of the decree debt. Section 145 has been enacted for the purpose of expeditious enforcement of liabilities against sureties, in order to avoid the cumbrous procedure of assigning the bond to a decree-holder and his instituting a separate suit upon it. The surety can put forward in those proceedings any defence that is open to him, and for the purpose of appealing against any order that is made against him he is expressly declared to be deemed to be a party within the meaning of section 47. Though the security bond may be executed in favour of the Court, the Court holds it for the benefit of the decree-holder. No doubt it was held in Ramanathan Pillai v. Doraiswami Ayyangar (8) that if the surety wants to get the bond cancelled, he must proceed by regular suit, but it was admitted that he might become a party to execution proceedings when an application was made for an order against him. This case is not an authority for the startling proposition now advanced that in proceedings under section 145 a surety is precluded from raising any defence.

Then it was argued that the incidents connected with the merger of estates would not attach, where the decree-holders obtain the first defendant's estate long after delivery of their share of property and some time after the estate vested in first defendant under a release deed of conveyance, and not by the mere operation of Hindu Law. But it is the surrender of the widow of her life estate by means of a deed that brings the Hindu Law into operation and it is immaterial when the surrender took place. Lastly, stress was laid on the fact that the arrears accrued during the life time of first defendant gave rise to a personal liability against him, which had not been extinguished. On the death of a judgment-debtor, however, execution can only, under section 50, Civil Procedure Code, be taken out against his property in the hands of his legal representatives. This judgment-debtor's property is now in the hands of the decree-holders. When it is apparent that they can now do nothing but take out execution against themselves, the argument ends in a reductio ad absurdum.

The appeal is allowed with costs here and in the lower Appellate Court, and the District Munsif's order dismissing the first and second respondent's petition is restored.

Venkatasubba Rao, J.—This appeal raises the question whether the plaintiffs are entitled to execute the decree under section 145, Civil Procedure Code, against the surety who is the appellant before us. The District Munsif held that the plaintiffs were not entitled but the Subordinate Judge reversed the decision of the District Munsif.

The facts may be briefly stated: The plaintiffs brought the action for partition of certain properties and for possession of their share. A decree was passed, which inter alia directed the first defendant to pay the plaintiffs mesne profits at the rate of Rs. 75 per annum from the date of the plaint. An appeal was filed to the District Court, and it was dismissed. A second appeal was preferred to the High Court and, stay of execution was ordered of the decree on the condition that security was furnished in respect of the mesne profits decreed. A security bond was then executed by the surety appellant, who undertook to be liable to the extent of Rs. 225 on account of the said profits. The second appeal was also ultimately dismissed. It is alleged by the plaintiffs that a sum of Rs. 203-12-0 is due to them on account of mesne profits from the date of the plaint till the date of the delivery of the immoveable property decreed to them. The execution petition is in respect of that sum. The first defendant died after the sum now claimed by the plaintiffs accrued due and the second defendant, the mother of the first defendant, took possession of all the properties of the latter claiming to be his heir under the Hindu Law. The plaintiffs asserted a title to the said properties against the second defendant, on the ground that their father and the first defendant who were step-brothers divided their properties under a partition award and that according to the terms of that award the plaintiffs were entitled to succeed to the first defendant's properties. It may be noted that apart from any question of any special rule of succession, the second defendant, the mother of the first defendant, would under the Hindu Law inherit his properties. It is said that this special rule of succession was recognised and given effect to the second appeal to which the reference has been made, though I must confess this point is by no means clear to my mind and it is unnecessary to pursue this further for, as a matter of fact, the second defendant, as stated above, took possession of all the properties of the first defendant without at first recognising the title of the plaintiffs, but she subsequently surrendered the entire estate to the plaintiffs, who, on the date of the execution application, were in possession of it. It is not denied that the plaintiffs alone have come into possession of all the properties of the deceased first defendant, and that the said properties far exceeded in value the sum now claimed in the execution petition. The District Munsif as well as the Subordinate Judge assume that the plaintiffs succeeded to the properties of the first defendant as his heir, but the correct view would seem to be that the plaintiffs acquired the said properties by transfer from the second defendant who is the heir of the first defendant. The plaintiffs seek to recover the amount from the surety and the District Munsif dismissed the application on the ground that the debt was extinguished by reason of the fact that the qualities of debtor and creditor became united in the same person, viz., the plaintiffs; and the extinction of the principal obligation put an end to that of the surety. The Sub-

JEKKANNU SAMI AIYAR v. MUTHUKUMARA RAMASWAMI CHETTIAR.

Judge, disagreeing with the District Munsif, held that the plaintiffs were entitled to recover the amount.

It seems to me that the Sub-Judge was clearly wrong. It is not denied that the plaintiffs became legal representatives of the first defendant. Nor is it denied that the properties taken possession of by the plaintiffs were worth considerably more than the amount claimed by the plaintiffs in execution. Under section 50, Civil Procedure Code, where a judgment-debtor dies before the decree has been fully satisfied, the holder of the decree may apply to execute it against the legal representative of the deceased judgment-debtor. The section further provides that where the decree is executed against such legal representative he shall be liable only to the extent of the property of the deceased which has come into his hands and has not been duly disposed of. Now what has happened? The plaintiffs became the legal representatives of their debtor, and they were, therefore, entitled to execute the decree against themselves to the extent of his property which has come to their hands and the plaintiffs must accordingly be deemed to have obtained satisfaction of their decree. The circumstance that the plaintiff did not actually take out execution against themselves and recover the sum in execution is immaterial and I am, therefore, satisfied that the principal obligation was in this case extinguished.

The debt due by the judgment-debtor having become extinguished, are the plaintiffs entitled to proceed against the surety? They are not. To my mind the question does not admit of any doubt. Cunningham and Shepherd in their Indian Contract Act, quote the following passage from Pothier when dealing with section 134:—"It results from the definition of a surety's engagement, as being accessory to a principal obligation, that the extinction of the principal obligation necessarily induces that of the surety, it being the nature of an accessory obligation that it cannot exist without its principal." The learned commentators add, "the rule may also be put upon the less technical ground that, if the release of the surety did not follow from that of the debtor, the latter's release would be purely illusory, because the consequence would be that the surety on being compelled to pay, would immediately turn round the debtor."

I find it impossible to hold that the creditor can proceed against the surety although the debt has been recovered. It has been argued on behalf of the plaintiffs that this rule which accords with common sense is not applicable to surety bonds executed, as in this case, in favour of the Court. Though this extraordinary contention was repeatedly urged by the plaintiffs' Vakil no authority was cited in support of it and I have no hesitation in rejecting it as utterly untenable.

It may be remarked that there is an additional circumstance which renders this argument palpably unsound. In consideration of his having executed the bond in question, the surety obtained from the first defendant a mortgage in respect of a property belonging to the latter, with a view to recoup himself out of that property in the event of his being compelled to pay the decree amount on the judgment-debtor making default. That property has passed to the plaintiffs and is in their possession along with the other properties of the judgment-debtor. If the surety is compelled to pay the amount he can immediately claim it from the principal debtor. He can on paying the amount proceed against the property in the hands of the plaintiffs themselves and get a refund of the sums, in virtue of the express contract between him and the judgment-debtor.

Another argument which has been advanced on behalf of the plaintiffs is this that when an application is made against a surety under section 145, he is precluded from raising a defence on the score of the decree having become satisfied and that he must pay the amount and then sue the plaintiffs again for the recovery of it. There is no warrant for this position and the argument must be rejected.

It has been further urged on behalf of the plaintiffs that the properties having been originally taken by the second defendant from whom only the plaintiffs obtained them, the principal obligation was not extinguished. I have dealt with this point above and I cannot accept the argument. The appeal must, therefore, be allowed.

Easements Act (V of 1882), s. 13—Easement—Absolute necessity—Right of way—Apparent and continuous easement—Alternative means of access.

An easement of necessity contemplates that there must be an absolute necessity, not removable by anything which the dominant owner can be reasonably expected to do before the law will compel an adjacent proprietor to submit to so detrimental a right as an easement on his land imposed against his will.

Dargi Lal v. Devi Lal, 48 Ind. Cas. 670, relied on.

A right of way is not an apparent and continuous easement as contemplated by section 13 of the Easements Act.

An absolute necessity for the exercise of a right of way vanishes where an alternative means of access is possible to a person as for instance, by opening a door or passage on his own land.

Appeal against a decree of the Additional Sub-Judge, Fyzabad, dated the 27th March 1922, upholding the decree of the Additional Munsif, Fyzabad, dated the 13th December, 1920.

Mr. Hari Kishen Dhaan, for the Appellant.

Mr. H. D. Chandra, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The question for consideration in this appeal is, whether the defendant is entitled to a right of way across certain land occupied by a temple and a dharamsala in the possession of the plaintiff. The entire property at one time belonged to Mangal, who is said to have built a temple and a dharamsala on one portion of it and, planted a grove on the remaining portion behind. The way to the grove ran through the main gate-way close to the temple. The site belongs to the zemindar. Mangal died leaving a widow, Musammal Phulhari, who got possession of the property. She made a gift of the grove to Ram Gopal, who sold it to the defendant. She also mortgaged the building, known as the dharamsala, with possession, in favour of the plaintiff. The latter wants to restrain the defendant from passing over the land occupied by the temple and dharamsala, and also claims possession over a certain portion of unoccupied land, standing between the grove and the dharamsala building over which, it is alleged, a kothri at one time existed, the wall of which is said to have been demolished by the defendant.

The Courts below found, that the defendant had not dispossessed the plaintiff from that land. They further found that the defendant was entitled to a right of way over that land and across the land occupied by the temple and the dharamsala, for the purpose of the ingress into, and egress from, the grove. They dismissed the claim of the plaintiff accordingly.

It is admitted that since his purchase, the defendant has constructed high walls on three sides of the groves in the place of the old walls, which existed round the grove. There is a high way running on the south of the grove, and if the defendant so chooses, he can open a door in the southern wall of the grove, in order to have an ingress into the grove from the highway on that side. He has no absolute right to pass on the land occupied by the temple and the dharamsala, if he has means of access available towards the south by opening a way on that side. No right of way was reserved in the deed executed by Musammal Phulhari in favour of Ramgopal, and unless a right of way is absolutely necessary for the enjoyment of the property, or, in other words, unless no other means of access are possible, he cannot be allowed to enforce a right of way through the land of another. Section 13 of the Indian Easements Act (V of 1882) lays down that, where a person transfers immoveable property to another and an easement in the other immoveable property of the transferor is necessary for enjoying the subject of the transfer, the transferee shall be entitled to such easement. He cannot, however, claim to enjoy an easement over the property of the transferor, as it was enjoyed when the transfer took effect, unless the easement was apparent and continuous, or a different intention was expressed or necessarily implied.

The gift made by Musammat Phuljhari in favour of the vendor of the defendant was made on the 26th November, 1907, without any reservation, and no right of way could have been acquired since. A right of way is not an apparent and continuous easement. The defendant cannot, therefore, succeed, unless he can show that the right of way was absolutely necessary, or that the transferee had no other means whatsoever, of reaching the property transferred to him. A person cannot claim a right of way on the ground of convenience, if he has other means of access available. In Wutzler v. Sharpe (1) and Sukhdei v. Kidarnath (2) it was accordingly held that an easement of necessity was an easement without which the property sold could not be used at all, and not one merely necessary for more convenient enjoyment of the property. In Municipality of the City of Poona v. Vaman Rajuram Gholap (3) a person who purchased a plot of land adjoining his own land, having access to that plot through his own land, was held not entitled to a way of necessity over the land of the vendor, of which the plot sold formed a part. In Krishnamarazu v. Marrazu (4) and C. H. Crowdy v. L. O. Reilly (5) a similar view was taken. As observed in Daroga Lal v. Devi Lal (6) an easement of necessity contemplates that there must be an absolute necessity, not removeable by anything, which the dominant owner can be reasonably expected to do before the law will compel an adjacent proprietor to submit to so detrimental a right as an easement on his land imposed against his will. There is no such absolute necessity shown in this case, for an alternative way is available on the south by opening a door or passage in that direction.

The appeal is, therefore, allowed and the claim of the plaintiff decreed for an injunction restraining the defendant from passing over the disputed land. The plaintiff will get his costs in proportion here and hitherto from the defendant who will bear his own costs throughout.

RAMZAN KHAN v. MARIAN BIBI.

and Wards Act of 1890, in which he asked that orders be passed appointing him guardian of the persons of the minors. The District Court dismissed the application on the ground that the appointment was not shown to be in the interest of the minors. Against that order the present appeal has been filed. It is objected on behalf of the respondent that, the provisions of section 19 of the Guardians and Wards Act preclude the making of the appointment asked for. That section lays down that, "Nothing in this Chapter shall authorise the Court to appoint or declare a guardian of the.... person....subject to the provisions of this Act with respect to European British subjects, of a minor whose father is living and is not, in the opinion of the Court, unfit to be guardian of the person of the minor." It is not suggested by the appellant that he is unfit to be guardian of the persons of the minors and, obviously, if he were held to be so unfit, it would not be proper to appoint him. It seems to me, therefore, that this section, in clear and unmistakable terms, enacts that nothing in the Chapter can authorise the appointment of the petitioner. The section of the law which empowers the Court to make an order of appointment is section 7, which is included in Chapter II to which section 19 also belongs. There is no section outside Chapter II which gives the Court any authority in the matter. The question of the appointment of the guardian of the minor, whose father is living, was considered by this Court nearly thirty years ago in the case of Maung Maung Gyi v. Maung Po Thu (1). No definite decision on the interpretation of section 19 of the Act was then pronounced, as the appellant before the Court withdrew his application for appointment of guardian. But it was pointed out in the judgment that section 19 did preclude the appointment of the guardian of the person of a minor, unless the father was found to be unfit to be guardian. The only case that I have found which suggests that another interpretation might be put on the provisions of this section is the Lower Burma Case of Po Cho v. Ma Nyein Myat (2). In that case the appellant had applied to be declared guardian of the person and property of his minor son. The application was dismissed by the Trial Court on the ground that, the appointment would not be for the moral, bodily and intellectual well being of the minor and for the welfare of his estate. The judgment of the Chief Court dealt with the application on the merits, and dismissed the appeal of the applicant on the ground that he had been divested of his rights to guardianship. It appears, therefore, to have been assumed that the Court would have had the power to make the appointment, if the appointment were otherwise suitable. The actual question as to the power of the Court in the matter was not, however, discussed, and the final result was the dismissal of the application. This case cannot be looked on as a direct authority for the view that the Court has power to appoint or declare the father as guardian of a minor.

It is suggested on behalf of the appellant that if the interpretation which I put on section 19 be accepted, the appellant would, in view of the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Annie Besant v. Narayaniah (3), have no remedy in the present case. It was held by the Chief Court of Lower Burma in the case of Ma Shwe Ge v. Maung Shwe Pan (4), that a suit for custody of a minor did lie in the ordinary Civil Court and it was pointed out by Thirkell White, C. J., in his judgment in that case that, under the provisions of section 19, it seems not to be within the competence of the District Court to declare or appoint a father to be a guardian of his minor children. Doubt was also expressed as to whether, if a suit for the custody of children did not lie, the provisions of section 25 of the Guardians and Wards Act would avail the father. The ruling in Ma Shwe Ge's case (4) has since been held by the same Court in the case of Arunachallam Pillay v. Iyama (5), to have been overruled by the decision in the Privy Council case to which I have referred. The case before the Privy Council was not on all fours with Ma Shwe Ge's case (4) as in the former case the plaintiff sued for a declaration that he was entitled to the guardianship and custody of his sons. It may be that the effect of this ruling has been correctly interpreted in Arunachallam Pillay's case (5). But, however that may be, I cannot find any authority in the judgment of their Lordships for the view that a father can be appointed guardian under the Guardians and Wards Act. On the contrary, the following passage appears in the course of the judgment:—"and further, no order declaring a guardian could by reason of section 19 of the Guardians and Wards Act, 1890, be made during the respondent's life unless, in the opinion of the Court, he was unfit to be their guardian, which was clearly not the case." The parties to the present case are not European British subjects, and section 19 of the Act lays down, in very clear and unmistakable terms, that the Court is not authorised to appoint or declare a guardian of the person of a minor whose father is living, unless that father is unfit to be guardian. I can see no reason whatever for supposing that an application by the father himself was intended to be excepted from the provisions of this section. Had the Legislature intended to make such an exception, it would have been a simple thing to do so in explicit language. It seems to me that the section is capable of only one interpretation and that interpretation must be accepted by the Courts. Whether this interpretation will operate unfairly on the appellant, as is suggested on his behalf, is not for decision in this case. The view of the Legislature presumably was that the father is the natural guardian and does not require appointment. In that view of the case, and if it be held that the decision of the Privy Council debars the appellant from bringing a regular suit for the custody of his children, there would seem to be nothing to prevent him from making an application under section 25 of the Guardians and Wards Act. A doubt was expressed in Ma Shwe Ge's case (4) whether a person, who never had had the custody of the minor, could obtain such custody by means of an application under section 25. I am not prepared in this appeal to express any definite opinion, either on this point or, as to whether a regular suit for custody of the minor would lie. However that may be, and whatever the results, I am of opinion that the District Court had clearly no authority whatsoever to appoint or declare the father, or any one else, to be guardian of the persons of the minors in this case. I dismiss this appeal with costs. Advocate's fee one gold mohur.

APPEAL FROM THE BOMBAY HIGH COURT.

November 9, 1922.

Present:—Lord Dunedin, Lord Phillimore,
Sir John Edge and Mr. Ameer Ali.

KHATUBAI—APPELLANT

VERSUS

MAHOMED HAJI ABU AND OTHERS—
RESPONDENTS.

Converts—Hindu converts to Islam—Halai Memons of Porebunder—Succession of females.

There are among the Muhammadans certain groups whose ancestors were Hindus and professed the Hindu religion and were then converted to Islam. Among these groups may be reckoned Khojas, Suni Bohras, Molesalam Girasias, Cutchi Memons, Nassaporias Memons and Halai Memons.

The Halai Memons in Porebunder are governed by the Hindu Law with regard to the succession of females.

Appeal from the decree of the Bombay High Court reversing a decree of the Single Judge of the same Court in its Original Jurisdiction.

Messrs. De Gruyther, K. C., and Farwell, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Upjohn, K. C., Raikes and Polak, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The present appeal relates to the succession of one Haji Abu Haji Habib, who died intestate at Bombay on the 30th November 1914. The contest is between a daughter, the plaintiff and appellant, on the one hand, and a son and other members of the family, the defendants and respondents, on the other, and depends entirely upon what is the law of succession to be applied to the property of the deceased.

Now, the deceased was a Muhammadan. Accordingly, the Indian Succession Act does not apply, and if nothing more were known it would be obvious that the ordinary Muhammadan Law of succession would fall to be applied, which would mean that the appellant would succeed. But the deceased was not what may be termed an ordinary Muhammadan. There are among the Muhammadanis certain groups whose ancestors were Hindus and professed the Hindu religion, and were then converted to Islam. Among these groups may be reckoned, as is shown by decided cases, Khojas, Suni Bohras, Molesalam Girasias, Cutchi Memons, Nassapooria Memons; and, lastly, Halai Memons, to which group the deceased belonged. Now, with regard to the groups other than Halai Memons, it has been held by a succession of cases beginning with a case decided by Sir Erskine Perry in 1847, that the converts had retained their Hindu Law relating to the exclusion of females from succession, and that that law had been engrafted as a custom on the Muhammadan Law, although not in accordance with the rules of the Koran. In the present case, as is said by the learned Chief Justice, an entirely novel question is raised, viz., what is the customary law governing the succession to a non-Cutchi Memon of Porebunder? Both the learned Judge of the first instance and the learned Judges of the Appeal Court held that the deceased was, so to speak, a Porebunder and not a Bombay Memon. These being concurrent findings of fact, their Lordships, while entirely agreeing with them, need not examine the evidence on which they are founded. It follows that the personal law of the deceased, so far as the question for decision in the present appeal is concerned, was the law of a Halai Memon of Porebunder.

It may be here well to say a word as to what is meant by a Halai Memon. A Memon, as the word denotes, is a convert. The name Memon, however, has not been, applied to all branches of Hindu converts,

e. g., as in the case of the Khojas. There was a body which came from Sind and settled in Cutch, and these have been designated as Cutchi Memons. Another body from the same place settled in the Halai Prant of Kathiawar, and these have been designated Halai Memons. Some of the Halai Memons pushed on to Bombay, where they have formed a community known as the Bombay Halai Memons. There was also an immigration to Bombay from Cutch, and the Cutchi Memons formed by themselves a separate community in Bombay from the Halai Memons. Now, it is admitted that, so far as the Bombay Halai Memons are concerned, they have been content for many years to have their property distributed on succession according to the tenets of the Muhammadan Law, so that if the deceased had been, in the proper sense of the word, a Bombay Halai Memon, the question of the succession would have been solved. But, as already stated, both Courts have found that he was not a Bombay Halai Memon, but a Porebunder Halai Memon. The question, therefore, is, does a Halai Memon domiciled in Porebunder follow the Hindu or Muhammadan Law with regard to the succession of females.

Voluminous evidence was taken which consisted of (1) the reports of set of judgments of the Porebunder Courts—Porebunder being a Native State, from whose Courts there is no appeal either to any appeal Court in India or to the King in Council; (2) oral testimony from Pleaders and from persons belonging to the community in Porebunder as to what the custom of succession was. The learned Judge of first instance, after a careful and elaborate judgment, came to the conclusion that the custom of succession according to Hindu Law was not sufficiently proved so as to oust the general application of the Muhammadan Law.

On appeal that judgment was reversed, and an equally careful and elaborate judgment pronounced, by the learned Judges of the Court of Appeal.

Their Lordships, after careful consideration, are in accordance with the views of the Appeal Court. The learned Trial Judge has, in their view, drawn a wrong inference from the fact that the Bombay Halai

KHATUBAI V. MAHOMED HAJI ABU.

Memons follow the Muhammadan Law, and they cannot help thinking that this inference has coloured his views on the whole case. Finding that these Bombay Halai Memons practise in the matter of succession the Muhammadan Law, he has drawn the inference that when they came to Bombay from Kathiawar they brought that Law with them, and that, consequently, the community which they left also followed the Muhammadan Law. Their Lordships agree with Macleod, J., that this is not a necessary inference. If it is otherwise shown that the Kathiawar Halai Memons practised the Hindu Law excluding females from succession, it is equally easy to infer that the Bombay Memons, finding themselves among other Muhammadans who followed the Muhammadan Law in its purity, renounced the custom of the Hindu Law of succession in favour of the orthodox tenets of their own religion. An example of this may be found in the case of Abdurahim Haji Ismail Mathu v. Halimabai (1) (the Mombasa case). Of course, this is not an inference which itself need necessarily be drawn, but it counter-balances the other, and matters are, therefore, left as they were, viz., to depend on an enquiry as to what has been de facto the practice of the Halai Memons in Porebunder.

The decisions of the Porebunder Courts are minutely examined by Macleod, J. The most that can be said for the appellant was reduced in the cross-examination of her chief witness to this:—

“In Porebunder there is a conflict of decision, but the latest is that Hindu Law governs Halai Memons. That is the decision of the final Court of Appeal there—the Huzur Court.”

It has been objected to this last and most authoritative decision—for it was the decision of the highest Tribunal in Porebunder—that it is based on a misreading of the Mombasa case. It probably does go too far in thinking that their Lordships in that case laid it down as a general proposition that all Memons necessarily follow Hindu Law of succession. But that was not the only ground of judgment, and the judgment remains as the last of the Porebunder Courts.

Their Lordships, however, are not inclined to take the view that that settles the matter, for the enquiry is not as to what is the Porebunder Law, but as to what is the Porebunder custom. But the judgments of the Courts are good as evidence, and they are borne out by the other evidence in the case. Here their Lordships are content to follow the result arrived at by Scott, C. J., who after a most careful examination of the evidence sums it up thus:

“On a consideration of all the cases above mentioned, the evidence seems to me to be all one way. Twenty-five cases are proved which indicate that Hindu Law was applied and not Muhammadan Law, and there is no clear case of the application of Muhammadan Law among Memons, settled at Porebunder.”

The learned Counsel for the appellant directed criticism to the character of certain of the witnesses, but such criticism is of small avail in contrast with the overwhelming effect of the negative result alluded to by the Chief Justice, that there is no clear case of succession according to the Muhammadan Law.

Their Lordships will, therefore, humbly advise his Majesty to dismiss the appeal with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, rr. 4, 5—Death of party to suit—Representation of estate—Procedure.

According to the provisions of O. XXII of the Civil Procedure Code, it is not necessary to bring all the heirs of the deceased on record as his legal representatives. [p. 206, col. 1.]

Ghamandi Lal v. Amir Begam, 16 A. 211; A. W. N. (1894) 22; 8 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 136, dissented from.

Where a person has been added as a legal representative by the Court and has, as a matter of fact, represented the estate throughout, and no objection to the effect that the estate has not been properly represented has been taken at the hearing, the requirements of O. XXII of the Civil Procedure Code are fulfilled and the orders passed are binding on the estate, subject to the right of any person, not a party, to sue to have those orders set aside on the ground of collusion or fraud. [p. 207, col. 1.]

Second Appeal.

Mr. Maung Su, for the Appellant.

Mr. A. C. Mukerjee, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The suit out of which this appeal has arisen was filed by one Ma Gyan Bon in the Trial Court, where she obtained a decree in her favour for the redemption of a mortgage. After the suit had been heard, but before judgment had been pronounced, Ma Gyan Bon died. The present appellant Maung Po Mya who was a defendant in the original suit appealed to the District Court, and made the present respondent Ma Tin, Ma Gyan Bon's daughter, respondent, as legal representative of Ma Gyan Bon. No objection was taken to Ma Tin's representing the estate, and the appeal was dismissed. On the 22nd September 1921, Maung Po Mya filed the present appeal under the provisions of section 100 of the Code of Civil Procedure, against the decree of the lower Appellate Court, and again made Ma Tin the respondent as the legal representative of Ma Gyan Bon. When the appeal came on for hearing on the 28th

June, 1922, the learned Advocate for the respondent stated that the deceased Ma Gyan Bon had another child, one Maung Hla Baw, and claimed that Maung Hla Baw should have been added as legal representative. It was admitted on behalf of the appellant that Maung Hla Baw was a co-heir of Ma Gyan Bon, and application was then made by the appellant to add Maung Hla Baw as a respondent. To this objection is taken on behalf of Ma Tin, and the question now for decision is whether Maung Hla Baw should now be added as a legal representative of Ma Gyan Bon, and if not what the result will be of the failure to join him as a respondent. It has been suggested on behalf of the appellant that the provisions of r. 20 of O. XLI should be invoked. But it does not appear to me that it is possible to apply this rule to the present case. The Court has power to act under that rule only when the particular person it is desired to add was a party to the suit in the Court from whose decree the appeal is preferred. Maung Hla Baw was clearly not a party to the appeal in the District Court. Ma Gyan Bon was a party in the original suit, but to say that any person who is one of her legal representatives was also a party to that suit, seems to me to be unduly stretching the meaning of the terms of the rule. And if the Court cannot add Maung Hla Baw under the provisions of this rule, it is difficult to see how he can be added at this stage of the proceedings. Under the provisions of r. 4 of O. XXII when a sole defendant dies, the Court is bound on application to cause the legal representative of that defendant to be added as a defendant in his place, and under the provisions of rule 11, in the case of appeals, the word defendant, includes respondent. If a legal representative is so added, then the suit or appeal may proceed as against the estate of the deceased. When a question arises as to who is or is not the legal representative of the deceased, that question is to be decided by the Court under the provisions of r. 5. But the proper time to raise the question, as to who is the legal representative, is obviously before the hearing of the suit or appeal proceeds. Until that question is settled, the suit or appeal cannot proceed at all. The present respondent should obviously, therefore, have raised the question, as to who was legal representative of Ma Gyan Bon, in the Lower Appellate Court before the appeal was heard. He did not do so, with the result that for the purposes of that appeal the estate was represented by Ma Tin alone. It seems to me to be too late now to raise the point, and if it were raised Maung Hla Baw could not now be added as the period of limitation for an appeal against him has long expired. There is not, and never has been, any application by Maung Hla Baw to be made a party, either in this Court, or in the Lower Appellate Court. The question has arisen solely because the respondent Ma Tin hopes that the failure to add him as party may result in the failure of the appeal. But I can see no reason why the absence of Maung Hla Baw should have any such result. It is true that the decision in the case of Ghamandi Lal v. Amir Begam (1) appears to support the contention of the respondent on this point. In that case the appellant died during the pendency of the appeal, and one only of his three heirs was brought on to the record as legal representative of the deceased, and it was held that the deceased was not properly represented, and that the appeal must, therefore, fail. The learned Judges who decided that case remarked that the term legal representative must, where there are more than one legal representative, be read in the plural, and that unless they are all added there is no proper representation of the deceased. But they apparently recognised that this argument could not be carried to its logical conclusion, as they further remarked that if all the legal representatives were not willing to be added as appellants they should be added as respondents. But the addition of the remaining legal representatives as respondents could not make the appellant any more representative of the estate than he was before. The appeal would still be prosecuted only by a partial representation of the estate. And the hopeless confusion that might arise from this interpretation of the law being strictly followed is obvious. No litigant would be safe when the opposite party died. That party might add a number of legal representatives, but not know of the existence of some others, and his suit would then have to fail, or be of no effect. A different view of the law on this point was taken by the High Court of Madras in the case of Kadir Mohideen Marakkayar v. Mulukrishna Ayyar (2). In the course of the judgment in that case the following passage occurs:—"In our opinion a person whom the plaintiff alleges to be the legal representative or one of the legal representatives of the deceased defendant, and whose name the Court enters on the record in the place of such defendant sufficiently represents the estate of the deceased for the purposes of the suit and in the absence of any fraud or collusion the decree passed in such suit will bind such estate. . . . If the true legal representative or all the legal representatives, do not intervene, it can be due only to his or their laches. This is the principle of representation which obtains under the English Law, when it is necessary that the representative of a person deceased be made a party to a pending suit and that principle is reproduced in section 38 of the Probate and Administration Act. A person prosecuting or defending a suit as the legal representative of a deceased party will of course be accountable to others who, like himself, are also the legal representatives of the deceased or to the true legal representative, as the case may be." The provisions of O. XXII seem to me to be framed for the sole purpose of providing for the continuance of litigation on a party dying or changing his legal character. If, under r. 5 of the Order, a question is raised at the proper time as to who is the legal representative or who are the legal representatives, then for the purpose of the suit, but for that purpose only, the Court has to decide the point. The Court quite obviously cannot under the provisions of that Order come to any binding decision as between the various claimants to the estate. All that it can decide is who is to represent the estate for the purposes of the suit. And once the Court has decided on that point, then the person the Court adds to the record as legal representative, is the legal representative for the purposes of that suit, just as surely as if he were appointed for the purpose by a District Judge under the provisions of section 38 of the Probate and Administration Act. When, as in the present case, one person has been added as legal representative in the First Court of Appeal, and that person has, as a matter of fact, represented that estate throughout the hearing of that appeal, and no objection, to the effect that the estate has not been properly represented, has been taken at the hearing, then it appears to me that the requirements of O. XXII of the Code have been fulfilled, and the orders passed are binding on the estate, subject to the right of any person, not a party, to sue to have those orders set aside on the ground of collusion or fraud. The present case is somewhat complicated by the fact that Ma Gyan Bon herself was dead before the first appeal was filed, and has never been personally a party to the appeal. But for the purposes of the representation of her estate the appeal proceedings must be looked on as merely a continuation of the proceedings of the Trial Court. And the same general principles would apply in a case where, as in the present case, the deceased died before the appeal was filed, and in a case where the death took place during the pendency of the appeal. In either case the death has taken place during the pendency of the proceedings. There is no suggestion here of collusion or fraud or that Ma Gyan Bon's interests are not properly represented. The conclusion I come to, therefore, is that it is too late now to add Maung Hla Baw, who has never himself applied to be added as a party to this appeal, but that the appeal can proceed, and that the orders passed in the appeal will bind the estate of Ma Gyan Bon, subject to any possible right Maung Hla Baw may have to sue subsequently to have the decree set aside on the ground of fraud or any other good ground. I, therefore, reject the application to add Maung Hla Baw as a party to the appeal, and direct that the hearing of the appeal do proceed.

JUDGMENT.

Krishnan, J.—This is an appeal by the defendant against the decree of the Second Additional Subordinate Judge of Madura, in Original Suit No. 56 of 1921, on his file. The only point argued before us by the appellant is that the present suit is barred by res judicata under section 11, read with Explanation IV, of the Civil Procedure Code. The Subordinate Judge has held that it is not so barred and hence the appeal by the defendant.

The plea of res judicata is based on the former suit, Original Suit No. 1 of 1916, brought by the present plaintiff along with the widow and daughter of his deceased brother, one Muthu Mahomed Rowther, against the heirs of one Varisai Rowther, defendants Nos. 1 to 5 and against the present defendant as the 6th defendant, and against the heirs of his third deceased brother Naina Mahomed Rowther. His case there was that the properties in suit, the title-deeds of which stood in the name of Muthu Mahomed Rowther were purchased by all the three brothers with their joint earnings, benami in the name of Muthu Mahomed and they really belonged to all of them in equal one-third shares. One of the items sued for was a house in Madura Town. Muthu Mahomed had executed a sale-deed regarding it to one Varisai Rowther and after the latter's death it had been sold by his heirs defendants Nos. 1 to 5 to the 6th defendant and he was in possession. It was alleged by the plaintiff that the sale-deed to Varisai Rowther was a nominal transaction not intended to convey title and, that the 6th defendant had no title either, as he was a purchaser with notice of the defect of title. The present plaintiff, therefore, claimed a one-third share for himself and plaintiffs Nos. 2 and 3 claimed another third share as heirs of Muthu Mahomed allowing the other one-third to the heirs of Naina Mahomed.

The Subordinate Judge who tried the suit found that the property was not the joint acquisition of the brothers but belonged to Muthu Mahomed alone and on that finding he dismissed the plaintiff's claim. He also found that the sale to Varisai Rowther was a nominal one, and that the 6th defendant obtained no title as he was a purchaser with notice of the infirmity of title of his vendor. He thus gave a decree to plaintiffs Nos. 2 and 3 as the heirs of Muthu Mahomed, but only for a one-third share, as they had not asked for more, although they were entitled to a five-eighths share under the Muhammadan Law of inheritance on his finding. Plaintiff did not appeal but the 6th defendant filed an appeal in the High Court. Plaintiffs Nos. 2 and 3 filed a memorandum of objection claiming their five-eighth share in the properties under the Muhammadan Law on the footing that the whole property belonged to Muthu as found by the Subordinate Judge. The High Court dismissed the 6th defendant's appeal, but gave a decree for five-eighth share to plaintiffs Nos. 2 and 3. They have executed that decree and got possession of that share.

It is for the balance three-eighth share of the house in Madura that the plaintiff brings the present suit against the 6th defendant. He now claims as the sole residuary heir to Muthu Mahomed being his sole surviving brother. Defendant contends that the plaintiff "might and ought to have" claimed this relief in the alternative in the previous suit and, not having done so, he is barred by section 11 read with Explanation IV from claiming it again.

The previous suit was so far as the present defendant is concerned, a suit for his ejectment from the sued house on the ground that he had no valid title to it, or in other words that, he was a trespasser: and it was based upon plaintiff's title as owner by joint purchase with two others. The prayer for partition was only against the heirs of his brother. It did not concern the present defendant. It is conceded that in that suit plaintiff might have put forward his claim to ownership by inheritance as heir to Muthu Mahomed as an alternative claim. In fact though the case of the plaintiffs Nos. 2 and 3 was also one based on Muthu

NAINA MUHAMMAD ROWTHER V. ABDUL RAHAMAN ROWTHER.

Mahomed being entitled to only a third share as joint purchaser, they were given a decree for their five-eighths share in the whole property on the footing that it belonged solely to Muthu Mahomed. Plaintiff could have got relief on the same footing in that suit if he had put forward his claim as Muthu Mahomed's residuary heir.

The question then is, whether he "ought" to have put his present claim forward in the suit. The ruling in Woomatara Debea v. Kristohaminee Dossee (1) is in point, where their Lordships of the Privy Council held that a suit to recover property on the ground that it was part of plaintiff's Taluk was barred by a previous suit for the same land on the ground that it was tanifir land, or land which was obtained by adverse possession, as the two claims should have been combined in the first suit. In the case before us the first case was for possession against the defendant as owner on the strength of plaintiff's title by purchase, the present case is again for possession on the strength of plaintiff's title as owner by inheritance. In both cases plaintiff is litigating under the same title, namely, his ownership. He should, therefore, according to this ruling, have combined the two claims in the first suit.

In that case their Lordships followed an earlier ruling of theirs in Srimut Rajah Mootoo Vijaya Ragamadha Bodha Gooroo-swamy Periya Odaya Taver v. Katama Natchiar (2), where in the first suit the party rested his title upon the property being the separate property of the Zemindar, whereas in the second suit he claimed title under a Will. That plea was held to be barred.

The case in Woomatara Debea v. Kristohaminee Dossee (1) was referred to in Ramaswami Ayyar v. Vythinatha Ayyar (3). The learned Judge, while distinguishing it from the case before him, which was one of redemption of a mortgage different from the one sought to be redeemed in the first case, though on the same property, observes that the suits in Woomatara Debea v. Kristohaminee Dossee (1) were "both suits based upon plaintiff's title as owner" and that "the case is an authority only for the position that if one is dispossessed of land and brings a suit to recover possession on the strength of his title, he must establish his title in that very suit by urging and proving all that would go to establish his title and cannot reserve one or more of such grounds for a future suit; and this is what is laid down in Explanation IV to section 13, Civil Procedure Code, 1882, which is the same as Explanation IV to section 11 of the present Code. Even taking this restricted view of the scope of the decision without deciding whether it is correct to so restrict it, it appears clear that the present case falls within it and is covered by the Explanation.

The Privy Council again held in Kameswar Pershad v. Raj Kumari Rullan Koer (4) that a suit to enforce a charge on property barred a second suit for the same amount on a personal covenant to pay under the same agreement. Their Lordships say that "the question whether the second claim ought to have been put forward in the first case depends on the particular facts of each case. When matters are so dissimilar that their union might lead to confusion, the construction of the word "ought" would become important; in this case matters were the same. It was only an alternative way of seeking to impose a liability upon Run Bahadur, and it appears to their Lordships that the matter "ought" to have been made a ground of attack in the former suit." This case shows that if a person has two grounds on which he could base his claim or title to a thing, he must bring forward both in the first suit itself and he will be barred from bringing a second suit, unless, indeed, the union leads to confusion. In the case before us the joining together of the two claims the one under a purchase and the other as heir would have led to no confusion or embarrassment. If plaintiff failed to prove the joint purchase he alleged, the property must have necessarily been taken to be Muthu Mahomed's as the deed was in his name and as the defendant claimed title through him for his alternative claim he would then have to prove only that he is a residuary to get relief on that ground. In either case the invalidity of the 6th defendant's title must be proved so that the addition of the alternative case will have led to no confusion at all and no embarrassment to plaintiff in leading his evidence.

The case in Kameswar Pershad v. Raj Kumari Rullan Koer (4) was followed by their Lordships again in Moosa Goolam Ariff v. Ebrahim Goolam Ariff (5). Thus, it would seem clear on the authority of the Privy Council ruling that the plaintiff should have put forward all his grounds of attack to recover the suit house from the defendant and, not having put forward his claim based on his right of inheritance in the former suit, he is now barred from doing so. The fact that plaintiff claimed in the first suit a one-third share by partition whereas now he claims a specific three-eighths share which alone is left with the defendant, the balance having been recovered from him by Muthu Mahomed's widow and daughter, can make no difference to the application of the rule of res judicata, for, according to both his claims, the defendant had no right to any portion of the property, he being a trespasser. A plaintiff cannot by claiming a larger or a smaller share in the same property than in his first suit get rid of the effect of res judicata against him. In both cases the relief against the defendant is to recover possession from him of the whole or part of the same property.

Besides the above-mentioned authorities, the appellant cited Masilamania Pillai v. Thiruvengadam Pillai (6), Gariya Rangaswamy Patrudu v. Majji Appalaswamy (7) and Guddappa v. Tirkappa (8). The respondent, on the other hand, has quoted a number of cases where it was held that the second suit was not barred but I think it is not necessary to discuss them all. It is not possible to reconcile all the cases; but it may be conceded that a plaintiff is not bound, under O. II, r. 2, to join in one suit all the causes of action he had got against the defendant; but that principle is not one applicable to the question before us which refers to a plaintiff's duty to bring forward all the grounds of his attack in support of the title that he is litigating. Reference must, however, be made to two of the cases relied on by the learned Vakil for the respondent, Ramaswami Ayyar v. Vythinatha Ayyar (3), a decision of this Court and Saminathan Chetty v. Palaniappa Chetty (9), a decision of the Privy Council in an appeal from Ceylon. In the former case it was ruled that the dismissal of a suit to redeem one mortgage did not bar a subsequent suit to redeem another mortgage on the same property. I agree with this decision, as the two suits are different from one another being based on two different contracts. The title or jural relationship in the two litigations are different as the terms of the two mortgages which regulate that relationship are different. But I do not wish to be understood as agreeing to all the observations in that judgment. That case is really an illustration of the rule that a plaintiff is not bound to combine different causes of action in the same suit and does not apply here.

The Privy Council case cited is Saminathan Chetty v. Palaniappa Chetty (9). The first suit was on certain promissory notes, which failed as the notes were found to have been materially altered. The second suit was for money due under a certain award or settlement for which the notes had been given. The question considered in that case was not one of res judicata but whether a second suit was barred by reason of section 34 of the Ceylon Procedure Code, corresponding to O. II, r. 2 of our Code. Their Lordships held that the claim on the notes and the claim on the original consideration under the award or settlement were quite independent claims and constituted "two inconsistent and mutually exclusive causes of action" and, therefore, the second suit did not offend against the section quoted. No question of the kind before us was raised and we cannot, therefore, treat it as an authority on that question.

NAINA MUHAMMAD ROWTHER v. ABDUL RAHAMAN ROWTHER.

For the above reasons I hold that the present suit is barred by section 11, Explanation IV, Civil Procedure Code, and must be dismissed. I allow the appeal and dismiss the suit with defendant's costs throughout.

Ramesam, J.—The facts are fully stated by my learned brother.

The decision depends on a construction of the words "litigating under the same title," taken with Explanation IV in section 11, Civil Procedure Code. As a large number of decisions, including those of the Judicial Committee, are available as guides, it is futile to attempt to work out the details in the application of the section by the mere consideration of the words of the section. On an analysis of the decisions cited before us, the following propositions may be gathered from them (without attempting to generalise):—

(1) Where the creditor (hypothecatee) of a Hindu widow claimed to recover the debt from a reversioner who got into possession of the estate through a surrender by the widow, a claim based on that ground or on express covenant at the time of surrendering, to pay the debt, is barred by a prior suit to recover the identical debt where it was based on the ground that it was beneficial to and binding on the reversioner Kameswar Pershad v. Raj Kumari Ruttan Koer (4).

(2) Where the first suit was to redeem one mortgage it does not bar a suit to redeem a mortgage of a different date though the property sought to be redeemed and the principal amount of the mortgage are identical: Ramaswami Ayyar v. Vythinatha Ayyar (3), Veerana Pillai v. Muthukumara Asary (10) and Thrikkai Madathil Raman v. Thiruthiyil Krishnen Nair (11).

(3) Where the first suit was based merely on the relationship of landlord and tenant between plaintiff and defendant (and not on plaintiff's title as owner or otherwise) a second suit based on title is not barred: Mangalathimmal v. Veerappa Goundan (12).

In the first case the claimant litigates under the same title but not in the second and third cases.

(4) Where the plaintiff sought to recover the property as owner, a second suit to recover the same property also as owner is barred, even though the details for the ownership are different from those in the first

It is scarcely necessary to add that in cases 1 and 4 the facts which are the basis of the second suit must have existed at the time of the first suit to attract the bar of res judicata. The fourth proposition is supported by Woomatara Debea v. Kristokaminee Dossee (1), Moosa Goolam Ariff v. Ebrahim Goolam Ariff (5), Guddappa v. Tirhappa (8), Masilamania Pillai v. Thiruvengadam Pillai (6) and Gariya Rangaswamy Patradu v. Majji Appalaswamy (7).

In my opinion the decision in Subrahmaniam Chetti v. Authinarayana (13), Second Appeal No. 1606 of 1914 and Second Appeal No. 1391 of 1917 (unreported) are inconsistent with Woomatara Debea v. Kristokaminee Dossee (1). I also agree with Seshagiri Aiyar, J.'s dissent in Gariya Rangaswamy Patradu v. Majji Appalaswamy (7) from the remarks at page 779 of Ramaswami Ayyar v. Vythinatha Ayyar (3).

In the application of the fourth proposition it must be remembered that the claim in the second suit must be either substantially identical with or part of the claim in the first suit.

Coming to the present case, can there be any difference for the purpose of res judicata merely because (1) the share claimed by the plaintiff in the present is three-eighths and that in the former case was one-third and (2) there was a claim for partition in the first suit and none now? I think not. In the first place, the share to which plaintiff was entitled in the former suit on the footing that all the three brothers originally acquired the property was not one-third but one-third plus three-eighths of one-third or eleven-twenty-fourths, the plaintiff being entitled to the extra one-eighth by reason of succession from the second brother. Though the result of this succession was overlooked in so far as the two-thirds claimed by all the three plaintiffs in the former suit were concerned, it was a claim for ejectment against the present defendant whether the two-thirds consisted of one-third belonging to 1st plaintiff and one-third to 2nd and 3rd plaintiff or eleven-twenty-fourths to 1st plaintiff and five-twenty-fourths to 2nd and 3rd plaintiffs. The fact that a partition was asked for because the heirs of the first brother did not join as co-plaintiffs was a mere accident and does not change the character of the suit.

The share now claimed (viz., three-eighths) by the plaintiff was certainly less than the eleven-twenty-fourths to which he was entitled at the time of the former suit (even on the allegation of acquisition by all the three brothers) though by an oversight as to the results of the death of the second brother, his title was described as that to a third; and it certainly overlaps substantially the claim actually made. If the shares are identical though there is no claim for partition in the second suit, it cannot be said that the second suit is not barred and the non-identity of the shares is a mere accident and can make no difference for the application of the principle. In Balbhaddar Nath v. Ram Lal (14), Shivram v. Narayan (15) and Konerrav v. Gurra (16), the plaintiff's right as co-owner using the term generally was admitted in the first and only the fact of a partition resulting in plaintiff's right to a specific plot was in dispute. In the interval between the two suits, he continued to be co-owner and the second suit for partition was not barred. In Nilo Ramchandra v. Govind Ballai (17) (a suit for vatan property) some of the defendants in the first suit admitted plaintiff's right though not the one who was the contesting defendant in the second suit. In Thandavan v. Valli-amma (18) and Dhanapala Chetty v. Anantha Chetty (19), the first suit was for a declaration and there was neither identity of suit nor identity of issue as the validity of the Will in one case and the construction of the Will in the second were not in question in the first suit. In Allunni v. Kunjusha (20), the Karnavan had not exercised his right to resume as Karnavan at the time of the first suit. In Second Appeal No. 1391 of 1917 if the plaintiff's right to his own undivided share was admitted in the first suit, that decision would have been distinguishable like Vengapayyan v. Karimbanakal Parvati (21) and the cases in Konerrav v. Gurra (16). As it is, I am not able to agree with it. It cannot be said either in Second Appeal No. 1391 of 1917 or in the present suit that if the second claim was made alternatively in the first suit, the first suit would have been bad for misjoinder of parties and of causes of action either under the present Code or of the old Code. In the result, I agree with my learned brother that the plaintiff's suit should be dismissed with costs throughout.

Appeal dismissed.

certain properties or their value Rs. 102-6. According to her plaint the properties in question were entrusted by her to the first defendant, a goldsmith Maung Po Aung, to do certain work on them. When she asked Maung Po Aung for the properties back, he told her that Ma Tin had taken the properties in question away, saying that she had been requested by Ma Chit to do so. Ma Tin admitted taking certain pieces of gold and bangles from Maung Po Aung which, she was told, were entrusted to him by Ma Chit, but she says that Ma Chit had been her servant, that she had lost property to the value of Rs. 120 whilst Ma Chit was in her employ, and that it was agreed that the gold bangles which she got from the goldsmith should be taken as part payment towards this Rs. 120. The Trial Court found that the agreement alleged by Ma Tin was not proved, and gave the plaintiff a decree for the return of the properties, or Rs. 102-6, against both the defendants. Ma Tin has now come to this Court in revision under the provisions of section 25 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act. Four grounds are set forth in the application before the Court. The second ground raises questions of fact which are not matters for consideration in revision. The third ground claims that the suit is barred by limitation; but the suit was brought well within three years from the date of the alleged entrustment, and it has not been suggested that any shorter period than three years is the period prescribed by the law of limitation in this case. The fourth ground is of a general nature, and raises no specific point. When the case came on for hearing as to admission, nothing was in fact said in support of these three grounds which have been practically abandoned. The application has been argued on the first ground only, and that is that the Small Cause Court should have held that the jurisdiction of that Court was barred as falling within Art. 18 of the First Schedule of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act. That Article excepts from the cognizance of a Court of Small Causes "a suit relating to a trust, including a suit to make good, out of the general estate of a deceased trustee, the loss occasioned by a breach of trust, and a suit by a co-trustee to enforce against the estate of a deceased trustee a claim for contribution." It is contended that the suit brought by Ma Chit was a suit relating to a trust. It does not seem to me possible to uphold this contention. A trust is defined in section 3 of the Indian Trusts Act, 1882, as "an obligation annexed to the ownership of property and arising out of the confidence reposed in and accepted by the owner, or declared and accepted by him for the benefit of another, or of another and the owner." In the present case the plaintiff says that she entrusted the properties to the first defendant, but her case is that she was, and still is, the owner of the properties. She does not allege that any confidence was reposed in and accepted by her, or was declared and accepted by her. Whatever confidence there was, was reposed in and accepted by Maung Po Aung, who is not alleged to be the owner of the property. There was, therefore, no trust within the meaning of section 3 of the Indian Trusts Act. That Act is not in force in the Minbu District. But there seems to be little doubt that, in framing Art. 18 of the Schedule to the Small Cause Courts Act, the Legislature intended the word "trust" to bear a meaning at least analogous to the meaning as defined in the Indian Trusts Act.

No authority has been cited before me in favour of the view that a suit of the nature of the present suit is a suit relating to a trust within the meaning of Art. 18, and such authority as I have been able to find is in support of the view that I now take. In the case of Kartar Devi v. Surasti (1) the plaintiff alleged that certain moveable properties had been deposited for safe custody with the defendant, and sued for recovery of that property or its value. It was held that the suit was one for the recovery of the moveable property or its value, and not one relating to a trust. The circumstances of that case were very similar to those of the present case, and the view there taken is the view now taken by me. It seems to me quite clear that Art. 18 is not applicable to a case like the present. The value of the suit in the present case was under Rs. 500 and it is not suggested that any other of the Articles in the Second Schedule of the Small Cause Courts Act is Evidence Act (I of 1872) ss. 35, 124—Land acquisition proceedings—Report made by Tahsildar, whether relevant—Objection under s. 124 not taken in Trial Court—Objection, whether can be taken in appeal—Market-value of buildings—Method of determination.

The report of a Tahsildar and his valuation statement in land acquisition proceedings are admissible in evidence under section 35 of the Evidence Act as reports made in obedience to orders passed by his Superior Officers and in discharge of his official duty. [p. 216, col. 1.]

Where, in a Land Acquisition proceeding, private and correct copies of the report of the Tahsildar and his valuation statement were taken by a claimant and filed in Court and exhibited without objection on the part of the Government:

Held, that it was not open to Government in appeal to claim privilege as regards the documents under section 124 of the Evidence Act as communications made in official confidence. [p. 216, col. 1.]

In determining the market-value in a Land Acquisition case, a plot consisting of buildings and a garden is more satisfactorily valued by capitalising the rental value rather than by separately valuing the buildings and the land on which the buildings stand. [p. 217, col. 1.]

Appeal against the award of the District Court, Salem in Land Acquisition Case No. 9 of 1915.

Mr. S. T. Srinivasagopalachari (with him Messrs. L. A. Govindaraghava Aiyar and K. S. Rajagopala Aiyangar), for the Appellants.—On the application of my friend Mr. L. A. Govinda Raghava Iyer who appeared on the former occasion, your Lordships directed the Government to send up certain documents for inspection. They have now been sent in a sealed cover.

They consist of two reports by the Tahsildar and a special valuation report in land acquisition proceedings. The Government Pleader claims privilege for the documents. The question of privilege depends on section 124 and section 164 of the Evidence Act read together. Privilege under section 124 is subject to inspection by Court under section 162 and is not absolute: See Nagaraja Pillai v. Secretary of State (1) and Venkatachella Chettiar v. Sampathu Chettiar (2). The Court has always power to inspect documents and determine if the objection is well-founded.

No privilege can attach in this case because none was claimed, since Government undertook to produce two of the documents, and did in fact actually produce one of them.

Secondly, there is no inherent objection to admissibility of such documents. The question is one of privilege or benefit which can be waived by the Government or destroyed by the other party getting at those documents even though surreptitiously. There is evidence in the case which stands uncontradicted that the Tahsildar permitted the claimant to make private though unauthorised copies of these documents which were in fact filed without objection, and it has not been suggested that the copies filed are not correct and true copies.

Thirdly, the documents are merely valuation reports. They may be adverse to the Government but cannot on that account be said to be made in such official confidence that the public interests would suffer by its disclosure. No privilege can be claimed in the present case.

On the valuation itself, the Judge has adopted a 20 years' value. The lands and the buildings must have been separately valued. The proper test of computation in the present case is to see in what way the property can be laid out in the most lucrative and advantageous manner [Premchand Burrall v. Collector of Calcutta (3)], with reference to special adaptability for building purposes, [Manji Khetsey, In the matter of (4)] and its potential value. [Dorabji Cursetji Sheroff, In re (5).]

Even on the basis of rental valuation, 25 years' purchase must have been allowed and not 20 only [Secretary of State for India in Council v. Sham Bahadur (6)], and in any case the rental basis must have been fixed having regard to its future potentialities. The prior acquisition though of a small plot furnishes the best datum for calculating the market-value.

Mr C. Madhavan Nair, for the Collector.—The privilege under section 124 is absolute and is incapable of being waived, and has not been waived. The error of the Government Pleader in producing documents does not operate as estoppel against the Collector. Bare faced fraud in getting hold of these documents, even if acquiesced in by an official, does not deprive the statutory privilege vested under section 124.

Secondly, the documents are irrelevant and inadmissible in evidence. They are only communications made by one official to another and do not constitute an entry in the discharge of his official duty or duty enjoined by any law: Malikarjuna Dugget v. Secretary of State (7). On the merits, no scheme or plan has been filed by the claimant. No evidence has been let in on the potential value of land for building purposes and arguments based on building schemes and potential value cannot be raised now for the first time in appeal.

As to valuing the land and buildings separately, in a rent case, Appeal Suit No. 262 of 1921 [Kathissibai v. Revenue Divisional Officer, Calicut (8)], it has been held in an elaborate and well-considered judgment that premises comprising land and buildings are more satisfactorily valued on rental basis.

Compensation awarded to a small bit of land on a former occasion cannot afford satisfactory data in fixing the price of a big plot of land.

The award given below is quite proper.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal in a Land Acquisition Case against the decree of the District Court of Salem. Three plots of lands, survey Nos. 29, 34 and 35, suitable for house building, were acquired for the purpose of building a hostel for the Salem College in 1915, the date of the notification being July 1915. On plots Nos. 34 and 35, there was a bungalow and that was also acquired. The Deputy Collector awarded in the first instance for the three plots of land including the bungalow and the houses standing on them Rs. 12,170-13-8 and 15 per cent. the statutory compensation in addition. The District Judge has increased that award to Rs. 15,620 including the 15 per cent. for compensation. The claimants have appealed to this Court and they claim that their properties are worth more and that they should get Rs. 8,333-5-7 extra, that is, Rs. 23,953-5-7 in all.

At the opening of the case the learned Advocate for the appellants wanted us to admit in evidence in this Court the Tahsildar's reports of the 18th June 1913 and the 26th September 1913 and a special valuation statement submitted by him on the 12th June 1913. With reference to that prayer we called for a report from the lower Court and also the original documents in a sealed cover. The report and those documents have now come up before us. The learned Government Pleader has objected to their being admitted in evidence under section 124 of the Indian Evidence Act and also because he contended that they were irrelevant as evidence. As regards section 124 of the Indian Evidence Act, it is hardly necessary to go into any detailed consideration of the meaning of that section, for we notice that copies of all these three documents had been filed in the lower Court as Exhibits A and J, apparently without any objection on the part of the Government Pleader that they were privileged documents, under section 124 which should not be admitted in evidence, for we do not see anything in the lower Court's records or judgment to show that any objection was raised. These copies were proved to be correct copies taken by one of the claimants and he swore to that effect in the witness-box. After having done that, we do not think it can be claimed any more that they are communications made in official confidence. If the Government intended to take the objection under section 124, the learned Government Pleader in the lower Court should have objected to these copies going to the record. Now that these copies are on the record in this case we cannot consider the communications made to be communications made in confidence. That being so, we must overrule the objection under section 124 of the Evidence Act. It is not necessary to refer to the authorities on the point, namely, Venkatachella Chettiar v. Sampathu Chettiar (2) and Nagaraja Pillai v. Secretary of State (1). They do not touch the point before us.

As regards the next plea that the documents are irrelevant, we are unable to uphold that contention of the learned Government Pleader. We think they are relevant under section 35 of the Evidence Act. The Tahsildar made these reports in obedience to an order passed by his superior officer and in discharge of his official duties. Whether it is a duty enjoined on him by the law of the country to send up these reports or not, he was bound, as an officer subordinate to the Deputy Collector, to make the report when he was called upon to do so and the report was made as an official report after such enquiries as the Tahsildar could make. His report is kept on the record of this Land Acquisition Case in the Collector's Office and thus it comes expressly within the words of section 35. But it is hardly necessary to put the originals on record because there are correct copies already filed and it is sufficient to refer to them, if necessary, for our purposes here. As a matter of fact, we may observe that no reliance has been placed upon these documents by either side.

As regards the merits of the case we may observe at the outset that there is very little evidence on record to enable us to come to a satisfactory conclusion as to the market-value of the properties acquired. Properties forming Survey Nos. 34 and 35 seem to stand on a somewhat different footing from property forming Survey No. 29, for the two former are accessible to the road on two sides, whereas the latter is not so and is inferior land with no road access and faces the river. We will, therefore, consider their market-value separately.

Taking Survey Nos. 34 and 35 with the buildings standing on them first, the District Judge has adopted the method of capitalising the rental value of these plots. They are $8\frac{1}{2}$ acres in extent and have a fairly large building on them. They have been let for twenty years prior to 1911 to the Police Department for Rs. 75 a month, subsequently to Government for the Sankari Deputy Collector's Office, and for a few months thereafter to one Mr. Levinge. All through the rent has been Rs. 75, except during the short period when Government was in occupation for the purpose of locating the Deputy Collector's Office when the Municipal tax was paid by Government. The learned Judge capitalises the net rental at twenty years' purchase and arrives at the figures Rs. 13,100 as the proper value of the plot. It has been argued strenuously before us by the learned Advocate for the appellant that this method was not correct and that the land and the buildings should have been valued separately and the District Judge should have taken into consideration the compensation paid by Government for a former acquisition of a plot of land 18 cents in extent under Exhibit H for the purpose of laying a road. The price then paid was at the rate of Rs. 15 a cent, which would work out to Rs. 1,500 an acre. We do not think that this acquisition of such a small plot of land for which only a small sum of money was paid can be made the basis of valuation for a large plot like the one now in question before us. It is impossible to say that such an acquisition stands on the same footing as the present acquisition, nor can we properly deduce the market-value of the land from such an acquisition as that, for when very small plots are acquired the actual rates at which they are acquired are not often properly scrutinised, the whole cost of the acquisition being small.

The appellant's next contention is, that the $8\frac{1}{2}$ acres of land on which the buildings stand should also be valued separately and that the buildings should also be valued separately and the two added together to get the total market-value of the plots with the buildings standing thereon. That is hardly the way in which property consisting of a house and garden is valued in the market. We think that a plot consisting of a house and a garden is much more satisfactorily valued in the manner in which the District Judge has done, by capitalising the rental in the absence of other evidence which would give a more satisfactory value. Taking the monthly rental in this case, viz., Rs. 75, and making allowance for the Municipal tax payable on the land Rs. 150, and the payment to the mittadar Rs. 20 a year, charged upon this land, deducting also what one of the claimants who gave evidence in the case says he spent for the repairs and upkeep of this building, viz., Rs. 50, we get a net annual rental of Rs. 680. The learned District Judge has taken a month's rental as the cost of repairs. That will ordinarily be so, but here we have special evidence, and there is nothing to contradict it, that Rs. 40 or Rs. 50 were spent for repairs. Taking, therefore, Rs. 680 as the net annual rental, and taking twenty years' purchase, which we think is a fair figure to adopt and a figure which is ordinarily adopted in most cases, the value of these two plots with the buildings on them will come to Rs. 13,600. This, we think, may well be accepted as the total value of these two plots.

It is in evidence that the building itself is separately valued at Rs. 6,500 and odd. Deducting that figure from this and taking the rest as the value of the land, the value of the land would work out to Rs. 850 an acre, which, we think, under the circumstances of the case, is not at all an improper value, for evidence has been adduced on behalf of Government, Exhibits I, II and III, which would show that the value of the land in the neighbourhood would seem to have been Rs. 400 an acre. It is quite true that those lands were lands of an inferior character being rather low in level and required to be raised for building purposes. That would, of course, account for the difference in the amount that we are now awarding for the land acquired under the Act and their market-value.

It is also suggested that in taking this method of rental valuation for calculation of the value, we ought not to include the whole of the $8\frac{1}{2}$ acres as part of the property but should allot a certain proportion of the land to the bungalow reasonably sufficient for the comfortable occupation of the bungalow and take the value arrived at by the capitalisation method as the value of that portion of the land and the bungalow, valuing separately the rest of the land; because it is contended that this is a good building site and the rest of the land could be utilized for building purposes. There is in this case no evidence of the existence of any scheme for building on that property nor of any intention either by the owners or by others to build on it. Furthermore, it is a matter for speculation as to how much of the land should be allotted to the bungalow and whether, if such an allotment is made, the rent may not be affected. We do not think that we will be justified in making any speculation such as this and, therefore, we take it that the value arrived at correctly represents the market-value of these two plots.

Turning now to plot No. 29 we think the value given by the lower Court is too low for this. It is not used at present as a building site but as a garden. The method of capitalisation of the rental value is not the proper method to use for ascertaining the value of such a land. We think it is much better to take the value of the land in the neighbourhood, as proved by Government itself, as the value of this land also. The Deputy Collector has arrived at the figure of Rs. 400 an acre. As regards this land also we do not think it necessary to reduce that figure at all. Taking the value then at Rs. 400 an acre, three acres and 15 cents will be worth Rs. 1,260. From this has, however, to be deducted a certain amount representing the capitalized value of the assessment payable to the mittadar. The total assessment was Rs. 30 on these three plots. We have already given credit for Rs. 20 on the two plots Nos. 34 and 35 leaving Rs. 10 to be allowed for this plot. Taking twenty years' purchase here also we must deduct a sum of Rs. 200 as the capitalized value of the mittadars assessment leaving Rs. 1,060 as the value payable to the claimants.

RAMDAS SHA V. DAMODAR PRASHAD.

The claimants have also been awarded the value of certain trees standing upon these lands, viz., Rs. 162, and this has also to be added to the price of the property. The total price according to us will, therefore, come to Rs. 14,822. To this must be added 15 per cent., the statutory allowance under the Act, which comes to Rs. 2,233-4-9. Thus, the total comes to Rs. 17,645-11-9 and this is our award in the place of that given by the District Judge.

The learned Advocate for the claimants claims that he should be given interest under section 28 of the Land Acquisition Act on the excess awarded over the amount given by the Collector. We think he is justly entitled to this and we award him interest at 6 per cent. from the date the Collector took possession of this land to the date of payment into Court of the excess which has been awarded to him by us.

The final question on which we have to decide is as regards costs. The Government have filed a memorandum of objections claiming the costs in the lower Court. What the learned Judge did there was, to refuse to give costs to the claimants because they have exaggerated their claim considerably. We do not think there is any ground for interference with that order. As regards the costs of this appeal we think a similar order will be the most proper in this case. There will, therefore, be no order as to costs either in the appeal or in the memorandum of objections.

Appeals from a decision of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Saran, dated the 1st October and the 9th October 1920, reversing the decisions of the Munsif, Fourth Court, Chapra, dated the 8th September and the 23rd December 1920.

Mr. Nirsu Narain Sinha, for the Appellants.

Mr. Sambhu Saran, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—These are two appeals against the decrees of the Additional Subordinate Judge of Saran reversing the decisions of the Munsif of Chapra in two suits brought by the plaintiffs with regard to two small plots of land. Second Appeal No. 51 of 1921 relates to Title Suit No. 538 of 1918 the subject of which was 14 kathas of land, bearing Survey Plot No. 772. Second Appeal No. 248 of 1921 relates to Title Suit No. 539 of 1918 which was concerned with a plot of land measuring 14 kathas 6 dhurs and bearing Survey Plot No. 724. The allegations in the plaints in the two cases were similar and both cases were dealt with in a single judgment on appeal by the Subordinate Judge and I shall deal with both in this judgment.

The case for the plaintiffs was that the land was gairmajrua am and that the people of the village used the land for the purposes of khallhan and for putting up marriage processions coming to the village, and for playing Ramlila and for tying cattle in the rainy season. The defence was that the land was waste land which the defendant No. 1, the landlord, was entitled to settle and that she had in fact settled it with defendant No. 2. The plaintiffs sought a declaration of their rights to and recovery of possession of the land, and in Suit No. 539 a mandatory injunction on the defendant No. 2 to remove certain structures which he had built on the land.

The Munsif dismissed both the suits, but the Subordinate Judge passed a decree declaring the rights of the plaintiff and restoring them to possession. The finding of fact on which his decision is based is that the villagers, without interruption by the malik, have been using the land for performing Ramlila, for putting up marriage processions, for keeping khalihans and for tying cattle during the rainy season from time immemorial. Now, an objection is taken to the form of the decree. It is conceded by the learned Vakil for the respondents that this finding of fact does not entitle the plaintiffs to a decree for possession. The land belongs to the landlord and the plaintiffs have certain rights over it. This does not entitle them to the possession of the land but only to a declaration of their rights. It is said that there should also be an injunction, but no injunction was prayed for in Suit No. 538, while the mandatory injunction asked for in Suit No. 539 was not apparently pressed in the Courts below because there is no finding that the houses said to have been built on this plot of land make it impossible for the plaintiffs to exercise their customary rights. The only decree, therefore, that can be passed in this case is a decree declaring the rights of the plaintiffs.

The grounds on which the decree passed by the Subordinate Judge is attacked are, first, that the rights found cannot be an easement; that even if they do amount to an easement they will not prevent the landlord from developing and settling the land; and, lastly, that the issue of limitation has not been tried and, therefore, the case must go back. With regard to the last point, it is true that an issue of limitation was raised but there is nothing to show in the judgments of the Courts below that this point was pressed; nor does there seem to be any substance in the issue because, according to the defendants' own case, the land was settled in 1325, the year in which the suit was brought, and as this is plainly a suit in which the period of limitation is 12 years there can be no substance in the argument and I think it unnecessary to direct a remand of the case for a determination of the issue.

I now turn to the substantial question in the case. It is conceded by the learned Vakil for the respondents that it is not a case of easement. The argument on behalf of the appellants is, therefore, admitted. The plaintiffs' rights do not amount to an easement and they do not prevent the landlord from developing and settling the land. Effect has been given to this argument by removing that part of the decree which gave the plaintiffs' possession. There is nothing to prevent the landlord from settling the land and developing it, so long as he does not interfere with the rights which the plaintiffs have acquired. The learned Vakil for the respondents puts his case on the basis of custom. That such customs as are here claimed have been recognised in India is clear from the reported cases. Thus, in Mohidin v. Shivlingappa (1), the right of burial within a limited area of land was recognised as a good custom. Similarly, in Kuar Sen v. Mammen (2), the custom of exhibiting tezias and alums and using a certain Chabutra as a sitting place during Moharram was recognised as a good custom. In Bhola Nath Nundi v. Midnapore Zemindary Co. (3) the right of pasturage in the land of another was recognised. It is said that the case has not been treated as a case of custom; that the learned Subordinate Judge has alternated between two views: in one part of his judgment he seems to treat the land as village common in which the plaintiffs had proprietary rights and in another part he has treated their rights as an easement, but he has nowhere directed his attention to a consideration of the essentials of custom. It is true that the Subordinate Judge is not very clear in his treatment of the case, but, as he says distinctly enough that it is not a case of easement. His finding, which I have already quoted contains all the necessary elements. He finds what rights the plaintiffs have been exercising from time immemorial. It is contended on behalf of the appellants that this custom is not a good custom because it is unreasonable and uncertain. There is no uncertainty about it, because the elements have been specifically set forth in the plaint and specifically found in the judgment. It is said to be unreasonable because it excludes or may exclude the landlord from the use of his land altogether. A similar objection was taken in the case of Hall v. Nottingham (4), where the custom set up was the custom for the inhabitants of a parish to enter upon certain land in the parish, and erect a Maypole thereon, and dance round and about it, and otherwise enjoy on the land any lawful and innocent recreation at any time in the year; but there it was found that such a custom was neither too general nor uncertain nor unreasonable. I see nothing unreasonable about the custom claimed in this case.

The result is that the appeals must substantially fail, but there must be a variation in the form on the decree. The suits are decreed with costs to this extent that the rights of the plaintiffs to perform the Ramlila and to put up marriage processions and to have their khalihan and tie cattle during the rainy season on the land in suit are declared. There will be no costs of the appeals.

Where on an application to set aside an ex parte decree under section 17 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act on the last day of limitation, the defendant applied for a chalan and on account of the delay of the officer of the Court, the chalan was issued some days later and the decree amount was deposited immediately on the issue of the chalan:

Petition under section 25 of Act IX of 1887, praying the High Court to revise the order of the District Munsif, Tuticorin, in C. M. P. No. 385 of 1921 in S. C. S. No. 1454 of 1920.

Mr. A. Swaminatha Iyer, for the Petitioner.—This is an application to revise an order refusing to set aside an ex parte decree under section 17 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act on the ground that the deposit which must accompany the application was made out of time. The Court held also there was no jurisdiction to excuse delay. The Judge is wrong on both points. The 30 days prescribed for setting aside the ex parte decree expired during the vacation. The application was made on the re-opening day. The chalan was asked for at once; but on account of the mistake by an officer of the Court, it was issued 5 days later and deposit was made at once. The application for issue of chalan must be deemed to be deposit in itself.

The maxim nunc pro tunc clearly applies and the position is well-settled by authorities: See Munna Lal v. Radha Kishan (1) and Mahomed Akbar Jaman Khan v. Sukhdeo Panday (2).

Secondly, the Judge was in error in thinking he had no power to excuse delay: See the recent decision in Sudalaimuthu Kudamban v. Andi Reddiar (3). There was no negligence on the applicant's part and the delay must be excused.

(1) 30 Ind. Cas. 186; 37 A. 591; 13 A. L. J. 793;

(2) 10 Ind. Cas. 51; 13 C. L. J. 467.

ASUTOSH CHATTERJEE v. UPENDRA CHANDRA AICH.

Mr. T. L. Venkatarama Iyer, for the Respondents.—The question is whether the High Court can interfere in revision. The learned Judge has found delay as a question of fact; also that the defendant was guilty of laches. This Court will not interfere with the discretion of the Court below in a matter like this even if the decision is wrong.

JUDGMENT.—Following the decisions in Makomed Akbar Jaman Khan v. Sukhdeo Panday (2) and Munna Lal v. Radha Kishan (1), (the latter of which was cited before the District Munsif but not distinguished or otherwise dealt with by him), I hold that when the party has applied for a chalan and the delay in issuing the chalan is the delay of the officers of the Court and after the issue of the chalan, he deposited the amount immediately, the maxim nunc pro tunc applies and the application for chalan (in such circumstances) is equivalent to the deposit.

Even if excusing delay is necessary, the view of the District Munsif that the High Court by its rules cannot affect section 17 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act is clearly opposed to Sudalaimuthu Kudamban v. Andi Reddiar (3). The statement of the District Munsif that the deposit was not made in time on account of the negligence of the petitioner is opposed to all the facts that appear on the record. Not mentioning to the office that the chalan is wanted urgently cannot be regarded as negligence. Therefore, even if it were necessary to excuse the delay, I hold this is a case in which the delay ought to be excused. I reverse the order of the District Munsif and direct him to dispose of the petition according to law. The petitioner will have the costs of the revision petition. Costs in the lower Court will abide the result.

Calcutta Rent Act (III B. C. of 1920), ss. 2 (f) (ii), 15, 18—Order fixing standard rent under s. 2 (f) (ii)—Revision by President of Tribunal.

An order of the Rent Controller fixing the standard rent for certain premises under section 2 (f) (ii) of the Calcutta Rent Act is open to revision by the President of the Calcutta Improvement Tribunal under section 18 of the Act.

The Calcutta Rent Act contemplates "fixing" of the standard rent even in cases not coming under section 15 of the Act; in other words, in cases coming under section 2 (f) (ii) of the Act.

Rule against an order of the Court of the President of the Calcutta Improvement Tribunal, in Case No. 218 of 1921.

Babu Amarendra Nath Bose, for the Petitioner.—The learned President is wrong in thinking that he cannot exercise his powers of revision under section 18 as there has been no 'fixing' of the standard rent by the Controller under section 15.

The word 'fixing' has not been determined in the Act. It means not only 'settling,' but also 'determining' or 'specifying.' The ascertainment of a certain definite thing which can be ascertained by evidence has been termed 'fixing' in the Act itself. Under section 8 no increase of rent allowable under the Act can be realised until the service of a certificate from the Controller 'fixing' the standard rent. This must include cases under clause (i) of section 2 (f) as the addition of 10 per cent. allowable under that clause is an increase of rent. The Controller is said to 'fix' the standard rent by finding out what the rent was on the 1st November 1918 and thus adding 10 per cent. to it. Also where, under section 7, the Controller increases the standard rent to the extent of the increase in the amount of Municipal rates, the increase comes within the purview of section 8 and the Controller is said to 'fix' the standard rent in granting the increase. Section 18 does not refer to section 15 at all. I am concerned with the meaning of 'fixing.' If 'fixing' has one meaning at one place in the Act, it will have the same meaning throughout the Act. Maxwell's Interpretation of Statutes, 6th Edition, page 556, also Mahomed Akil v. Assadunnessa Bibee (1) (per Peacock, C. J.)

In section 15 itself in sub-section (3) (b) fixing means only deducting the amount of hire for the furniture. Similarly, under sub-section (2) what the Controller does is to find out the rent on the 1st November 1918 and then add to it the price of food and hire for furniture.

There is nothing in the Act to confine revision under section 18 to 'fixing' under section 15. In the Bombay Act (VII of 1918) section 6 specifies from which section revision lies.

I submit, therefore, section 18 applies to a case like the present where there has been no 'fixing' in the sense of settling the rent.

Babu Abinash Chandra Ghosh, for the Opposite Party.—Standard rent may be divided into two classes—(1) statutory standard rent, mentioned in clauses (i) and (ii) of section 2 (f), given certain circumstances, the standard rent is certain, cannot be altered or varied.

(2) equitable standard rent, mentioned in clause (iii) of section 2 (f).

The Act makes a distinction between these two. Statutory standard rent exists from the very beginning of the Act. The equitable does not come into existence before the Controller has fixed it. The word 'fixing' does not apply to statutory standard rent at all.

[CHATTERJEE, J.—If one party says it is 50 and the other party says it is 70, and the Controller finds it is 50, is that not 'fixing'?

'Fixing' does not include finding out the rate agreed upon or stipulated between the parties.

[CHATTERJEE, J.—'Fixing' is not defined in the Act.]

Section 8 refers to the increments that have been spoken of in sections 5 and 7. Once the statutory rent is altered under sections 5 and 7 it becomes equitable and it is 'fixed.' Statutory standard rent is unalterable. It can be recovered without a certificate.

[CHATTERJEE, J.—Would not a certificate be required under section 8 for realising the increase of 10 per cent. allowed under clause (i) of section 2 (i).]

This 10 per cent. is included within the standard rent. Section 8 contemplates increase over and above the standard rent. Statutory standard rent inclusive of the 10 per cent. is recoverable under section 4. It is only where the standard rent exceeds the statutory rent that section 8 applies.

In the Burma Act (II of 1920), of which our Act is a copy, section 8 specifically mentions sections 5 and 7. Here they thought specific mention of the section was unnecessary.

[PANTON, J.—The inference would be the other way.]

Section 15 does not help my friend. In sub-section (2) the sum has not been fixed by Statute and the Controller has a discretion in the matter. In clause (3) (b) also discretion is given to the Controller, no statutory figure is irrevocably fixed by the Legislature.

In section 15 (1) the expression used is 'certifying,' whereas in sub-sections (2) and (3) the expression used is 'fixing.' This last is also the expression used in section 18. It is the intention of the Legislature to make a distinction between the two terms.

I applied for 'certifying,' the Controller also has "certified." In certifying his decision is limited to finding out certain circumstances and the rent follows the lead of those circumstances.

In the case of statutory standard rent there is no need of revision by a superior Tribunal. It is in the case of equitable standard rent where there is a discretion allowed to the Controller that there is a revision by a superior Tribunal.

JUDGMENT.—This Rule arises out of proceedings under the Calcutta Rent Act and the question involved is, whether the President of the Tribunal is right in holding that an application for revision under section 18 of the Act could not be made in this case, because there was no decision of the Controller fixing the standard rent.

The landlord stated that the premises were let out at a rent of Rs. 70; the tenant, on the other hand, stated that it was Rs. 50 only. The tenant applied to the Rent Controller for certifying the standard rent.

The Rent Controller, after a consideration of the evidence, came to the conclusion that the rent should not be more than Rs. 50 per month inclusive of taxes, and that the rent was fixed at this rate when the applicant came in, and he made the following order: "Rupees fifty inclusive of taxes is, therefore, the standard rent of this portion (eastern) of the premises occupied by the applicant under section 2 (f) (ii) of the Act."

Both parties applied to the President of the Tribunal under section 18 of the Act, and he was of opinion that an application for revision under section 18 could be made only in cases where the Rent Controller fixes the standard rent under the provisions of section 15 of the Act that as the Controller's decision in the present case has been given expressly under section 2 (f) (ii) of the Act, he did not fix any standard rent for the premises and that, therefore, the order was one which could not be revised under section 18 of the Act.

Now, section 18 provides for an application for revision to the President of the Tribunal if the decision of the Controller fixing the standard rent for any premises is questioned. There is no doubt that there was a decision of the Controller in this case. The only question is, whether there was a decision fixing the standard rent.

The standard rent is defined in section 2, clause (f), and it means (i) the rent at which the premises were let on the 1st day of November 1918, or when they were not let on that date, the rent at which they were last let before that date and after the 1st day of November 1915, with the addition, in either case, of 10 per cent. on such rent; (ii) in the case of any premises which were or shall be first let after the 1st day of November 1918, the rent at which the premises were or may be first let: (iii) in the cases specified in section 15; the rent fixed by the Controller.

The word "fix" has not been defined in the Act. It, no doubt, means "to settle" and that is the view which has been taken by the learned President. It also means "to specify" or "to determine" (see the Oxford Dictionary). In the absence of any definition of the word in the Act, we do not see any sufficient reason for limiting the word to the case of settlement of the rent by the Controller, unless there is a clear indication in the Act that the word is used in that restricted sense. We do not find any such indication. On the other hand, reference to some of the other sections would indicate that the expression "fixing" is applicable not only to the cases specified in section 15, but also cases coming under the 1st and 2nd clauses of section 2 (f). Thus, section 8 provides that "wherever an increase of the rent of any premises is allowable under the provisions of this Act, no such increase shall be recoverable until the expiry of one month after the landlord has served on the tenant a notice in writing of his intention to increase the rent, accompanied by a certificate from the Controller fixing the standard rent." It appears from the terms of this section that no increase of the rent allowable under the Act can be recovered unless notice be served upon the tenant accompanied by a certificate from the Controller fixing the standard rent. This will cover a case of the rent originally payable on the 1st November 1918 with the addition of the statutory 10 per cent. on such rent.

It is contended, however, by the learned Pleader for the opposite party that that section contemplates a case where the rent exceeds the standard rent because the additional 10 per cent. is included in the standard rent under section 2 (f).

There is no doubt that the 10 per cent. is included in the standard rent but the 10 per cent. addition is an "increase of the rent" which is allowable under the provisions of this Act, because section 2 (f) is also a provision of the Act, and the section seems to lay down that no sum in excess of the rent originally payable can be recovered without a certificate from the Controller fixing the standard rent, where, of course, there is a dispute between the parties.

The learned Pleader for the opposite party pointed out that section 8 of the Burma Rent Act (II of 1920), which has been followed by the Calcutta Rent Act, lays down that the certificate of the Controller fixing the standard rent must be served along with a notice upon the tenant only in cases mentioned in sections 5 and 7, but that the clauses (a) and (b) of section 8 which thus limit the application of the section, have been omitted from the Calcutta Rent Act. The natural inference, however, from that omission would be that, instead of confining the operation of section 8 to certain cases, i. e., section 5 and 7, the Calcutta Rent Act provides generally for a notice wherever an increase of the rent of any premises is allowed. The learned Pleader also contended that the word "certifying" has been used in the Act as distinguished from "fixing." But the two expressions refer to two different things. The certificate is to be granted after the rent is fixed and it is to be granted to either of the parties. We do not think, therefore, that the use of the two expressions leads to the conclusion that the fixing of rent by the Controller can be made only under the provisions of section 15.

It appears, therefore, that the Act contemplates fixing of the standard rent by the Controller even in cases not coming under section 15; in other words, in cases coming under section 2 (f) (i); and if the word "fix" has been used in that section in a particular sense, we must give the word the same meaning in other portions of the Act where it occurs.

We are accordingly of opinion that the order of the Rent Controller is liable to revision under section 18 of the Act. The order of the President is, therefore, set aside and the case is sent back to his Court in order that he may hear the applications made to him by both the landlord and the tenant and dispose of them according to law.

The opposite party, however, must pay the costs of the petitioner, the hearing fee in this Court being assessed at 2 gold mohurs. The costs in the lower Courts will abide the result.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXXIII, r. 1—Application to sue in forma pauperis—Part claim paid into Court by opponent, effect of.

On an application to sue as a pauper, whether a fee is prescribed for the plaint or not, the subject-matter of the suit cannot be taken into consideration in calculating the plaintiff's means. The mere fact that the opponent pays in or deposits in Court a part of the claim, is no ground for rejecting the application for leave to sue as a pauper. [P. 225 cols. 1 & 2.]

JUDGMENT.

Macleod, C. J.—The applicant presented a petition to the Court to be allowed to file her suit in forma pauperis. Objection was taken by the respondent that the applicant was a minor. If she was a minor, then she could not make any application, and the question whether she was a pauper or not could not arise. Unfortunately, the Judge, having come to the conclusion that the applicant was a minor, also went on to deal with the question whether she was a pauper. Although we think that part of the order which directs that the applicant might bring a suit by her next friend was perfectly correct, we think that the Judge ought not to have directed that proper Court-fees must be paid on such suit and thereby determined the question of pauperism. It is, therefore, necessary for us to express an opinion on the question whether in that decision the Judge was wrong. Under the Explanation to O. XXXIII, r. 1, a person is a "pauper" when he is not possessed of sufficient means to enable him to pay the fee prescribed by law for the plaint, or, where no such fee is prescribed, when he is not entitled to property worth Rs. 100 other than his necessary wearing apparel and the subject-matter of the suit. In this case a fee was prescribed for the plaint. The defendant, in order to get rid of the contention of the applicant that she was a pauper, produced certain ornaments and cash which he admitted belonged to the applicant worth about Rs. 600, and said that he was willing to give them to the applicant, and, therefore, she was possessed of sufficient means to pay the fees. The applicant intended to claim in her suit a much larger amount than what was admitted to be due by the defendant. I do not think it can be said that, owing to the defendant's offer, the plaintiff was possessed of sufficient means to pay the prescribed fee. In a suit where no fee is prescribed by law for the plaint, no admission or even payment into Court by the defendant can be taken into consideration.

In Dwarka Nath Narayan v. Madhavray Vishwanath (1), the defendant produced in the Court, on an application by the plaintiff to sue as a pauper, certain of the articles which were claimed, and the learned Judge seems to be of opinion that it made no difference whether a fee was prescribed for the plaint or not. If any part of the subject-matter of the suit was paid into or deposited in Court it ceased to belong to the subject-matter of the suit and became the property of the plaintiff.

In Fatma Bai v. D. R. Umrigar (2), while sitting on the Original Side, I declined, with all due respect, to follow that decision. To this extent I can agree with the learned Judge that, whether a fee is prescribed or not the subject-matter of the suit cannot be taken into consideration in calculating the plaintiff's means. But in my opinion that protection continues during the whole course of the proceedings, so that an application to sue as a pauper in either case cannot be rejected, merely because the opponent pays in or deposits in Court part of the claim. The applicant is not obliged to take out of Court what is deposited or paid in, and cannot, therefore, if he chooses to allow the deposit or payment made in Court to remain there, be said to be possessed of means to pay the Court-fees as if the deposit or payment were actually in his possession. The time when the application is made to institute a suit as a pauper, is the point of time which the Court has to consider when the application comes to be dealt with, and the subject-matter of the suit is in no case at the disposal of the applicant for payment of fees. If, however, at any point of time afterwards it is alleged that the applicant has become possessed of sufficient means to pay the fees, then no doubt when that fact is brought to the notice of the Court, the question of pauperism would be reconsidered, and the party once held to be a pauper might be directed to pay the Court-fees. In this case, therefore, we direct that it is open now to the applicant, through her next friend, to make an application to file a suit as a pauper, and that application must be dealt with on the lines we have now laid down. If no further application is made, the applicant must pay the costs of this application. If the application is filed through her next friend, and if the application is admitted, then the costs will be costs in the suit.

The expression "person aggrieved" in section 75 of the Provincial Insolvency Act means a person who has suffered a legal grievance, that is, a person against whom a decision has been pronounced, which has wrongfully deprived him of something, or wrongfully refused him something, or wrongfully affected his title to something. [p. 228, col. 2.]

Ex parte Sidebotham, In re Sidebotham, (1880) 14 Ch. D. 458; 49 L. J. Bk. 41; 42 L. T. 788; 28 W. R. 715. Ex parte Official Receiver, In re Reed, Bowen and Co., (1887) 19 Q. B. D. 174; 56 L. J. Q. B. 447; 56 L. T. 876; 35 W. R. 860; 4 Morrell 225, relied upon.

Although the Provincial Insolvency Act does not contain any provision for reviewing orders already passed, such power must be implied from the provision contained in section 5 of the Act. [p. 227, col. 2.]

No Court has the power to remove an Official Receiver from his office. But where the appointment of an Official Receiver to take charge of a particular insolvency is concerned, the proviso to r. 11 of the rules framed by the Madras Government under section 79 of the Act allows the party to apply to the Court to set aside the appointment of the Official Receiver and to ask that a Special Receiver may be appointed in his place. [p. 227, col. 2.]

It is of general importance that all insolvencies should be kept within the control of the Official Receiver, unless very exceptional reasons, such as reasons connected with the personality of the Receiver, are put forward to deprive him of that control. [p. 228, col. 1.]

The words "otherwise directs" in section 57 (2) of the Provincial Insolvency Act, refer not only to the point of time when the appointment of a Receiver under section 56 is made, but also to the period subsequent to the appointment. That is to say, the Court may not at the initial stage appoint a Special Receiver, but it may, if good grounds are shown, remove the Official Receiver appointed originally at any time whatever. [p. 229, col. 1.]

Appeal against an order, dated the 27th July 1922, of the District Court, East Tanjore at Negapatam, in Insolvency Petition No. 3 of 1921.

Appeal against an order, dated the 15th August 1922, of the District Court, East Tanjore at Negapatam, in I. A. No. 405 of 1922, in I. P. No. 3 of 1921.

Messrs. T. M. Krishnaswami Iyer and S. Subramania Iyer, for the Appellant.—The District Judge is wrong in reviewing his order appointing the Official Receiver. When once an order of adjudication is made, property vests in the Official Receiver (S. 57). The District Judge has no power to review

it. A power of review is not inherent in a Court but is statutory. It cannot be implied.

The Official Receiver here is an aggrieved person, since by the second order he is removed from office. He has, therefore, a right of appeal under section 75 of the Act. Official Assignee of Madras v. Rama Chandra Iyer (1), Ex parte Sidebotham, In re Sidebotham (2), Ex parte Official Receiver, In re Reed, Bowen and Co. (3). I contend that under the Provincial Insolvency Act and the Rules thereunder, Courts have no power to remove an Official Receiver when an order of appointment is made and property has vested.

Even on the merits, the District Judge is wrong. The reasons assigned are not correct. The appointment of a Special Receiver would diminish the income of the Official Receiver. The properties have been leased. The lands are accessible from Tanjore equally as from Negapatam. An Official Receiver cannot be lightly or easily superseded for imaginary reasons.

Messrs. T. V. Muthukrishna Iyer and T. V. Ramanatha Iyer, for the Respondent.—There is no right of appeal. The Official Receiver is not a person aggrieved within the meaning of section 75 of the Act. A Court has power when it thinks it necessary for special reasons to appoint Special Receiver.

Under section 5, the Insolvency Court has the same powers as the Civil Court under the Civil Procedure Code.

An Official Receiver is as much subject to the orders of Insolvency Court as an ordinary Receiver is subject to the directions of the Civil Court.

Rules 8, 11, 12, framed by the Madras Government nowhere lay down that an Official Receiver cannot be removed and such a prohibition cannot be implied from negative powers under the Act and the Rules. On the merits, the interests of the administration of the insolvent's estate required a Special Receiver in this case and the appointment of Special Receiver, being a matter of discretion, a Court of Appeal will not lightly disturb the discretion of the lower Court.

JUDGMENT.

Spencer, J.—The appellant is the Official Receiver of the Tanjore District. He appeals against the orders of the District Judge of East Tanjore, appointing Special Receiver in I. P. No. 3 of 1921, instead of the Official Receiver, in whom the insolvent's property would ordinarily vest under section 57 of Act V of 1920. It appears that when the adjudication of insolvency was made, the District Judge vested the property in the Official Receiver on the 26th July 1922. The next day, at the instance of the Vakil for some of the insolvents, the District Judge reconsidered his order and substituted "Special Receiver" for "the Official Receiver" in his order. Section 57, clause 2, permits the Court to make such an order for special reasons. The Official Receiver moved the Court to reconsider this second order, but the District Judge declined to do so on the 15th August 1922.

In these appeals a number of points have been raised on either side. It is contended that the Official Receiver is not entitled to appeal under section 75 and that, even if he is so entitled, the Court has given good reasons for appointing a Special Receiver in the present case and that we should not interfere with the District Judge's discretion. On the other hand, the appellant contends that the Court, having passed a final order on the 26th of July, had no power under the Provincial Insolvency Act to review that order; secondly, that the Rules framed under the Madras Provincial Insolvency Act, which have the effect of law, by virtue of section 79, clause 3, give no power to a Court to remove an Official Receiver once appointed (vide r. 8) and lastly, that the reasons given by the District Judge for appointing a Special Receiver are not sufficient reasons for making an exception to the general rule.

On the first point it is clear from section 75 that the Official Receiver is one of the persons who has a right of appeal if he is aggrieved by the order of a Court acting in its Insolvency Jurisdiction. Official Assignee of Madras v. Rama Chandra Iyer

(1) affords an instance where the Official Assignee, who stands in a similar position to the Official Receivers in the Muffasal, was regarded as a person aggrieved and was permitted to appeal. That case proceeded largely on the authority of an English case Ex parte Sidebotham, In re Sidebotham (2). It appears from the notes at page 459 that the question of the removal of the Trustee was one of the matters that came up for consideration, and the learned Judges declared that a Trustee in Bankruptcy would be entitled to appeal from an order of the Court, if he thought it unjust, and that he would be a person 'aggrieved' if a decision had been pronounced which had wrongfully refused him something to which he was entitled. I hold, therefore, that the appellant has a right of appeal.

Although the Provincial Insolvency Act does not contain any provision for reviewing orders already passed, section 5 provides that the Court "shall have the same powers, and shall follow the same procedure as it has and follows in the exercise of Original Civil Jurisdiction." I am, therefore, not prepared to hold that the District Judge acted illegally in altering his order after it had been passed.

Next, the provision in r. 12 that "the Court may remove or discharge any Receiver or interim Receiver other than an Official Receiver" appears to have been so worded in consideration of the fact that, under section 57 of the Act, the power of appointing Official Receivers is vested in the Local Government and, therefore, no Court has the power to remove an Official Receiver from his office. Where the appointment of an Official Receiver to take charge of a particular insolvency is concerned, the proviso to r. 11 allows the party to apply to the Court to set aside the appointment of the Official Receiver and to ask that a Special Receiver may be appointed in his place. Even if that proviso was intended to apply particularly to cases where orders of adjudication have been made by the Official Receiver himself, unless the contrary appears, we may assume that Courts have powers to make such orders from time to time as are necessary for dealing with the insolvent's estate. Under section 16 of the General Clauses

OFFICIAL RECEIVER OF TANJORE V. NATARAJA-SASTRIGAL.

Act, whenever a power to make an appointment is conferred, the authority having such power must be deemed to have power also, to remove any person appointed by it in exercise of that power. I, therefore, hold that the District Judge was legally empowered to set aside his own order appointing the Official Receiver, if there were special reasons for doing so.

The reasons given in the District Judge's order are that it was better in the interest of all parties concerned that a Special Receiver residing in Negapatam should be appointed to deal with the insolvent's property. The Official Receiver was an interim Receiver before the adjudication, and there is nothing to show that any personal reason existed for his being superseded. The property of the insolvents is not situate at Negapatam where the Special Receiver lives, but in a village which is accessible from Tanjore as well as from Negapatam; and during the management of the interim Receiver, he was leasing out the lands and doing such other necessary acts for the management of the insolvent's estate. The remuneration of Official Receivers, who are paid a fixed salary by Government, depends partly upon the receipts obtained by them in administering various estates in their District, and those receipts will be diminished if Special Receivers are appointed superseding the authority of the Official Receiver. The reasons given by the District Judge and those appearing in the affidavits of the creditors are not sufficient, in my opinion, to outweigh the general importance of keeping all insolvencies within the control of the Official Receiver, unless very exceptional reasons, such as reasons connected with the personality of the Receiver, are put forward to deprive him of that control.

The District Judge's order must be vacated and in lieu thereof the Official Receiver will be directed to take charge of the insolvent's estate. The appellant's costs in Civil Miscellaneous Appeal No. 307 of 1922, in this Court will be defrayed out of the insolvent's estate. There will be no order as to costs in Civil Miscellaneous Appeal No. 308 of 1922. First respondent will bear his own costs in Civil Miscellaneous Appeal No. 307 of 1922 in this Court.

Venkatasubba Rao, J.—The first question to be decided is, whether the Official Receiver is entitled to appeal against the orders passed. Is he a person aggrieved under section 75 of the Act? On the 26th July, 1922, an order of adjudication was made and the Official Receiver was appointed Receiver of the property of the insolvents. On the following day, the District Judge varied his order of the 26th, and appointed a Special Receiver thereby rescinding the appointment of the Official Receiver. The latter applied for the setting aside of the order made on the 27th of July and, on the 15th of August the District Judge passed an order refusing to reconsider his decision. The Official Receiver has filed two appeals, one against the order of the 27th of July and the other against that of the 15th of August.

Various cases were cited in the argument bearing on the interpretation of the words "person aggrieved." But I think it is sufficient to refer to two of them. In Ex parte Sidebotham, In re Sidebotham (2) James, L. J., observed that if the Court acted on a report by the Comptroller in Bankruptcy that the trustee had been guilty of a misfeasance, or neglect, by which the estate has sustained a loss which the trustee ought to make good, the trustee would be entitled to appeal from the order of the Court, if he thought it unjust. This observation is, no doubt, obiter but is entitled to great weight. The Lord Justice said, "A person aggrieved" must be a man who has suffered a legal grievance, a man against whom a decision has been pronounced which has wrongfully deprived him of something or wrongfully refused him something, or wrongfully affected his title to something. Lord Esher, M. R., in Ex parte Official Receiver, In re Reed, Bowen & Co. (3) referring to the definition given by James L. J., observed that the words used were "legal grievance" and not "pecuniary grievance" or grievance to person or property," and further added that "a person aggrieved" must be a man against whom a decision has been pronounced which has wrongfully refused him something which he had a right to demand.

I think the Official Receiver suffered a legal grievance and he was 'wrongfully deprived of something." He was removed from office and his application to reconsider the order was refused. He was entitled to say that his appointment should not have been set aside; he had a right to ask that he should be restored to office. He was aggrieved by the orders made against him.

This leads me to the consideration of the second question, can the Court remove an Official Receiver who has been appointed Receiver of an insolvent's estate from his office of such Receiver of that estate? The answer would depend upon the construction of section 57, clause (2).

Section 56, clause (1), and clauses (1) and (2) of section 57 run thus:-

Section 56 clause (1) :—"The Court may, at the time of the order of adjudication, or at any time afterwards, appoint a Receiver for the property of the insolvent, and such property shall thereupon vest in such a Receiver."

Section 57 clause (1) :—"The Local Government may appoint such persons as it thinks fit (to be called) 'Official Receivers' ... under this Act within such local limits as it may prescribe."

Section 57, clause (2) :—"Where any Official Receiver has been so appointed for the local limits of the jurisdiction of any Court having jurisdiction under this Act, he shall be the Receiver for the purpose of every order appointing a Receiver or an interim Receiver, issued by any such Court, unless the Court for special reasons otherwise directs."

It will be seen that an Official Receiver becomes in virtue of his holding that office, a Receiver of the property of the insolvent, if a Receiver for the property is appointed. The Court, however, for special reasons may otherwise direct. In my opinion the words "otherwise direct" refer not only to the point of time, when the appointment of a Receiver under section 56 is made but also to the period subsequent to the appointment. That is to say, the Court may not only at the initial stage appoint a Special Receiver for valid reasons but it may, if good grounds are shown, remove the Official Receiver appointed originally at any time whatever. This construction will avoid an absurdity, viz., that the Official Receiver once appointed can never be removed by the Court, even though he may be guilty of misappropriation or fraud, or is shown to have an interest adverse to that of the creditors of the insolvents. I am, therefore, of the opinion, that under section 57, clause (2), the Court has the power to remove the Official Receiver from his office of Receiver for the property of an insolvent.

It has been argued that r. 12 of the Insolvency Rules negatives this power. I must say that there is considerable force in this argument. If this be the effect of r. 12, I am prepared to hold that it is ultra vires.

It has next been pointed out that rule 11 specifically provides for the setting aside of the appointment of the Official Receiver and for the appointment of a Special Receiver. If this be the right construction, r. 11 would be inconsistent with r. 12. I am inclined to think that the proviso refers only to the case specified in clauses (4) and (5) i.e., to the Official Receiver appointed for the property of the insolvent "in cases where the Official Receiver is empowered to make orders of adjudication." The decision of the question, however, does not depend on a construction of these rules, but I would take this opportunity to suggest that a revision of rr. 11 and 12 may be made.

The third point relates to the merits of the appeal. The Official Receiver was removed on the ground that his head-quarter was at Tanjore that, there was a single Receiver appointed by the Government for the two Districts, the East and West Tanjore and that, therefore, a person in the locality should be preferred. The Government has appointed one Official Receiver for the area comprised within the two Districts, and if the reason given by the District Judge should be held sufficient to appoint a Special Receiver, the reason would exist in every case and the Official Receiver could never be appointed Receiver for any property within the jurisdiction of the District Judge of East Tanjore. I am utterly unable to regard this a special reason under section 57 of the Act.

I, therefore, agree with the order proposed by my learned brother.

PATNA HIGH COURT.

FIRST CIVIL APPEAL, NO. 7 OF 1921.

February 17, 1923.

Present:—Sir Dawson Miller, Kt., Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice Foster.

Raja MAKUND DEB—DEFENDANT

APPELLANT

versus

Sri JAGANNATH JENAMONI—

PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Hindu Law—Adoption—Age of adoption—Putreshti jag ceremony, whether necessary—Parent giving in adoption whether must sit on bedi—Widow, power of, to give in adoption—Motive for adoption—Public policy.

The passage attributed to the Kalika Purana, which lays down that a boy to be adopted must be below five years of age, cannot be relied upon as authentic, and the adoption of a child over five years of age, is permissible under Hindu Law. [p. 235, col. 2.]

Ganga Sahai v. Lekhraj Singh, 9 A. 253; 5 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 604, relied upon.

The putreshti jag ceremony is not essential to the validity of an adoption even amongst the regenerate classes. [p. 236, col. 2.]

Once it is determined that an adoption is otherwise valid, provided the upanayana ceremony, the culminating point of the second birth, has not been performed, although the other initiatory rites, including tonsure, have already taken place in the natural family of the adopted son, the necessity for the putreshti jag ceremony disappears. [p. 237, col. 1.]

It is not necessary for the validity of an adoption that the person giving in adoption should actually sit upon the bedi during the datta homa ceremony. [p. 237, col. 1.]

Under the Hindu Law a widow can give her son in adoption if her husband has during his lifetime given his consent to it. [p. 237, col. 2.]

A mother may give her son in adoption even without her husband's express consent, in cases where such consent cannot be obtained, as where he is dead or has joined a religious order. [p. 237, col. 2.]

The mere fact that an adoptor had mixed motives in making an adoption is not sufficient in law to render the adoption invalid. The presumption is that his motive was the ordinary one which operates in such cases. If in addition there were other motives of a worldly nature which also induced him to do that which he had an absolute right to do, this would not in any way affect the validity of his act. [p. 238, cols. 1 & 2.]

Public policy does not concern itself with the motives which induce a person to exercise his lawful rights without risk of injury to any body. [p. 238, col. 1.]

Appeal from a decision of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Cuttack, dated the 2nd March, 1921.

Messrs. S. C. Mukharji and M. Subha Rao, for the Appellant.

Mr. J. N. Bose, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

Dawson Miller, C. J.—The suit out of which this appeal arises was instituted on the 30th May, 1919, by the respondent Sri Jagannath Jenamoni against the appellant Sri Raja Makund Deb Gajapati Maharaja to obtain a declaration of the respondent's status as the adopted son of the appellant and a further declaration that Jagadananda Deb was not the appellant's adopted son. Jagadananda Deb was also impleaded as a defendant in the suit but he died on the 23rd July, 1920, after filing a written statement but before the case came to trial. In the plaint there was also a prayer for a further declaration that the appellant was the trustee on behalf of the respondent of the sum of Rs. 1,00,000 made over to the appellant by the plaintiff's elder brother the then Raja of Bamra at the time of the adoption, namely, on the 2nd October 1918.

The respondent, who was the plaintiff in the suit, is the third son of the late Raja Sachidananda Tribhuban Deb, Chief of the Feudatory State of Bamra in Orissa. Before his adoption his name was Lal Mohini Mohan Deb.

The appellant, the surviving defendant in the suit, is the Raja of Puri and as such is the Superintendent of the celebrated temple of Jagannath at that place.

The deceased defendant Jagadananda Deb was the younger son of the Zemindar of Bada Khemidi in the District of Ganjam, and popularly known as the Raja of Ganjam.

It is the respondent's case that ever since the year 1905 when he was a child of six years of age negotiations had, from time to time, taken place between his family and the appellant, or those acting on his behalf, with a view to bring about his adoption by the appellant. No definite agreement was for sometime arrived at, and in the year 1914 the negotiations were temporarily allowed to drop. In 1918 after his father's death, the negotiations were renewed with his mother and his eldest brother, the then Raja or Chief of Bamra with the result that after many interviews between the parties or their representatives an agreement in writing dated the 23rd September, 1918, was executed by the appellant, whereby he undertook to take in adoption the respondent and, to perform the datta homa ceremony. During the negotiations the respondent's brother, as the head of his family, had insisted upon certain conditions being agreed to, before he would consent to the adoption. These related mainly to the completion of the education of the respondent, then 18 years of age, and provisions for his separate residence and, freedom of restraint over his movements, and these terms were incorporated in the agreement signed by the appellant. The Raja of Bamra had also insisted that the proposed adoption should be notified to the Local Government and its consent obtained. The Local Government was consequently informed of the proposed adoption and, their consent thereto was solicited and, on the 16th July, 1918, the Government intimated that they had no objection to the proposed adoption. A further question arose with regard to a settlement, which the Raja of Bamra had promised to make at the time of the adoption. It appears that a sum of Rs. 80,000 in currency notes had been set aside by the respondent's late father as his younger son's portion of the estate but no formal settlement of this sum appears to have been made. There was a further sum of Rs. 20,000 in War Bonds which had been purchased in the respondent's name by his brother the then Raja of Bamra. The Raja of Bamra wished to settle this money for the benefit of his brother making the appellant the trustee. The appellant, on the other hand, wished to have a free hand in the disposal of the money as he thought fit. No definite agreement appears to have been come to as to the settlement of this money, but it was arranged that the matter should be left in the hands of Babu Dhanapati Bannerji, the retained Pleader of the Puri Rajah, who had taken a prominent part throughout in the negotiations. Dhanapati Bannerji would appear to have felt some embarrassment in settling this matter of difference between his client and the Bamra family and, up to the time of the adoption nothing definite had been settled by him or agreed to between the parties concerned, and the fund, forming one lakh of rupees, was in fact handed over to the appellant at the time of adoption. The Raja of Bamra undoubtedly was under the impression that the money was to form a trust fund, in the hands of the Raja of Puri, as trustee, for the benefit of his brother and, this impression finds support from the fact that in two telegrams dated the 25th and 27th September sent by Dhanapati Bannerji from Puri to the Private Secretary of the Raja of Bamra, the Bamra family was urged to come immediately to Puri for the celebration of the ceremony as all the terms had been assented to unconditionally. In the agreement of the 23rd September, 1918, the only mention of this question of a settlement is that which appears in clause 1 of the agreed terms which provides: "That I, Shri Raja Makund Deb, taking my seat on the datta homa beili shall take the amount, settled with the Pleader Babu Dhanapati Bandopadhyaya, from him at the time of datta homa and at the same time shall take in adoption Lal Mohini Mohan Deb from your respected Rajmata and shall duly perform the datta homa."

One of the issues in dispute between the parties at the trial was whether the appellant was a trustee on behalf of the respondent in respect of this fund.

With regard to this issue, the learned Additional Subordinate Judge found that the Rs. 80,000 which were paid in currency notes, at the time of the adoption, to the appellant were transferred to him absolutely in consideration of the adoption without any conditions being attached and, further, that there could be no trust regarding the War Bonds amounting to Rs. 20,000 as they stood in the respondent's name and, Rs. 5,000 thereof had been paid to Dhanapati Babu as his remuneration under the directions of the Puri Raja. There is no longer any dispute upon this issue as the respondent has not challenged the propriety of the Judge's finding in this respect. The matter is only important in so far as it has any bearing upon the question raised by the appellant and argued before us in this appeal, to the effect that the adoption is invalid by reason of the appellant having been induced to consent thereto by a bribe. In order to complete the story upon this part of the case, in so far as it appears from the evidence, it will be convenient to state here that on the 2nd October, 1918, the date when the adoption took place, a post-script was added to the deed of agreement of the 23rd September and signed by the appellant to the following effect:-

"Be it further stated that I received the money to my satisfaction from Dhana-pati Babu as agreed upon and I sat on the dutta homa bedi. Be it further stated that I adopted the son for the perpetuation of my family, for offering pinda and water to my ancestors, for the management of the Seba of Jagannath Mahaprava and for the preservation of the family prestige."

The story of the negotiations, and the agreement finally come to, and the journey of the respondent with his brother and his mother, the Rajmata, together with a numerous retinue to Puri, and how they were received there with great pomp and ceremony, together with the details of the adoption ceremony which took place at the appellant's house on the following day before a large gathering and the subsequent life of the respondent at Puri are set out at length in the plaint. A vast mass of evidence, both oral and documentary, was adduced at the trial in support of the case pleaded, but the most remarkable feature of this litigation is that the appellant, by his written statement, pleads that the whole story is a pure invention from beginning to end. He denies that he ever entered into any negotiations with the Raja of Bamra, or that any body acted on his behalf or with his authority, and he denies all knowledge of the matters alleged in the plaint. He repudiates his signature to the various documents which he is alleged to have signed. He denies that any adoption ceremony took place or that any money was received by him on that occasion. He further pleads that, at some previous date not definitely stated, but which appears from the written statement of the deceased defendant to have been the 2nd March 1916, in the presence of a select company he took in adoption the second defendant who was then about one year old and that he has never adopted anybody else. In addition he pleads that the respondent's mother had no authority from her deceased husband to give her son in adoption and that his upanayana ceremony had already been performed before the date of the alleged adoption, a fact which amongst the twice-born classes, to which the parties in this case belong, would render the adoption void and inoperative. The written statement of the deceased defendant, Jagannanda Deb, was not printed in the record before us but we allowed a copy of it to be added to the file. That defendant, besides traversing the allegations in the plaint, pleaded that he was adopted by the Raja of Puri on the 2nd March 1916. He further pleads that even if a form of adoption was gone through as alleged by the respondent it is invalid for the following reasons: (1) because of the previous adoption of himself; (2) because of the age of the respondent who had attained majority and was incapable of being given in adoption, (3) because the respondent's upanayana ceremony had already been performed, (4) because of the want of consent of the respondent's natural father, and, (5) because the appellant was induced by a bribe of a lakh of rupees to receive the respondent in adoption.

Six issues were framed for determination at the trial:-

(1) Whether the first defendant executed the agreement of the 23rd September, 1918, and is it valid and binding?

(2) Whether the plaintiff was adopted by the first defendant on the 2nd October, 1918, as alleged by the plaintiff: and, is the adoption valid and legal and (sic) against public policy?

(2) (a) Is the defendant estopped from questioning the validity of plaintiff's adoption on the ground of deceased defendant's alleged adoption, now that, that defendant died (added on the 24th July 1920)?

(3) Whether the second defendant was adopted on the 2nd March, 1916, and if so, is the adoption valid?

(4) Whether defendant No. 1 was paid one lac of rupees as alleged by the plaintiff? Is he a trustee on behalf of the plaintiff in respect of the same?

(5) To what relief, if any, is the plaintiff entitled?

All these issues except the second part of No. 4 were found in favour of the respondent and a decree was passed declaring that the respondent, and not the deceased defendant, was duly adopted by the appellant and consequently, the respondent was entitled to all the right and privileges of an adopted son. The prayer for the declaration regarding the money was refused.

From this decision the Raja of Puri has appealed. The story told by the respondent was supported by numerous witnesses and much documentary evidence. The learned Judge found that the plaintiff's case in this respect was amply proved and that the evidence in support of the appellant's story was thoroughly unreliable. So clear and overwhelming is the evidence put forward on behalf of the respondent, as to the fact of an adoption ceremony having taken place, that the learned Counsel for the appellant has not asked us to question the finding of the learned Additional Subordinate Judge upon this point, nor did he contend that the story of a previous adoption could be supported. He has, however, questioned the validity of the adoption upon certain legal grounds. In the first place he contends that the age of the respondent, namely, 18 years, at the date of adoption renders the ceremony invalid according to Hindu Law amongst families of the twice-born classes, secondly, he contends that certain ceremonies essential to the validity of adoption under the duttaka form were not complied with, thirdly, he objects that the respondent's mother had no authority from her deceased husband to give her son in adoption and that this want of capacity on her part is fatal to the validity of the ceremony. The fourth and last point taken is that the passing of money as a consideration for the adoption is forbidden by Hindu Law and contrary to public policy and renders the transaction void.

No specific issue was raised at the trial as to any of these points, although, the second issue may be regarded as wide enough to cover them. It further appears that none of the points was raised in the written statement of the appellant except that dealing with the want of capacity of the Rajmata to give her son in adoption. In the written statement of the deceased defendant the points relating to the age of the respondent and the passing of a bribe as well as the capacity of the Rajmata are, however, taken. It is further to be noticed that the learned Additional Subordinate Judge in dealing with the second issue, which he does at great length, nowhere mentions any of the points now taken before us in appeal, except in so far as he deals with the evidence of the fact of adoption and, I can only conclude that they were not urged before him at the trial, nor has it been suggested in argument before us that he omitted to deal with any point that he was asked to decide. As these contentions, for the most part, raise questions of law requiring no further evidence and as they affect the status of the respondent, we consented to hear the argument of the learned Counsel for the appellant.

In support of the first point reliance is placed upon a passage in the Kalika Purana quoted with approval by the author of the Duttaka Mimansa (section 4, verse 22). The authority of the Kalika Purana is unquestionable and the treatise known as the Duttaka Mimansa of Nanda Pandit is also regarded both in Bengal and amongst the followers of the Benares School of Hindu Law as of great authority. It may be stated here that the parties belong to the Kshatriya caste and are governed by the Benares or Mitakshara School of Hindu Law. If the quotation from the Kalika Purana, as it appears in the Duttaka Mimansa, is to be accepted as authentic and binding, there is much to be said for the appellant's contention. In Setlur's translation of the Duttaka Mimansa the passage is as follows:—

"22. Another special rule is propounded in the Kalika Purana; son given, and the rest though sprung from the seed of another, yet being duly initiated under his own family name, become sons. O Lord of the earth, a son having been initiated under the family name of his father, unto the ceremony of tonsure inclusive, does not become the son of another man (anyatas). The ceremony of tonsure and other rites (chudaya) of initiation, being indeed performed under his own family name, sons given, and the rest may be considered as issue: else, they are termed slaves. After their fifth year, O King, sons given and the rest are not sons. (But having taken a boy five years old, the adopter should first perform the sacrifice for male issue. But the son of twice married woman, immediately on being born, he should duly take as a son. Having performed positively (vai) for such, immediately on being born, the burnt sacrifice for the son of a twice married woman, the man should complete every initiatory rite, the ceremony for a male borne (jatakarma) and the rest. The burnt sacrifice for the son of a twice married woman, being completed, from these (tatas) a son of that description, is filially related."

The exact meaning of this passage is somewhat obscure, and the rest of the section consisting in all of 79 verses is given up to its elucidation. The effect of the passage as explained by the author of the Dattaka Mimansa appears to be that, a son whose tonsure ceremony has been performed in the family of his natural father cannot validly be adopted as a son given, and, as this ceremony ought to be performed (according to the author) not later than the fifth year, no boy above that age is capable of being so adopted.

Much controversy has raged round this passage and much ingenuity has been expended in endeavouring to explain away a rule which appears to be at variance with actual practice. In the earliest Smritis there is no such prohibition. The only restriction imposed by Manu is that the adopted son should belong to the same class or caste as his adoptive father. "He whom his father, or mother with her husband's assent gives to another as his son, provided that the donee have no issue if the boy be of the same class and affectionately disposed, is considered as a son given, the gift being confirmed by pouring water" (Manu Chapter IX, 168, Jones' translation; see also Mitakshara Chapter I, section XI, verse 9). As Dr. Gour has pointed out in a recent work, (The Hindu Code, page 337) "In ancient times neither age nor marriage was a bar to adoption and an instance is frequently cited of the adoption of Sunah Sepha by Vishwamitra in the Vedic age. The restrictions consequent on age and marriage are unquestionably innovations of a later age." In this respect there is no reason to suppose that the learned author is not accurate. Apart from the passage quoted from the Kalika Purana and adopted by the Dattaka Mimansa and a few other treatises, there is no ancient authority for the proposition that a child over five years of age cannot be validly adopted in the Dattaka form. The authenticity of the passage in question was questioned even before the date of the Dattaka Mimansa itself, if we accept the view that the Dattaka Chandrika, a work of equal authority, is of earlier date. The Dattaka Chandrika quotes the disputed passage and adds "As for what they quote thus from the Puranas, that is unauthentic" (Dattaka Chandrika section 2 verse 25). It then proceeds to state that, "were it even authentic, the interpretations given by some, that one initiated in ceremonies down to that of tonsure under the family name of the natural father bears no filial relation to the adopter, but such relation obtains where the ceremonies commencing with that of tonsure are performed by the adopter only, and if a child whose tonsure has been completed by the natural father or one past five years of age be adopted, in that case the filial relation does not accrue, are inaccurate." Alternative interpretations are then given and, in verse 30 the reference to the fifth year is said to apply only to Brahmins seeking the fruit of holiness resulting from a study of the Vedas. The translator of these two commentaries, Mr. Setlur, points out that the text of the Kalika Purana on which the limitation as to age of the adopted son is based, has been held to be spurious by the author of the Dattaka Chandrika and, that all the High Courts and many of the modern text writers are agreed in holding that the Hindu Law imposed no restrictions as to age and, whatever be the age of the adopted son, it is now settled that his adoption is valid if made before upanayana, if he belongs to any of the regenerate classes, and before marriage if he belongs to the Sudra caste. (See Setlur's Complete Collection of Hindu Law Books on Inheritance, page 388). Nilakantha the author of the Vyahara Mayukha (Chapter IV, section 5, paragraph 20) points out that not much reliance is to be placed on the disputed passage as it is not found in two or three copies of the Kalika Purana. Sir Thomas Strange says:—"The affiliation of one 'whose coronal locks have not been reduced to the form of his patriarchal tribe' is constantly inculcated. The age for this operation is the second or third year after birth, but it may be extended to the eighth which with Brahmins is the general period of the investiture, except for such as are destined for the priesthood upon whom it is performed at five. The stipulation, therefore, of five years as the extreme age for adoption may have reference to Brahmins of this description." (Hindu Law, Volume I, page 89) Rai Sahib Vishvanath Narayan Mandlik, a Sanskrit scholar of repute, in his work on the Mayukha (page 471) says "As regards age there is no restriction whatever. The only text restricting age is the one said to be from the Kalika Purana." He then refers to the authorities who have disputed the genuineness of the passage including Krishna Bhatta, who regards the passage as spurious, but even assuming it to be genuine explains it as referring to a son to be adopted by a King as his successor. W. H. Macnaughten, a recognised authority, says the authenticity of the passage is doubtful (Hindu Law, page 74). None of the modern text writers so far as my research goes, place any reliance on the five years limit and some of them go so far as to say that, there is no valid authority for limiting the age at all. The late Shastri Golap Chandra Sarkar in his Tagore Law Lectures strongly advocates this view and, contends that even the performance of the upanayana ceremony in the family of the natural father is no bar to a subsequent adoption. "It should, however, be observed" says the learned author "that if you leave aside the passage in the Kalika Purana the authenticity of which is doubted, then there is no authority in Hindu Law for the proposition that any of the initiatory ceremonies must be performed in the adopter's family in order to cause filial relation, in other words, that if all or any of the initiatory rites for a person have been performed in the family of his birth, he becomes incapable of being adopted into any other family. The passage of Vasishtha relied upon by the author of the Dattaka-Chandrika does not lay down the rule that the upanayana ceremony must be performed in the adopter's family, nor can such a rule be fairly inferred from it. Nor is there any passage of law declaring that in the case of Sudras marriage is a bar to adoption" (Sarkar's Hindu Law of Adoption, Second Edition, page 361).

The early case-law on the subject affords little or no guidance for the decision of the present case, but in 1887 Mr. Justice Mahmood of the Allahabad High Court in a learned and elaborate judgment, in which Straight, J., concurred, reviewed the authorities at great length and arrived at the conclusion that the disputed passage in the Kalika Purana could not be relied upon as authentic and that the upanayana ceremony, which, in the case of Kshatriyas, may be performed as late as the 22nd year was the limit of age for a valid adoption (See Ganga Sahai v. Lekhraj Singh (1). I see no reason to differ from the decision of the Allahabad High Court arrived at after careful consideration in so far as it decided that the 'passage attributed to the Kalika Purana cannot be relied upon as authentic and that the adoption of a child over 5 years of age is permissible. The question whether, after the upanayana ceremony has been performed, a person belonging to the Kshatriya caste can be adopted does not arise in the present case as it is now admitted that the respondent's upanayana ceremony had not been performed at the date of his adoption. In my opinion the adoption of the respondent is not invalidated by reason of his age.

The second point urged before us raises the question whether the adoption ceremony was performed according to the correct ritual. The omissions urged were (1) that the Rajmata did not sit upon the bedi at the time when the dutta homa was performed (2) that the charu homa was not performed, (3) that the sankalpa was not performed, and, (4) that the putreshti jag ceremony was not performed, and that this was essential as the respondent's tonsure ceremony had already taken place in the family of his natural parents. With regard to each of these points except the last no difficulty presents itself as there was evidence on the record from which a decision can be come to. With regard to the question of the putreshti jag ceremony there is no direct evidence from which it can be said whether that particular ceremony was performed or not. No point was raised as to this either in the pleadings or issues and no question was asked about it in cross-examination, although the evidence of Raj Guru Raghu Nath Brahma, the purohit of the Puri Raja, whose forefathers were Raj Gurus before him and who took the leading part in the performance of the ceremony, stated that the kulachar (family customs) of the Puri Raja were performed on the adoption. Moreover the point was not taken before the Trial Court; nor was it raised amongst the 75 grounds of appeal set out in the appellant's memorandum of appeal. For these reasons I consider that we should not allow this question to be argued before us now, but in case this appeal should go further I propose to state shortly my opinion on the assumption that this particular ceremony was not in fact performed. The foundation upon which its performance is claimed as a necessary adjunct to a valid adoption is the disputed passage in the Kalika Purana already referred to. The view that it was necessary in cases where the tonsure ceremony had already been performed, appears to be based upon the explanation of the passage given in verses 49 and 52 of section 4 of the Dattaka Mimamsa, which has been interpreted by some authorities as meaning that adoption even after tonsure may be validated by the performance of the putreshti jag, or sacrifice for male issue, but not otherwise. If however the text upon which it is founded is not authentic the explanation can have no greater authority. The only case quoted in support of the appellant's contention on this point is Luchmun Lall v. Mohun Lall (2) in which Dwarka Nath Mitter, J., is reported to have said that the performance of the putreshti jag is essential to the validity of an adoption in the Dattaka form amongst the three superior classes. In the later case of Katki v. Lakpati Pujari (3) the Calcutta High Court expressed the view that the words putreshti jag in the former judgment were inadvertently used for datta homa, and on this assumption refused to follow it in the case of an adoption of a son belonging to the same gotra as his adopted father. Again in this Court in the case of Sheo Lotan Rai

(1) 9 A. 253; 5 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 604.

MAKUND DEB v. JAGANNATH JENAMONI.

v. Bhirgun Rat (4) it was held that the putreshti jag ceremony was a matter of form and not essential to an adoption. It is true that in that case the parties belonged to the same gotra, and, in so far as the view expressed applies to parties belonging to different gotras, it was obiter. In Asita Mohan Ghose v. Nerode Mohan Ghose (5) the Calcutta High Court also held that the putreshti jag was not an essential element in the ceremony of adoption, but this was in the case of Sudras. Apart from the dictum attributed to Dwarkanath Mitter, J., in Luchmun Lall v. Mohun Lall (2) which has been characterised as a lapsus linguae in a later case in the same High Court, there is no direct authority in the appellant's favour on this point. Although the question is not free from doubt. I should be prepared to hold if necessary that the ceremony is not essential to the validity of an adoption even amongst the regenerate classes. In this connection I would refer to the view of Sir Thomas Strange who in dealing with the mode and form of adoption says: "There must be gift and acceptance, manifested by some overt act. Beyond this, legally speaking, it does not appear that anything is absolutely necessary... And even with regard to the sacrifice of fire, important as it may be deemed, in a spiritual point of view, it is so with regard to the Brahmin only; according to a constant distinction, in the texts and glosses upon matters, of ritual observance, between those who keep consecrated the holy fire, and those who do not keep such fires, i.e., between Brahmins and other classes." He then refers to the decision of Sir John Anstruther, C. J., in the case of the Raja of Nolkissen and continues: "And, even with regard to Brahmins, admitting their conception in favour of its spiritual benefit, it by no means follows that it is essential to the efficacy of the right for civil purposes, but the contrary is to be inferred and the conclusion is, that its validity, for these consists generally in the consent of the necessary parties, the adopter having at the time no male issue, and the child to be received being within the legal age. and not being either an only or the eldest son of the giver; the prescribed ceremonies not being essential. Not that an unlawful adoption is to be maintained; but that a lawful one, actually made, is not to be set aside for any informality that may have attended its solemnization." (Hindu Law Volume I, page 95).

Indeed, I think, it may be said that once it is determined that an adoption is valid provided the upanayana ceremony, the culminating point of the second birth, has not been performed, although the other initiatory rites, including tonsure, have already taken place in the natural family of the adopted son, the necessity for the putreshthi jag ceremony disappears. The necessity for its performance appears to be founded upon an ingenious interpretation of the questionable passage in the Kalika Purana as a means of explaining away that which did not commend itself as acceptable. It is significant also that in a case arising in one of the very centres of Hindu religious worship no one has suggested until the case was argued in appeal that the omission of the putreshthi jag was a bar to the validity of the adoption. It was left to the ingenuity of Counsel to raise the point for the first time in argument before us, although it finds no place amongst the various grounds of appeal formally taken.

With regard to the other matters arising under the second question for decision, they do not appear to me to present any difficulty. That the Rajmata did not sit upon the bedi when the datta homa was performed is admitted. She was a few feet away behind the pardha but in a position to hear and see what was going on. The adan prodan or giving and taking, which is the most essential part of the ceremony and, the sankalpa or vows were carried out behind the pardah, and in these she took a leading part. The respondent and the appellant having subsequently left the pardah hand in hand and taken their seats upon the bedi, the datta homa was performed by the Brahmans who officiated, the bedi being in the quadrangle where the guests were seated. No authority has been cited to us to support the view that the giver should actually sit upon the bedi during the datta homa ceremony.

Being a pardanashin lady of high estate it is hardly likely that the Rajmata would appear in public before so large an assembly of strangers and there is no reason based on principle or authority why it should be essential for her to do so. Again it has been left to the ingenuity of Counsel to suggest this as a defect in the ceremony.

The evidence as to the sankalpa was discussed by the learned Judge of the Trial Court, but the only question raised in this connection was the credibility of the witnesses and he accepted their evidence. The evidence was that of those best qualified to speak of it as it was that of the persons who took part in the ceremony. Their evidence was corroborated by other witnesses who were near enough to hear what was going on and the appellant was not called to contradict them. I can see no reason for differing from the finding of the learned Judge.

As to the charu homa no special point appears to have been made of this at the trial, but one of the witnesses Mahant Gadadhar Ramanuj Das, a guest at the ceremony, states that he saw ghee, charu and twigs passed into the sacred fire. Other witnesses speak in general terms of the performance of the datta homa. The officiating priest Raghunath Brahma, who was cross-examined at great length as to the datta homa, also speaks to the offering, of samid (firewood), ghee and chura. There can be no doubt that these ceremonies were duly performed and I so find.

The third point can be disposed of shortly. It is admitted that a widow can give her son in adoption if her husband during his life time has consented. In my opinion there is evidence sufficient to establish such consent. Further it appears to be well settled that a mother may give her son in adoption even without her husband's express consent in cases where such consent cannot be obtained, as where he is dead or has joined a religious order. The text of Manu has already been quoted in an earlier part of this judgment. In Colebrook's translation the words "with her husband's assent" do not appear. Vijnaneswara's comment is as follows: "He who is given by his mother with her husband's consent while her husband is absent or incapable though present, or without his assent after her husband's decease, or who is given by his father, or by both, being of the same class with the person to whom he is given becomes his given son (dattaka). Mitakshara Chapter I, section XI, verse 9).

Sir, Thomas Strange says "Of her own mere authority the mother cannot, in general, give her son to be adopted, any more than she can adopt, her husband living, unless he has emigrated, or entered into a religious order. But his assent may be presumed; and, after his death, she does not want it, a widow having this power, and a wife, also, if the distress be urgent." (Hindu Law Volume 1, pages 81 and 82). The Dattaka Mimansa and the Dattaka Chandrika both recognise the right of a widow to give her son in adoption on account of the impossibility of obtaining her husband's consent. (Dattaka Mimansa IV, 12; Dattaka Chandrika I, 31). The case-law is all to the same effect and no authority has been quoted in support of the contrary view. This question must be determined against the appellant.

The fourth and last point viz., that the adoption was induced by a bribe is one which is not pleaded by the appellant and it is difficult to see how he can be heard to urge it. But even, were the plea now permissible, the mere fact that the appellant had mixed motives for the adoption would not be sufficient in law to render it invalid. The appellant had a right to adopt a son and no question of fraud or coercion arises. It also appears from the appellant's own statement in the post-script to the agreement of the 23rd September 1918 that, his object in making the adoption was the perpetuation of his family and other sufficient reason. It is true that in the case of adoption by a widow a corrupt motive has in one case at least been held to be contrary to the Shastras [Sitaram Pandit v. Harihar Pandit (6).] That was not a case where the adoption was called in question, but one where the point arose whether the payment of a bribe to a Hindu widow as an inducement to her to adopt a son to her deceased husband could be regarded as a valid consideration for a subsequent transfer by the adopted son of a portion of the estate of his deceased adoptive father. In the same High Court in an earlier case, it was held that the receipt of money by a widow as an inducement to adopt a son was not sufficient to rebut the presumption that, she also made the adoption from motives of duty. The fact that her motives were of a mixed character did not render the adoption invalid [Mahableshvar Fondba v. Durgabai (7).] In a later case in the same Court it was held by the majority of the Full Bench that in the Bombay Presidency a widow having a power to adopt and a religious benefit being caused to her deceased husband by the adoption, any discussion of her motives in making the adoption was irrelevant. Ramchandra v. Mulji Nanabhai (8).

This appears to be in accordance with the observations of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Vellanki Venkata Krishna Rao v. Venkata Rama Lakshmi (9) where it was said "Their Lordships think it would be very dangerous to introduce into... these cases of adoption nice questions as to the particular motives operating on the mind of the widow." In the present case the appellant's right to adopt is not disputed. It must be presumed that his motive was the ordinary one which operates in such cases and this is what he himself has said. If in addition there were other motives of a worldly nature which also induced him to do that which he had an absolute right to do, I can see no reason why, where the rights of no other person are infringed, this should in any way affect the validity of his act. One ground upon which the appellant's argument was based was that of public policy, but public policy does not concern itself with the motives which induce a person to exercise his lawful rights without risk of injury to society.

Before concluding this judgment two further matters should be mentioned: The learned Counsel for the appellant wished to contend that the appellant was mentally incapable of understanding the effect of his actions, and that the adoption was invalid on that account. This point was not taken in the written statement and was not raised in the issues. Nor was there any evidence which would support the contention. The evidence at the most shows that he was childish and perhaps eccentric and we refused to permit the question to be raised in appeal.

Further, the learned Counsel for the appellant after completing his argument in opening the case and after the reply on behalf of the respondent, in replying to the whole case wished to raise the point that there was no evidence that the upanayana ceremony had been performed as a part of the ceremony of adoption and that this was in itself sufficient to invalidate the adoption ceremony. As this question had nowhere been raised and had not even been put before us in the opening of the learned Counsel for the appellant we refused to hear him upon this point at that stage of the case.

In my opinion this appeal fails and should be dismissed with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XLI, r. 27—Appeal—Additional evidence.

Petitioner failed to adduce evidence on a particular issue in the Trial Court, on the assurance of the opposite party that that issue would not be pressed. On appeal the High Court allowed the opposite party to address arguments on that issue:

Held, that the High Court had power, under the circumstances, to allow the petitioner to produce additional evidence on that particular issue under O. XLI, r. 27, of the Civil Procedure Code. [p. 241, col. 2.]

ORDER.—This is an application on behalf of the plaintiff for permission to produce additional evidence. The plaintiff desires to examine Rai Bahadur Surja Prasad, Babu Anirudh Prasad, Rai Sahib Nilmoney Dey and Maulvi Abdul Salam and, he also asks for permission to further cross-examine the respondent Maharani Nawlakhbati.

The circumstances are somewhat peculiar. The suit is a suit for a declaration that by virtue of a deed of surrender dated the 18th December, 1918, executed by the widows of Maharaja Sir Harballav Narayan Singh, the plaintiff's father and, the defendant second party became entitled to immediate possession of all the properties left by Maharaja Sir Harballav Narayan Singh Bahadur and, for possession of the properties appertaining to the estate of Maharaja Sir Harballav Narayan Singh. Maharaja Sir Harballav Narayan Singh died on the 1st April, 1907, leaving behind him two widows, Maharani Tarabutti since deceased, and the defendant Maharani, Nowlakhbutty, a daughter, Padmabutti, since deceased, and two grandsons, being the sons of the daughter, Gobind Singh, since deceased, and the defendant second party, Rudra Protap Singh. The plaintiff is the son of Gobind Singh, and he alleges in his plaint that, the widows of Maharaja Sir Harballav Narayan Singh on the 18th December, 1918, executed a deed of surrender, by virtue of which his father Gobind Singh and the defendant second party became entitled to succeed to the estate left by Maharaja Sir Harballav Narayan Singh. The defendant second party is not supporting the case of the plaintiff, and he contends, in his written statement, that the Ranis were wholly incompetent to execute the deed of surrender and that the deed did not operate to vest the estate of Sir Harballav Narayan Singh in the plaintiff's father and in him. He has also in his written statement raised a question whether there was an intelligent execution of the deed of surrender by the widows of the late Maharaja. Maharani Nowlakhbutty, the surviving widow of the late Maharaja also contests the plaintiff's suit, and makes the following allegation in paragraphs 6 and 6A of her written statement.

"6. That the allegations made in paragraphs 7 and 8 of the plaint are not wholly correct. In the year 1916 the Maharanis expressed their desire to the Collector of Bhagalpur of relinquishing their (widows') estate in favour of the elder grandson Rao Bahadur Gobind Singh but the Collector of Bhagalpur informed them that they could not relinquish in favour of one of their grandsons. After that the Maharanis filed a petition that they should be permitted by the Court of Wards to surrender their life-interests in favour of both the grandsons in equal shares, but the Hon'ble Board of Revenue disallowed the prayer of the Maharanis and the Maharanis were informed of the above order of the Hon'ble Board of Revenue, but in spite of that the Maharanis are alleged to have executed a deed of relinquishment in favour of both the grandsons."

"6 (a). That the defendant No. 2 of whom the Maharanis were very fond, was ordered by the Government to leave the district owing to his suspected complicity in the murder of the late Maharaja Bahadur. The plaintiff's father represented to the Maharanis that it was necessary to have a deed executed by them, so that the Government might be induced to allow the defendant No. 2 to return to Bhagalpur district and the Maharanis on that misrepresentation without any proper and independent advice, signed the alleged deed of surrender without properly understanding its effect. This defendant submits that in the circumstances the deed is legally invalid and inoperative."

On the pleadings of the parties the Court framed certain issues for trial and one of the issues framed by the Court, namely, Issue No. 3 is as follows:—

"Whether the deed of surrender dated the 18th of December, 1918, was executed by the Maharanis, widows of Sir Harballav Narayan Singh Bahadur, under misrepresentation without getting any independent advice and without knowing or understanding its contents? Is it legally valid or operative?"

This was the main issue of fact which the Court had to try, but it appears that during the examination of Maharani Nowlakhbatty the Court of Wards, who was then in-charge of the estate left by Sir Harballav Narayan

Singh Bahadur, intimated to the Court that it will not press Issue No. 3. It ought to be mentioned here that Maharani Nowlakhbatty was examined as a witness on behalf of defendant No. 2 and in this litigation the Manager of the Court of Wards appeared in the record as the guardian of defendant No. 1. The case was opened on the 10th of May, 1922, and from the 10th of May, 1922, up to the 1st of June, 1922, it was understood by everybody that Issue No. 3 would not be pressed by the Court of Wards on behalf of Maharani Nowlakhbatty. But that issue was also raised at the instance of the defendant second party, and it appears that some evidence on that issue has been adduced both by the plaintiff and by the defendant second party. This was the position up to the 1st June, 1922. On the 31st of May, 1922, after the close of the evidence and when the plaintiff's Vakil was actually arguing the case, the Government Pleader put in a petition with a copy of the order from the Board of Revenue intimating that Maharani Nowlakhbatty was no longer a ward under the Court of Wards as the Court of Wards had released the estate in favour of Maharani Nowlakhbatty. The Government Pleader stated that he had no authority to represent the Maharani any further in the suit. On the 1st of June, 1922, Maharani Nowlakhbatty appeared through another Pleader and filed a petition praying that the written statement filed by the defendant No. 2 may be considered as her written statement and praying further that she should be allowed to press Issue No. 3. The Court heard the arguments and expressed the view that to allow the Maharani to press Issue No. 3 would be to prejudice the plaintiff. In the result he declined to accede to the prayer of defendant No. 1.

In my opinion, the Court should not have rejected the petition of defendant No. 1. As a ward of the Court of Wards, she was completely bound by the act of her guardian; but the moment her disability ceased, she was entitled to put her own case before the Court. That case was raised in the written statement filed on her behalf by the Court of Wards, and the Court could not deny her the right to put forward that case before the Court. The question of prejudice was easy of solution for all that the Court had to do was to adjourn the hearing of the suit, so as to enable the plaintiff to adduce evidence to meet the case of the defendant. In this Court the question has been argued, whether defendant No. 1 should be allowed to press Issue No. 3. We have taken the view that she should be allowed to press that issue, and the learned Government Advocate has argued before us that to allow her to do so would be to prejudice him. Mr. K. B. Dutt on behalf of the respondent argues before us that Issue No. 3 was there in the record and that the plaintiff has already adduced evidence on that issue. Now, it seems to me that Issue No. 3 could be raised only by defendant No. 1 and not by defendant No. 2; and although the plaintiff has given some sort of evidence on that issue, I am not prepared to hold that he should not be allowed to adduce further evidence on that issue, since this issue has, by subsequent events, become a very important issue in the case. The learned Government Advocate appearing for the plaintiff contends that defendant No. 1 should not be allowed to press Issue No. 3, and that we should not go into that issue at all, since it was not open to defendant No. 2 to raise that issue. On the hypothesis that the deed of surrender was not intelligently executed by the Maharanis, and that it did not operate so as to vest the estate in the plaintiff's father and in defendant No. 2, defendant No. 2 is a necessary party to the suit only in so far as he has not joined the plaintiff in bringing the suit. In other words, defendant No. 2 is only a pro forma party, and, on his own case, he has no interest in the estate, either vested or contingent, so as to entitle him to raise Issue No. 3. I think the learned Government Advocate is right in his contention that it is not open to defendant No. 2 to raise Issue No. 3; but I also think that we would not be doing complete justice between the parties, if we denied defendant No. 1 the right to press Issue No. 3 before us. The learned Government Advocate then contends that we should allow him an opportunity to examine the witnesses mentioned in the petition, as they are material witnesses on Issue No. 3. Mr. K. B. Dutt opposes the application, and he contends before us that we could not accede to the plaintiff's application without violating the terms of O. XLI, r. 27. There is force in Mr. Dutt's arguments, but it seems to me that we could not allow defendant No. 1 to re-open Issue No. 3 without giving an opportunity to the plaintiff to meet her case. Had the learned Subordinate Judge allowed the application of defendant No. 1, it would have been his clear duty to allow the plaintiff to produce such evidence as he thought necessary to meet the case of defendant No. 1. It must be remembered that the evidence which would enable defendant No. 1 to press her case is already in the record, as it has all been produced at the instance of defendant No. 2; but the plaintiff did not pay any serious attention to this issue, as he took the view (rightly, in my opinion) that it was not open to defendant No. 2 to press that issue. I think that we have jurisdiction to allow additional evidence to be produced under paragraph (a) of O. XLI, r. 27 (1); but it must be distinctly understood that such additional evidence must be only on Issue No. 3, and on no other issue.

We allow the application, and we direct that a commission do issue to Mr. Sri Narayan Sahay, Barrister-at-law, and an Advocate of this Court, for the examination of Maharani Nowlakhbutty, returnable to this Court within two weeks from the date hereof. The office will forthwith make over to Mr. Sahay a copy of the order together with a copy of the paper-book. The office will fix a day for the further hearing of this appeal, when we shall proceed to record the evidence of the witnesses named in the petition. The plaintiff may obtain, on application to the office, summonses to the persons named in the petition to require their attendance in this Court on the date that may be fixed for the further hearing of this appeal.

RESPONDENT NO. 2.

Hindu Law—Joint family—Debt incurred by manager on pro-note—Family liability of—Pleadings—Suit on pro-note against manager of Hindu family—Claim on debt itself—Amendment of plaint.

Although the members of a joint Hindu family are not liable in a suit on a promissory-note signed by one of the members of the family as manager in his own name, they would be liable in a suit for the debt which was due under the note.

A suit based on a promissory note signed by the manager of a joint Hindu family cannot be treated by the Court as a suit for the debt for which the promissory note was passed. The plaintiff, if he wishes to make other members of the family liable, must ask for an amendment of the plaint at the earliest opportunity.

Appeal from the decision of the District Judge, Kanara, in Appeal No. 25 of 1921, reversing the decree passed by the Sub-ordinate Judge at Sirsi, in Civil Suit No. 430 of 1920.

Mr. Y. N. Naikar, for the Appellant.

Mr. G. S. Mulgaokar, for Respondent No. 2.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff sued to recover Rs. 532-6-5 from the defendants as balance still due on a promissory-note dated October 17, 1917, passed by defendant No. 1 to plaintiff with future interest and costs. In the Trial Court a decree was passed in favour of the plaintiff against all the defendants. Defendant No. 2 appealed. By the directions of the District Judge his name was scored out of the decree. The question at issue was whether in a suit on a promissory-note signed by the first defendant alone in his own name the second defendant could be joined as a party. Various cases have been cited in which questions have arisen whether a member of a joint Hindu family could be held liable in a suit filed on a promissory-note signed by one of the members of the family as manager in his own name. Reliance was placed by the appellant on the case of Krishna Ayyar v. Krishnasami Ayyar (1). Though it was held that all the members of the undivided family were liable on a promissory-note signed by the manager of the family, it seems to me that the judgments of Shephard, J., and Subrahmaniam Aiyar, J., were based on the fact that all the members of the family were liable for the debt which was due under the promissory-note in suit. Therefore, they could be taken as being sued on the debt and not on the promissory-note.

Then in Krishnanand Nath Khare v. Raja Ram Singh (2), it was held that there was no inherent reason why the managing member of a joint Hindu family could not in that capacity execute in his sole name a promissory-note which should be binding on the family as a whole and the property owned by it.

It seems to me, with all due respect, that the judgment was based mainly on the difficulties which might arise if a Hindu joint family could not be sued on a promissory-note unless all the members had signed it. The real point is whether a suit which is primarily a suit on a promissory-note and, therefore, a suit to which particular rules of procedure apply, could also be treated as a suit for the debt for which the promissory-note was passed. If that were permissible difficulties would arise, because the issues in a suit on a promissory-note would be entirely different from the issues which would be raised in a suit against the whole family to recover debt. I think an application should have been made in the first instance for amendment of the pleadings when the point was taken that only the party signing the note could be liable in a suit based on the note itself. It is obvious that defences which would be open to members of the family when sued for a debt would not be open to the person who passed the note, so that with regard to other members of the family the trial would take an entirely different course from the trial against the original maker of the note. It seems to me, therefore, that in this suit if the plaintiff seeks to make other members of the family liable the plaint is defective, and he ought to have asked for amendment of his plaint at the earliest opportunity, when evidence could have been led on the proper issues which would arise between the plaintiff and the other members of the family as debtors. I do not think, therefore, that in second appeal we could possibly say that the learned District Judge was wrong in striking out the second defendant's name from the decree on the ground that this was a suit on a note, and not a suit on any pre-existing debt. No injustice will result as the plaintiff has a decree against five defendants and if any of them on paying the debt desire to seek contribution from the second defendant, he can do so in a separate suit. The appeal, therefore, will be dismissed with costs.

Construction of contract—Implied terms—Agreement permitting certain things to be done—Prohibition as to others, whether implied.

The Court ought not to imply a term on a contract unless there arises from the language of the contract itself and the circumstances under which it is entered into such an inference that the parties have intended the stipulation in question that the Court is necessarily driven to the conclusion that it must be implied. [p. 245, col. 1.]

The Moorcock, (1889) 14 P. D. 64; 58 L. J. P. 73; 60 L. T. 654; 37 W. R. 439; 6 Asp. M. C. 373. Hamlyn v. Wood, (1891) 2 Q. B. 488; 60 L. J. Q. B. 734; 65 L. T. 286; 40 W. R. 24, relied upon.

Where the parties have entered into a contract relying upon a certain interpretation of the law, it is not open to the Court, when the law has been differently interpreted or possibly altered, to imply as a term in the contract what the parties would have stipulated for at that time, if they had thought about it or if the law had been otherwise. [p. 245, col. 1.]

Where the trustees of two rival temples between whom certain disputes existed as to processions and festivals entered into an agreement promising not to interfere with certain processions and festivals of each temple:

Held, that it could not be necessarily implied from the terms of the agreement that all other processions and festivals except those mentioned in the agreement had been prohibited. [p. 246, col. 2.]

Appeal from the decree of Mr. Justice Phillips, dated the 18th February, 1921, and passed in the exercise of the Ordinary Original Civil Jurisdiction of the High Court in C. S. No. 570 of 1919.

Mr. T. R. V. Sastry, for the Appellants.—The question in the case turns on the construction of the contract of 1846. (1) The first contention is that there is no express prohibition of more than 23 days' festival in the contract. (2) If any prohibition is to be read into it, the whole contract is void as being without consideration, being in excess of the powers of the trustee of a Hindu temple, and is further bad as involving a breach of trust and is opposed to public policy and is unenforceable. The provision as to prohibition of more than 23 days' festival in the U temple does not find a place in the contract and there is no reason why, in law, Courts should imply such an onerous term clearly not in the contemplation of the parties entering into the contract. The law as it then stood under the Sudder Decisions was almost conclusive against the free rights of new institutions. And so there was no necessity to provide for it. The Courts will not infer into a contract as part of its terms what the contracting parties themselves had left to be governed by the law, what was regarded as a legal obligation cannot be now converted into a contractual obligation. The contract is perfectly intelligible and consistent as it is, without the addition of this term. Terms cannot be implied into a contract which are not there, unless a Court is driven to it by circumstances—none of which exist in the present case. The Moorcock (1) and Hamlyn v. Wood (2).

GOVINDACHARIAR v. NATTU KESAVA MUDALIAR.

the learned Trial Judge.]

Quite so; because in the plaint the cause of action, as set out shows that the breach for the first time occurred in November 1918, when for the first time the defendants performed a 24th day festival in a year prior to that or taking the contract as for the 23 days there is no allegation of any breach. The suit as brought is, therefore, not maintainable.

Mr. R. Kuppuswami Iyer, for the Respondent.—The point was not taken before the learned Trial Judge.

[SCHWABE, C. J.—The learned Judge's judgment proceeds on the assumption that there is a contract for more than 23 days. The point has been distinctly taken before us, in the appeal grounds. Why should we imply terms into Exhibit A?]

Looking at the history of the two temples and their close proximity it is a necessary term to be read into the contract.

The Y temple was clearly the older and more important of the two temples. The law as then understood clearly negated the right to conduct new processions or any procession for newly installed deities. The U temple had no legal rights whatsoever. The contract must be construed in the light of the law as it was then understood. Both parties conceded certain rights in others; Y temple to U processions for a certain number of days and U temple to all Y processions. The restricted statement of rights involves a negation of other rights. A term must be implied that U will carry on no new processions in addition to the 23 fixed by agreement. The observations in Hamlyn v. Wood (2) are in my favour. (The other points were not gone into.)

JUDGMENT.

Schwabe, C. J.—I regret to be called upon to give a decision in this case which would, in my opinion, have been much better disposed of if the parties had brought to a successful issue the negotiations for a settlement which, we were informed, were taking place. As these negotiations have failed, the parties are entitled to our judgment.

The facts of the case, so far as they are relevant, are that, the plaintiff represented a temple of the deity Vishnu of very old standing indeed. Throughout the arguments the plaintiff's temple has been referred to as the "Y" temple. The defendant's temple is said to be a temple founded somewhere about 1832 and the principal deity installed in that temple is known as Vendanta Desikar, himself at one time a worshipper of Vishnu. The followers and worshippers of that temple have been referred to in this case as those of the temple "U." The two sets of worshippers belonging to the two great divisions of the Vaishnavite religion, the northern and southern may be referred to as U and Y owing to the shape of their Namams. The U temple is practically adjacent to the Y temple and there is no doubt that it was at times exceedingly inconvenient to the Y temple to have the U temple there, because it had processions in streets and music and other things which might interfere and probably did interfere with the reverent and decent worship observed at the Y temple. At that time the Sudder Court had decided and it was then accepted as law, that no new procession and no procession for any newly installed deity could be lawfully carried on in the streets, and that any one objecting to such things could, by applying to the Court, get an injunction restraining them. In fact, the Sudder Court had established the principle that, as far as the legality was concerned, only the old established procession could be allowed or permitted. The parties very naturally tried to find a modus vivendi and they entered into an agreement Exhibit A, and another agreement of about the same date, 26th January, 1846, which is not produced before us, but is recited in Exhibit A. The terms of the document are quite clear. It recited that there had been disputes, ever since the institution of the Vedanta Desikar temple, about the processions through the streets and other disputes relating to some complaint of the U temple against some action of the Y temple. The contract then recites the agreement entered into, by the Y temple in favour of the U temple, and it recites an agreement to the effect that the U temple should be at liberty to hold processions of its deity through the streets on 23 specified days and that, on 17 other days, if, in bringing the god out of the temple for short distances through the street on the way to the ball, that short procession clashed with some procession of the Y temple, then the U temple's procession should be fixed for some other convenient time. No doubt this latter part would necessarily imply an agreement by the Y temple not to interfere with the conduct on those 17 days of this short ceremony and, the entrance into the street for that purpose and not to interfere by way of attempting to stop it, but would confine its claims in respect of that to a right to have it postponed to a more convenient time. Then follows, beginning at line 28, a statement of what the U temple undertakes to do. It first of all gives complete liberty, so far as U temple is concerned to the Y temple to conduct processions and festivals of any kind at any time in favour of any deity throughout the year. In other words, the trustee of the U temple for himself and his successors undertakes not to interfere with whatever the Y temple may choose to do, whereas the trustees of the Y temple had by their agreement undertaken not to interfere by applications for injunction or otherwise, with whatever the U temple may choose to do in respect of the specified days. Then follows the term providing what is to happen in the event of the processions of the two temples clashing and in effect U gives a right of precedence to Y.

It is argued that you must imply into that contract a term that the U temple will not hold any procession for its then installed deity or any other deity installed thereafter, on any days except the 23 by procession, I mean long procession, through the streets and I presume also that except on the 17 days it will not hold its short processions though the latter point has not been argued. Now, the law on the subject of the implication of terms in a contract has frequently been misunderstood and frequently misapplied; but it was definitely laid down in a case called The Moorcock (1), by Bowen, L. J., and the words used by him in that case were again cited with approval and the principle rather more clearly enunciated in Hamlyn v. Wood (2) and the passage which is usually quoted on this point is from the judgment of Kay, L. J.

"The Court ought not to imply a term in a contract, unless there arises from the language of the contract itself, and the circumstances under which it is entered into, such an inference that the parties must have intended the stipulation in question that the Court is necessarily driven to the conclusion that it must be implied."

In this case, there is no express term limiting the U temple to 23 days for its processions, and the question for consideration is, whether the Court is necessarily driven to the conclusion that the parties must have intended that stipulation. In my judgment, the Court is not so driven because it seems to me that, there was at the time of the contract no necessity for the existence of such a stipulation. It was thought that at that time, the contract provided for all that the Y temple required and they gave the U temple license for 23 days and the law could be taken to provide for the rest. When we find the parties contracting on the basis of what was then supposed to be the law, there could be no necessity for implying a term which if put in would merely be stating what it was supposed the law was. In my judgment there is ample consideration for this contract without any such term. No doubt it would have been a sensible arrangement if the contract had said "if you do not interfere with my 23 days and short procession, I will not interfere with you at all," and that, in my judgment, is what the contract did and was intended to do. I do not think that it is open to the Court, when the law has been differently interpreted or possibly altered, to imply as a term what the parties would have stipulated for at that time, if they had thought about it, or if the law had then been otherwise.

On these grounds, I think that this judgment is wrong. When I say that, I do not mean that I am to be taken to have approved of the rest of the judgment, because the other points have not been argued. But the learned Judge throughout his judgment assumed that what the contract meant was that the processions were to take place only on 23 days, and it appears that he did not consider the question whether or not that was the true meaning of the contract and, I rather gather that it was not his fault that he did not so consider it because the point was not taken or, at any rate, brought particularly to his notice in the Court below, and, indeed, in the grounds of appeal the point finds no place until a late date when the amended grounds of appeal were put in. On this ground, I think that the injunction granted must be dissolved and that this appeal must be allowed with costs throughout. The memorandum of objections must be dismissed with costs.

I should add that I find nothing in the agreement to limit the U temple in installing new idols or taking them in procession. Nothing that I have said must be taken in any way to express a view as to whether the contract is or is not a binding contract. I appreciate that this judgment must leave open many matters between the two temples, because it seems to me that unless some arrangement is to come between them, there are bound to be difficulties and I urge upon the parties in the light of this judgment to see if they cannot arrive at some suitable way of carrying on their respective rites in future without interfering with each other.

Wallace, J.—I agree that the decision in this case must rest on the interpretation of the contract Exhibit A. The first part recites what the Y temple allowed the U temple to do, i. e., the Y temple agreed to refrain from objecting to the U's processions on 23 specific days, and the second part of Exhibit A recites that the U temple agreed to do, i. e., it would refrain from objecting to Y's procession on any day, and particularly, it would give precedence to the Y temple on the 23 specific days, and also at any time when their Vasantha Ootsavam or Vadaithi processions clashed with those of the Y temple. Beyond that the contract does not go. It is a contract as regards what was to be permitted by each side, i. e., what each side agreed to allow the other to do as regards definite festivals which were then taking place or which might take place in the future: and it was not a contract as regards what was to be prohibited to each side for the future. While admitting that, the Y trustees came to the making of the contract claiming that all processions of the U temple were contrary to the then law, I agree that a prohibition, to be fastened on the U temple by the Y temple, of all future processions by the former not mentioned by the contract was not in the contemplation of the parties as part of that contract, because the Sudder Court Law as then in force, would deal with that, and it was not, therefore, necessary for the parties themselves to provide for it. I agree that this Court cannot hold that the parties must have intended the contract to imply such a prohibition, or that this Court, is, therefore, driven to imply it. The contract is perfectly consistent and intelligible without implying that. In my interpretation the obligations undertaken by the U trustees under Exhibit A were (1) to refrain from interfering with any of Y's processions and (2) to give precedence to its processions on the occasions specifically laid down in the contract. It is not Y's case that, on this interpretation of the contract, there has been any breach thereof. Issue No. 2 in this case, which is 'whether the defendants committed any breach of the said agreement,' must, therefore, be decided against the plaintiffs. The plaintiff's suit as framed cannot, therefore, stand and they are not entitled to an injunction in the terms prayed for. It is not necessary for the purpose of deciding this suit to record a finding on Issue No. 1, which is "whether the agreement is true, valid and binding on the defendants" or to say how for Exhibit A itself as I interpret it, in reference to the obligations which it imposed on the then trustees, was a valid and legal contract, or whether it is now binding on the present defendants, the successors of those trustees. I agree in the order proposed by the learned Chief Justice.

rupees at exchange rate "on date of payment"—Exchange rate, calculation of.

In a suit upon a bill of exchange drawn in a foreign currency and payable in rupees, "at the current rate for Bank Drafts at the date of payment," the rate of exchange to be applied is the one prevailing on the due date and not the one prevailing on the date when the bill is actually paid.

Appeal.

Sir Thomas Strangman and Mr. Collman, for the Appellant.

Mr. Kanga, Advocate General, with him Mr. Desai, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

Macleod, C. J.—The plaintiffs brought this suit against the defendants as acceptors of two Bills of Exchange drawn by the plaintiffs in New York upon the defendants and payable thirty days after sight. One of the Bills of Exchange was for 1568.51 dollars, dated July 2, 1920, and was accepted by the defendants on August 4, 1920. The other was for £ 261-19-3, dated September 8, 1920, and was accepted by the defendants on October 12, 1920.

The defendants raised various defences with which we are not concerned in this appeal. The only question in appeal is, at what rate of exchange should the amount due to the plaintiffs by the defendants on their acceptances be calculated. According to the terms of the bills they were to be paid at the current rate for Bank Demand Drafts at date of payment. It was contended by the plaintiffs that these words meant that the rate of exchange should be calculated when the Bill was actually paid. It was contended by the defendants that the rate of exchange should be calculated at the due date. The learned Judge was of opinion that the defendant's contention was right and from that decision the plaintiffs have appealed.

It seems to me that the question can be answered by considering what was the plain meaning of the contract entered into by the defendants when they accepted these Bills. They agreed to pay the amount appearing on the face of the bills thirty days after sight. These amounts were stated in the one in dollars and in the other in sterling, and it was agreed that defendants should not pay these amounts in foreign currency, or by foreign bills, but that they should pay to the plaintiffs such an amount in rupees as would enable the plaintiffs to buy foreign Bills themselves, for the respective amounts. Then as it was stated in the Bills that they must be paid at the current rate for Bank Demand Drafts at date of payment, that date could only mean the day on which the acceptors agreed to pay and not some other date at which, if the contract had been broken, the defendants might either choose to tender the money, or might be forced to pay by an order of the Court. It was argued that the same result would follow if nothing had been stated in the Bills with regard to the current rate for Bank Demand Drafts and, therefore, these words on the defendants' contention would be mere surplusage, so that some other meaning should be attached to them in order to avoid that result. It appears to me clear that these words have been inserted as a matter of common form in these Bills so as to make it certain how the amount in rupees was to be calculated at the due date. There is no necessity to speculate what would have happened if the words had not been there, or how the acceptors would have met their obligations at the due dates. Nor is it necessary to consider the cases which were cited in the Court below, as Counsel for the appellants did not rely on any authorities before us. It seems to me that the question can be decided on the terms of the contract, and on the terms of the contract, I think, the decision of the learned Judge is right. The appeal is dismissed with costs.

Second appeal against a decree of the District Judge, Budaun, dated the 17th June, 1921.

Mr. S. Raza Ali, for the Appellant.

Mr. M. A. Aziz, for Mr. Iqbal Ahmad, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for pre-emption brought by the plaintiff-appellant in the Court of the Munsif of Sahaswan in the Budaun District. Gopi and Musammatt Dipa, it appears, executed a deed of sale of certain landed property on the 16th January, 1920 in favour of one Dip Chand. On the 19th of November, 1920, Her Keshi, the plaintiff-appellant before us, filed his suit for the revocery of the said property on the allegation that under a custom of pre-emption which obtained in the village, where the property is situate he being the co-sharer of the vendors was entitled to purchase the property in preference to Dip Chand who was a stranger. The claim was brought against the vendors and the vendee. One Mewa Ram was also impleaded as a defendant, on the allegation that there was a fictitious mortgage in his favour in respect of the property in suit. On the 3rd December, 1920, before the case came to trial Dip Chand, the vendee, sold the property in suit to Mewa Ram who is also a co-sharer in the village and of the same status as Her Keshi the pre-emptor. The custom of pre-emption stated in the plaint was denied by the contesting defendants, and in addition Mewa Ram pleaded that he being a co-sharer in the village and a transfer of the disputed property having been made in his favour prior to the trial of the case, the suit of Her Keshi, the pre-emptor, must fail. The Court of first instance rejected the pleas in defence, holding that the right of pre-emption arose on the execution of the sale deed of the 16th of January, 1920. and no subsequent transaction even in favour of a co-sharer of equal degree with the pre-emptor could defeat the latter's right. On appeal by Mewa Ram, the learned Judge of the lower Appellate Court disagreed with the first Court. He held that on the case-law of this Court the defence of Mewa Ram was a good and valid defence and defeated the claim of Her Keshi. The case of Behari Lal v. Mohan Singh (1) was referred to by the learned Judge as authority in favour of his view. The claim of Her Keshi was accordingly dismissed.

In his appeal before this Court, Her Keshi contends that his right of preferential purchase arose on the transfer in favour of Dip Chand on the 16th of January, 1920, and any subsequent transfer by the vendee Dip Chand would not affect his (Her Keshi's) right. In support of this view the learned Counsel for the pre-emptor has relied upon some of the older cases of this Court. We think we are bound to follow the case of Bihari Lal mentioned above. That case was also followed by this Bench in the case of Shib Lal v. Bidha Singh (2) disposed of on the 26th of January of this year. The claim of Her Keshi, therefore, fails. It is however contended that there is some difference in the amount of the property conveyed by the two sale deeds of the 16th January, 1920, and the 3rd December, 1920. The latter sale-deed refers to property less than that conveyed by the deed of 16th January, 1920. The claim of Her Keshi, therefore, ought to prevail in respect of that portion of the property which is not included in the sale of the 3rd December, 1920. No such plea seems to have been taken in the Court of first instance, or in the lower Appellate Court, or in the memorandum of appeal to this Court. The learned Counsel for the respondents argues that he is not in a position to meet this objection at this stage, not having his client or the latter's agent with him and having no information on the subject. As the objection was not taken

An endorsement on a promissory-note by which the promisor records that he has paid a certain sum against the liability which stands against his name on the note, amounts to an admission of his liability to pay the balance, and will start a fresh period of limitation from the date on which it was made. The fact that the endorsement is below an account showing what has already been paid on the note, would make no difference. [p. 250, col. 1.]

Appeal from the decision of the District Judge, Satara, in Appeal No. 216 of 1921, reversing the decree passed by the Subordinate Judge at Karad, in Civil Suit No. 618 of 1919.

Mr. A. G. Desai, for the Appellant.

Mr. K. H. Kelkar, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff sued to recover Rs. 1,445-11-0 from the defendant, being the balance on two promissory-notes with future interest and costs. The lower Court passed a decree for Rs. 580-6-6 from the second defendant and the estate of defendants Nos. 1, 3 and 4 on the one note, and Rs. 865-4-6 from the second defendant on the other note. The chief contest was with regard to the liability on the note of November 12, 1913, on which it was said the balance due was Rs. 865-4-6. An issue was raised whether the claim on the promissory-note of 1913, was in time. The learned Judge held that the claim was in time as against the second defendant and not against defendants Nos. 1, 3 and 4. In appeal the claim on this note as against the second defendant was also rejected. Now it is admitted that the second defendant signed this promissory note on November 12, 1913, for Rs. 1,500 with interest at six per cent. Payments were made of Rs. 90 on February 2, 1913, Rs. 200 on January 11, 1916, and Rs. 381-12-0 on April 21, 1916. On November 6, 1916, the second defendant endorsed on the note the three payments which had been made on the previous dates, added up the total, and signed underneath.

It is contended by the plaintiff that this was an acknowledgment of liability within the meaning of section 19 of the Indian Limitation Act. On the part of the second defendant, it is contended that there was no sufficient acknowledgment. It may be admitted that the second defendant had not written in so many words that he admitted his liability for the balance due. But we must read the whole endorsement made by him, taken in conjunction with the words on the face of the note. It is difficult to say that that endorsement can mean anything else than this "I have paid so much on account of my liability on the note, and in consequence I am only liable for the balance remaining due."

We have been referred to the case of Venkatakrishniah v. Subbarayudu (1) where it was held that where a payment was made by a mortgagor who was able to write and was recorded on the back of the mortgage bond by a servant of the creditor and signed by the debtor, the endorsement amounted to an acknowledgment of liability within the meaning of section 19 of the Indian Limitation Act, though the payment was not good as a part payment within the meaning of section 20 of the Act. Mr. Justice Napier said:—

"I adhere to the opinion expressed by me in Jaganadha Sahu v. Rama Sahu (2) on the same words as are in this document, I have no doubt that there is in this endorsement an acknowledgment".

And Mr. Justice Srinivasa Aiyangar, said (page 700*) :—

"I have no doubt that the terms of the endorsement in this case, amount to an acknowledgment of liability. The debtor states in terms that he pays Rs. 378 towards the amount due on the bond and on the same day made another payment of Rs. 22 and made another endorsement. I construe the endorsement as meaning that the debtor made a part payment of the amount due (on the bond on that day over Rs. 1,500 was due as shown on the face of the bond) which is certainly an acknowledgment that more money was due."

Following that decision, I think this is an endorsement by which the promisor recorded that he had paid Rs. 671-12-0 against the liability which stood against his name on the promissory-note, and consequently he admitted his liability to pay the balance. It seems to me that as a matter of Common Law an endorsement on a promissory-note by the promisor is an acknowledgment of liability, which will start a fresh period of limitation from the date on which it was made, and it makes no difference that such endorsement is below an account showing what has already been paid on the promissory-note. I think, therefore, that this appeal must be allowed, the decree of the lower Appellate Court set aside, and that of the Subordinate Judge restored with costs in this Court and the Court below.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 109 (c), scope of—Issue of general importance—Leave to appeal—"Private importance," meaning of—Value of subject-matter, determination of.

Section 109 (c), Civil Procedure Code, contemplates a class of cases in which there may be involved questions of public importance, or which may be important precedents governing numerous other cases, or in which, while the right in dispute is not exactly measurable in money, it is of great public or private importance. Where in a case the point in issue appears to be one of general importance, but not of sufficient importance to the proposed respondent to warrant putting him to the expense of an appeal to the Privy Council, leave to appeal should be refused. [p. 253, col. 1.]

Per Coutts-Trotter, J.—The expression "private importance" means, private importance to both parties to the litigation, and not only to one of them. [p. 253, col. 2.]

Per Kumaraswami Sastri, J.—For the purpose of determining the amount or value of the subject-matter of the suit and in the appeal, the question is not what the indirect consequences of the decree may be to the petitioner but what the value of the subject-matter is as between the parties when an application is made for leave on the ground that the pecuniary value is over the sum of Rs. 10,000. [p. 254, col. 1.]

In granting leave to appeal to the Privy Council, the High Courts in India have no power to impose a condition upon the appellant that, whatever may be the result of the appeal, he should pay the costs of the other party. The Privy Council alone have such a power. [p. 252, col. 2.]

This decision affects his right to collect such Swanthanthrams in the whole of the Ramnad Zemindari which involves an amount over Rs. 10,000. Also I ask for leave under section 109 (c) as involving a matter of great importance, since a large number of other people are holding under the landlord under terms more or less similar and will be governed by the present decision. The matter is one of such great importance that your Lordships can certify it to be a fit one for appeal.

Mr. C. V. Anantakrishna Iyer, for the Respondent.—The matter may have great indirect consequences to the landlord but to the tenant the value is very small and, he must not be compelled to fight for other people before the Privy Council. It would be of very great hardship.

[SCHWABE, C. J. to the Appellant.—You must be put on terms, are you prepared to pay the costs of the appeal to the Privy Council in any event.]

Mr. A. Krishnaswami Iyer, for the Appellant expressed his inability. I, however, doubt if such conditional leave could be granted. It may be interfering with the discretion of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in the matter of costs. (The matter was adjourned for further arguments).

Mr. C. V. A. Anantakrishna Iyer, for the Respondents.—The Privy Council alone have power to make a conditional order in granting leave to appeal. A conditional order by your Lordship will affect the discretion of Privy Council. See Richard Spooner v. Juddow (1), Sibnarain Ghose, In re (2), Indian Immigration Trust Board of Natal v. Vencategin Govindasamy (3). In one Indian case, the right has been negatived, Clarke v. Brajendra Kissors Roy Chowdhuri (4), Beni Ram v. Kundan Lal (5).

Further, there is no question of great public importance. If at all, it is of great importance only to one party. That is insufficient.

Banarsi Prasad v. Kashi Krishna Narain (6), Hirjibhai v. Jamshedji (7), Chinna v. Markanda Kothan (8).

Further, as your Lordships have indicated in the judgment under appeal, the landlord is not without remedy. He can apply for an order of rent in the Revenue Courts.

Mr. A. Krishnaswami Iyer stated his client was unwilling to submit to a conditional leave to appeal. The matter is one of great importance having regard to the interests of the landlord that will be affected by the decision in the whole of the zemindari.

Further, the decision directly and indirectly affects the landlord's rights to collect manibham from others and to the extent of over Rs. 25, 000 and hence the case comes under section 110 also.

RAJESWARA SETHUPATHI v. TIRUNEELAKANTAM.

The actual pecuniary amounts involved in the two appeals are Rs. 400 and Rs. 600 respectively. Under sections 109 and 110 of the Code of Civil Procedure of 1908, leave to appeal has to be granted where the amount or the value of the subject-matter of the suit is Rs. 10,000 or upwards and, the amount or value of the subject-matter in dispute on appeal to His Majesty in Council is the same sum or upwards or, property of like amount or value is involved directly or indirectly, provided where the decree affirms the decision of the Court immediately below and some substantial question of law is involved. In this case by reason of the value of the subject-matter, the above provisions do not apply. There is, however, a further power under section 109 (c) of the Code of Civil Procedure in this Court to give leave to appeal by certifying that the case is a fit one for appeal to His Majesty in Council. What is contemplated is a class of cases in which there may be involved questions of public importance, or which may be important precedence governing numerous other cases or, in which, while the right in dispute is not exactly measurable in money, it is of great public or private importance. See Banarsi Prasad v. Kashi Krishna Narain (6), Hirjibhai v. Jamshedji (7) and Chinna v. Markanda Kothan (8). We are informed that there are many other persons in the zemindari in question holding under the zemindar whose rights are governed by documents in the same or similar terms to those construed by the Courts in these cases. The result of these decisions is that the plaintiff zemindar cannot recover the arrears for the last few years alleged to be due to him in respect of certain swathanthrams. According to our judgment, there are other means open to the plaintiff to recover such payments or their equivalent for the future. The plaintiff contends that this is a case of great public or private importance because, if our decision is wrong, he would be entitled to recover from many persons for the past amounts aggregating to a large sum. It is obviously unjust that the defendants in these two cases should be put to the expense of fighting this matter in the Privy Council, so that if our judgment is wrong, the plaintiff may recover these small amounts from them, and thereafter in the aggregate a large amount from other persons. In similar cases, on applications for special leave to appeal, made to their Lordships of the Privy Council, a condition has been imposed upon the appellant that, whatever be the result of the appeal, he should pay the costs of the other party as between Solicitor and client. See Richard Spooner v. Juddow (1) and Sibnarain Ghose, In re (2) and Indian Immigration Trust Board of Natal v. Vencategin Govindasamy (3). I think that this is a proper case for such an order, if it is a matter upon which I am entitled to express an opinion. The question has been raised before us whether we have power to impose such a condition. In Clarke v. Brajendra Kishore Roy Chowdhury (4) Jenkins, C. J., and Casperz, J. held that no such power existed in the Indian Courts, but was confined to the Privy Council. The result of such finding is curious. According to the direction of the Privy Council in Moti Chand v. Gangi Prasad Singh (9) quoted in the judgment in Clarke v. Brajendra Kishore Roy Chowdhuri (4) in all cases where leave to appeal is desired, although the subject-matter is under Rs. 10,000, such applications must in the first instance, be made to the Indian Court as that Court, if it thinks that it is a case fit for appeal to His Majesty in Council can certify to that effect under section 109 (c). What is the duty of the Court, if it thinks that the case is a fit one for consideration by His Majesty in Council, but that it would not be right to call upon one party whose financial interest in the matter is small, to incur the risk of the costs of the appeal? Assuming the decision in Clarke v. Brajendra Kishore Roy Chowdhuri (4) is right, and in my judgment, in view of the fact that, that case went before the Privy Council and special leave to appeal was granted and it was not then suggested that the Calcutta High Court could have itself imposed any condition, it is not possible for this Court to hold otherwise, the only course open to us is to refuse leave and to leave the appellant, if so advised to apply to the Privy Council for special leave.

(9) 29 J. A. 40; 6 C. W. N. 362; 24 A. 174; 4 Bcm. L. R. 159; 8 Sar. P. C. J. 247. (P. C.)

RAJESWARA SETHUPATHI v. TIRUNEELAKANTAM.

During the hearing of these applications we asked the appellant, whether he would be prepared to agree to a condition that, he should be liable for the costs of the defendants as between Solicitor and client in any event. This by his Counsel he definitely refused. It is possible that it would not have been right for us to give leave with such a condition even if agreed to, as if the decision in Clarke v. Brajendra Kishore Roy Chowdhury (4) is correct, it might be said that to hold so would be usurping a power reserved to the Privy Council. I venture to express the hope that some day this matter will be discussed in the Privy Council and that a definite pronouncement may be made on the subject. But meanwhile, I think in such cases the only safe course is to refuse leave stating if it be the case, that the point in issue appears to be one of general importance, but not of sufficient importance to the proposed respondent to warrant this Court in putting him to the expense of an appeal to the highest Tribunal.

These applications must accordingly be dismissed with costs.

Coutts Trotter, J.—These cases have given me very great difficulty, and I do not know now whether I have solved that difficulty aright; but I desire to formulate it in my own words as it presents itself to my mind.

We can only grant leave to appeal, if at all, under section 109 (c) of the Code of Civil Procedure, because the amounts at stake in the cases are in themselves small. But the zemindar who wishes to appeal, asserts that the cases will govern a very great number of other cases, in which he seeks to recover swathanthrams from other raiyats and that, therefore, it is for him "a matter of great private importance," to quote the language of the leading case. The reply of the raiyats is that to them individually it is a matter of a few hundred rupees, and that they could not possibly afford to contest such an appeal. Obviously, the most satisfactory order would be to allow the zemindar to appeal and get his principle settled for him on terms of paying all the other side's costs in any event; but it is said that this Court has no power to make such an order. After a careful consideration of the section, and the cases referred to, I have come to the conclusion that this contention is well-founded. We have in a sense a discretion as to granting leave to appeal; but it is strictly circumscribed by the section. I do not think we can impose a condition as to costs, unless it is to be found in so many words in the Code, it would be, in my opinion, an invasion and usurpation of the powers of the Privy Council to do so, and an unwarranted attempt to fetter their Lordships' discretion as to costs.

This being the position, what is our duty? To grant leave because the matter is of great importance to the one party, or to refuse it because it is of trifling importance to the other? If we take the former view, the respondent will probably either pay at once or at any rate fail to appear to argue the case; and the raiyats of this country have not for the most part reached the stage of realizing that they could advantageously combine to fight a test case. I think on the whole that it is best to regard their Lordships of the Judicial Committee when they speak of "private importance" as meaning private importance to both parties to the litigation, and not only to one of them. I, therefore, concur in the order proposed that we should refuse leave. The zemindar can apply to their Lordships for special leave to appeal, when if their Lordships see fit, they can impose the terms that we should have desired to impose, had we felt ourselves able to do so, or such other terms as may commend themselves.

Kumaraswami Sastri, J.—These are applications by the Rajah of Ramnad for leave to appeal to the Privy Council against the decision of the majority of the Full Bench. The question turns on the construction of two cowles executed by the respondents. The Rajah claimed that he was under the cowles entitled to recover from the respondent the manibha swathanthram paid by the raiyats to the respondents. The appeals by the Rajah first came on before Wallis, C. J., and Sadasiva Aiyar, J., who differed. In consequence of this difference, the above Letters Patent Appeals were filed. The Chief Justice and Coutts Trotter, J., were of opinion that the zamindar was not entitled to the swathanthrams while I agree with Sadasiva Iyer, J., that he was entitled

RAJESWARA SETHUPATHI v. TIRUNEELAKANTAM.

The present applications are for leave to appeal to the Privy Council against the decision of the majority of the Full Bench. It is alleged by the Rajah that though the value of the manibha swathanthrams in dispute is only Rs. 409-2-4 and Rs. 159-3-0 respectively in Tiruneelakantam Servai v. Raja of Ramnad (10), the judgment and decrees of the High Court will have far reaching consequences in the Ramnad zemindari and that the judgment which will be binding authority on the question of law decided by the Courts will affect his right to collect the manibha swathanthrams from other *raiya*ts and would entail on him a loss of Rs. 20,000 a year. It is contended that the judgment and decree of the High Court involve directly and indirectly a sum of over Rs. 10,000.

As regards the value of the appeal it is clear that so far as the petitioner and respondents are concerned it is far below Rs. 10,000. Even taking into account the amounts which will become payable on the unexpired term of the leases the amount will not be over Rs. 4,000 in both the Letters Patent Appeals. For the purposes of section 110 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the amount or value of the subject-matter of the suit and in the appeal in the Court of first instance and the Appellate Court must be Rs. 10,000 or upwards, in order to render an appeal under clauses (a) and (b) of section 109 competent. The question is, therefore, not what the indirect consequences of the decree may be to the petitioner, but what the value of the subject-matter is as between the parties; when an application is made for leave on the ground that the pecuniary value is over the sum of Rs. 10,000 required by clauses (a) and (b) of section 110. I am of opinion that, the subject-matter of the suits and appeals is far below the sum of Rs. 10,000 even if we consolidate the appeals.

It is argued that even if clauses (a) and (b) of section 109 do not apply, leave should be granted under clause (c) which enables the High Court to grant leave in cases not falling under clauses (a) and (b) if the Judges consider that the case is a fit one for appeal to His Majesty in Council. It is pointed out that special leave has been given in cases where though the amount in dispute in individual cases was small leave was granted when the question related to tenures or the construction of leases and grants which applied to tenants generally. It does not however appear that the questions raised affect other zemindaris in the Presidency.

There is no doubt that the questions raised in these Letters Patent Appeals are of great importance to the Zemindar of Ramnad and that he will lose a large sum should the matter stand where it is. This, however, is not the only consideration. We have to view the case from the standpoint of the respondents who are tenants without means at their disposal to incur the heavy costs and charges which the granting of leave will entail on them. The case is one which while of great importance to one party is so far as the other is concerned of small pecuniary interest. In fact the respondents state that if leave to appeal is granted it would be more profitable for them to pay the manibha swathanthrams disallowed rather than incur the expenses involved in defending the appeals to the Privy Council.

The consideration which ought to weigh with Courts in such cases were stated by Lord Langdale, while granting leave to appeal in Richard Spooner v. Juddow (1), where he observed as follows: "The question appears to be of very considerable importance; but you observe the amount at issue is only a sum of Rs. 250 and for the purpose of deciding that, you put the respondent to the expense of this appeal. The question is, whether this prosecution being by the East India Company, and no doubt important to have decided, for the benefit of the whole country, the whole expense of this appeal should not be borne by them. However important it may be to establish the law, upon a question of this kind, it would be very wrong to put the party to so great expense in a case where so small a amount is at issue." Leave to appeal was granted on the appellant's undertaking to pay all costs, charges and expenses, which might be incurred on behalf of the respondent as well as the appellants. In Beni Ram v. Kundan Lal (5) where the suit was between landlord and tenant and the question was, whether it was a good ground of defence in a suit for ejectment that the predecessors in tenancies had created permanent buildings on the land, without the landlord having interfered to prevent the building, which was within their knowledge. Special leave was granted by their Lordships of the Privy Council in terms that the appellant should be liable to pay the respondents costs in any event if directed to do so.

We asked the petitioner if he will undertake to pay all the costs, charges and expenses, likely to be incurred by the respondent in any event, should leave be granted under section 109 clause (c), but he declined to be liable and we do not think leave should be granted on any other terms.

We have however no power to impose any terms on the petitioner as a condition precedent to granting leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council. Sections 109 to 112 and O. XLV of the Code of Civil Procedure which deal with appeals to the King in Council do not give us any such power. Costs of the appeal, once leave is granted, is a matter entirely within the discretion of their Lordships of the Privy Council and, except by consent of the parties I do not see how we can make any order fettering the discretion of their Lordships, when they ultimately deal with the appeal. I do not think section 151 of the Code of Civil Procedure can be invoked for the purpose.

The provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure as to costs are contained in section 35 and so far as suits are concerned there is no power to direct a plaintiff to pay in advance the costs charges and expenses likely to be incurred. Order XXXV or XLII, r. 10, provides for security for costs in certain cases. Section 107, clause (2), dealing with appeals enacts that the Appellate Court shall subject to the provisions of clause (1) have the same power and perform as nearly as may be the same duties as are conferred or imposed by the Code or Courts of Original Jurisdiction in respect of suits. Treating the High Court as a Court acting in its appellate jurisdiction when granting the certificate under section 109 clause (c) it cannot have any higher powers simply because it has to consider whether it should grant the certificate required by the section.

It is no doubt true that Courts in India have power to direct the petitioner in divorce cases to pay in advance, costs charges and expenses likely to be incurred by the wife, but this power is given by section 7 of the Divorce Act, which confers on Indian Courts the same power which Courts for Divorce and Matrimonial cases in England have. As regards security for costs r. 7 of O. XLV requires the appellant to give security and all that the respondent in appeals is entitled to is to require that security be furnished. I can find no case in India where the High Court has imposed terms such as those imposed in Richard Spooner v. Juddow (1). The powers of their Lordships of the Privy Council to grant special leave are not fettered by any enactments and it is, therefore, open to them to impose such terms as they think just and equitable when special leave is granted. In cases when the High Court refused leave on the ground that it had no such power, special leave was obtained before the Privy Council and their Lordships when granting leave have not suggested that the High Court had power. I agree with the view taken by Jenkins, C. J., and Casperz, J., in Clarke v. Brajendra Kishore Roy Chowdhuri (4). The learned Chief Justice after referring to the remarks of Lord Langdale in Richard Spooner v. Juddow (1) observes, "It is true that ultimately their Lordships admitted that appeal, but that was upon terms, which we cannot impose, and, indeed, it is a part of the applicant's argument here before us, that we have no power to impose any condition upon the applicant or upon the Government, at whose instance and costs this application is being preferred. Without giving any further ground, I think, this affords a sufficient reason for us to hold that we cannot, with our limited powers, certify this to be a fit case for appeal to His Majesty in Council." Special leave was afterwards obtained and appeals were disposed of on the merits by their Lordships, [see Clarke v. Brojendra Kishore Roy Chowdhury (11).] It was nowhere suggested that the refusal by the High Court to grant

Mr. G. N. Thakor, with (him Mr. M. B. Dave), for the Appellant.

Mr. H. V. Divatia, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This was an application by Bai Mani, daughter of one Keshavlal Ranchod, under O. XXI, r. 100, Civil Procedure Code, complaining that she had been wrongfully dispossessed of certain property, and claiming that possession should be restored to her. The facts leading up to this application are set out in the judgment of the Trial Court. The house belonged to one Mulchand Haribhai. It was mortgaged with possession for more than Rs. 3,500 to one Amritlal. A money decree was passed against Mulchand, and in execution of that money-decree this house was sold subject to the mortgage right of Amritlal, and was purchased by the opponent Ranchodlal Amritlal. Bai Mani claimed either to be mortgagee or to have a mortgage lien to the extent of Rs. 500, and she applied to the Court to have her mortgage lien for Rs. 500 notified in the sale-proclamation, but her application was not granted, so she appealed to the District Court. Pending that appeal the house was sold and purchased by the opponent. After the sale the District Court held that the Executing Court ought to have notified the mortgage claim of Bai Mani in the sale-proclamation and reversed the previous order of the Executing Court. Then the opponent as an auction-purchaser applied to the Court for delivery of possession of the house purchased by him. That application would be made under O. XXI, r. 95. The house was at that time closed by the lock of Bai Mani. Consequently an application had to be made under O. XXI, r. 97. That question came up for decision under r. 97. Bai Mani was present, but the opponent was absent, consequently his application was dismissed, and Bai Mani remained in possession, and as she was present she must have informed the Court of her claim. Although the opponent was absent it cannot be said that the application was dismissed for default of appearance of both parties, because from the nature of the proceedings, it must be taken that it was a decision of the Court maintaining the obstruction by Bai Mani.

The opponent then made a fresh application, which purported to be made under r. 95 for possession. The previous application, which had been made for possession and dismissed for default, was recited, but no mention whatever was made of his previous application to remove the obstruction by Bai Mani having been dismissed. If mention had been made of that application, then we do not think the Court would have entertained the second application for possession. However, an order was made for possession which necessitated Bai Mani applying for its discharge.

BAI MANI v. RANCHODLAL AMRITLAL.

The Trial Judge said :

"I think the conduct of the opponent in obtaining a warrant for delivery of possession of the house described in this application, by suppressing the fact that his application for removal of obstruction was dismissed amounts to a distinct fraud upon the Court. He clearly abused the process of the Court. If the fact of the dismissal of opponent's application for removal of obstruction made by the applicant were known to the Court no warrant for delivery of possession would have been issued. After the dismissal of opponent's application the only remedy open to him was a suit. I, therefore, order that status quo ante should be restored by placing applicant in possession of the house leaving it open to opponent to take whatever steps he may be advised to take to enforce his rights as a purchaser and to have possession of the suit house from the applicant."

That, therefore, was an order under O. XXI, r. 101. However, the opponent filed an appeal. The learned Small Cause Court Judge, before whom the appeal was heard, seemed to think that the question whether an appeal lay was of a trivial nature, while on the facts it seems to us that the Judge failed to appreciate what actually occurred. He did not think that the opponent had suppressed any facts in his last application for possession which he ought to have disclosed. We cannot agree with him. We think the Trial Court was perfectly correct in stating that the opponent had suppressed the most important fact in his last application for possession. It seems to us, therefore, that the order of the Subordinate Judge should be restored on the ground that no appeal lay to the District Court.

The respondent has taken a point that no appeal would lie from the order of the Small Cause Court Judge. It merely makes no difference if that order was made without jurisdiction. We can deal with it under section 115, Civil Procedure Code. It will not be necessary, therefore, to deal with the somewhat complicated question whether the proceedings should continue in execution under section 47, instead of the right of the parties being determined in the future by a separate suit.

It may be pertinent to observe that this Court has always consistently held that an auction-purchaser is a stranger to the proceeding, and is not a representative of any of the parties to the suit, so that any questions which might arise between him and the parties to the suit, or the suit or their representatives must be determined by a separate suit, unless the test laid down in Gokul Singh Bhikram v. Kisansing (1) could be made applicable. There it was held that "though an auction-purchaser at a Court-sale in execution of a decree was not a party to the suit in which the decree was passed and though he was not a representative of either the decree-holder or the judgment-debtor for the purposes of section 244, yet if the question raised by the judgment-debtor as to the legality of the Court-sale was virtually one between the parties to the suit, i.e., between the decree-holder and the judgment-debtor, and if in the decision and result of that question the auction-purchaser was interested, the judgment-debtor ought not to be allowed to attack the sale in a suit."

In this particular case, the question with regard to Mulchand's mortgage was not a question between the parties to the suit, that is to say, between the decree-holder and the original judgment-debtor, Mulchand. The only question in the suit was whether the plaintiff owed a simple debt to Mulchand, and the question which now arises between Bai Mani and the auction-purchaser is whether the auction-purchaser obtained title to the property free of Bai Mani's charge or subject to it. Therefore the decision in Gokulsing Bhikaram v. Kisansing (1) does not assist the present respondent. We set aside the order of the lower Appellate Court and restore that of the Subordinate Judge with costs throughout.

Construction of document—Mortgage-deed—Mortgage of village—Residential house, inclusion of.

In a mortgage document, an entire village, with stated boundaries, was declared to be the subject of the mortgage. At the foot of the document a description of the mortgaged property was given, which included "lands, waste lands, poyamboke, tanks, fruit trees, timber trees, etc." The residential buildings of the mortgagor within the village were not specifically mentioned:

Held, (1) that the document must be read subject to the more precise description at its foot which must be taken as controlling the general words in the earlier portion; [p. 259, col. 2.]

(2) that the word "etc." should be restricted to things of the same nature as those immediately preceding and that the residential buildings were not ejusdem generis with the things enumerated; [p. 259, col. 2.]

(3) that the residential buildings were excluded from the mortgage. [p. 260, col. 1.]

The theory that an alienation of a zemindari includes also the buildings situate within it is applicable only in the absence of evidence indicating an intention to exclude them from the transaction. [p. 260, col. 2.]

Appeal against an order of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Tanjore, dated the 25th July 1921, in Execution Petition No. 149 of 1919, in Original Suit No. 43 of 1911.

Mr. N. S. Sivaramakrishnan, for the Appellant:—The only question in the case is whether the mortgage included the palace buildings. The mortgage was of the village stated to be within certain boundaries. Where all lands within specified boundaries are conveyed, everything included therein is conveyed. The buildings are admittedly comprised therein and must be held to pass in the absence of any intention to the contrary indicated in the document.

Abu Hasan v. Ramzan Ali (1), Banke Lal v. Jagat Narain (2), Asghar Reza Khan v. Mahomed Mehdi Hossein Khan (3), Sakhawat Ali v. Muhammad Abdul Karim Khan (4).

In such a case, the mention of one is not the exclusion of another. The maxim expressio unius personarum exclusio alterius has no application, where the intention of the parties is discoverable on the face of the instrument.

The legal effect of what passes under a conveyance of the lands in an area cannot be detracted merely by reference in the body of the document to only some of the items and not to others. In any case the "etc." must refer to such items in the area as are not expressly mentioned.

Mr. G. Krishnaswamy Aiyar, for the Respondent:—The question is one of intention in each case. The general words in the body of the document are limited by the detailed enumeration of what was intended to be conveyed. Where words of conveyance are only general and not specific, they will be controlled by a specific recital. Rooke v. Kensington (5).

The cases reported as Abu Hasan v. Ramzan Ali (1), Banke Lal v. Jagat Narain (2), Asghar Reza Khan v. Mahomed Mehdi Hossein Khan (3), are irrelevant. The decision in Sakhawat Ali v. Muhammad Abdul Karim Khan (4) clearly lays down that the general presumption that a conveyance of a zemindari includes building's and everything situated within its ambit cannot apply where there is evidence to the contrary. The word "etc." cannot include buildings. It can only be ejusdem generis with the other things immediately preceding. These words are trees; and buildings are obviously outside that genus.

Mr. N. S. Sivaramakrishnier in reply:—The case in Rooke v. Kensington (5) is that of a manor and the decision proceeded upon the English rule of construction that "manors" must be specifically mentioned.

JUDGMENT.

Venkatasubba Rao, J.—The dispute turns upon the construction of the mortgage-deed on which the suit was based. It has been conceded before us that the decree directs the sale of the property described in the mortgage-deed. The first defendant contends that his residence or the buildings constituting the palace are not included in the description contained in the decree, and cannot, therefore, be sold under it. On the other hand, the plaintiff argues that these buildings should not be excluded from the sale. To deal with the respective contentions it is necessary to have an accurate rendering of certain portions of the document which is in Tamil.

In the body of the document there is the following passage:—"We have mortgaged to you for Rs. 15,000 the village of Kovilur which is included in the four boundaries given below and which is attached to our zemindari, and which ancestrally belongs to us and is in our enjoyment, . . . and which is capable of yielding an annual Melwaram kist of Rs. 3,000." So far the description is general and no portion of the zemindari is excluded.

At the foot of the document is given a complete description of the mortgaged property. I give below a translation of what occurs at the close of the document:

Description of property.

"The four boundaries of the village of Kovilur attached to Ghandharvakota

West of

North of East of

South of

The village of Kovilur situate within these four boundaries is inclusive of poramboke, Nanja 52 Velis 5 Mahs, and 32 Kulis; Punja 204 Velis 2 Mahs and 98 Kulis. The total of Nanja and Punja is 256 Velis 8 Mahs and 30 Kulis.

Excluding the lands sold by auction up to date in respect of the maintenance of my mother, the remaining lands and all the rights and privileges I possess in the waste lands, poramboke and other lands attached thereto, all kinds of trees, topes, wells, ponds, tank bunds, fruit trees, wood trees, foot paths, elevated and low portions etc., be they a little more or a little less have been given as security."

It is admitted that the palace buildings are in the village of Kovilur and are within the four boundaries mentioned above. But the general words in the body of the document are qualified by the description given at the foot of it. There is a clear enumeration of what the village of Kovilur within the aforesaid four boundaries consists of. There is no mention of the palace buildings. Although no doubt the village of Kovilur was stated in the document to be the subject of the mortgage, the parties went further and described what according to them was the village of Kovilur which was intended to be mortgaged and it seems to me that the words in the body of the document must be read subject to the more precise description given, which must be taken as controlling the general words occurring in the earlier portion.

I may state that it has not been argued on behalf of the plaintiff that the building is comprised within the total area mentioned of the nanjah and punjah lands, namely, 256 Velies 8 Mahs and 30 Kulies. But the only argument advanced is that the palace buildings must be regarded as included in the expression 'the remaining lands' or 'poramboke and other lands' or the words 'etc'. I find it impossible to hold that the words "the remaining lands" or "poramboke and other lands attached thereto (remaining lands)" can be regarded as including the residential building of the zemindar.

Turning to the words 'etc.' they follow an enumeration of specific things beginning with "all kinds of trees" having some common characteristic, and the words should be restricted to things of the same nature as those which have been already mentioned. In such a case the rule of ejusdem generis will apply and the residential building cannot be said to be ejusdem generis with the things already enumerated.

A being seized of a manor and other real estate in the county of M, mortgaged the last mentioned real estate to B., by a subsequent deed he mortgaged to C, "all the hereditaments and premises comprised in the previous mortgage, all the other lands tenements and hereditaments (if any) in the county of M" of which he was seized. It was held that the manor did not pass, Vice-Chancellor Wood observing as follows:—"I think the clear intent and purport must be held to be simply a sweeping in of other property ejusdem generis with the property which had been so conveyed, if any there should be; certainly not to include a copyhold property or manorial rights in property of a totally different character from anything attempted to be conveyed or specified throughout the deed." Rooke v. Kensington (5). In Abu Hasan v. Ramzan Ali (1) it was held that in the absence of proof that a building belonging to the zemindar was excluded from sale, the sale of his "rights and interests" in the village passed such building to the auction-purchaser. Similarly in Banke Lal v. Jagat Narain (2) it was held that a kothi or other building situate within a zemindari area would be included in and pass with the zemindari unless the contrary is shown by evidence of the circumstances from which it may properly be inferred that the building is not an appurtenance of the zemindari. In Asghar Raza Khan v. Mahomad Mehdi Hossein Khan (3) their Lordships of the Judicial Committee held that the deed which contained no words of exception or reservation and was ample in point of language to pass the land on which the Bazar was situated, did pass the same in the absence of words showing an intention to exclude it.

These cases are of little assistance to the plaintiff. It is no doubt true that the palace building is an appurtenance to the zemindari but the rule laid down in these cases is that there is a presumption in favour of the inclusion of such a building unless there is anything to show that it was excluded expressly or by implication. [See Abu Hasan v. Ramzan Ali (1) already referred to]. In Sakhawat Ali v. Muhammad Abaul Karim Khan (4) it was clearly laid down that the doctrine that the sale of a zemindari included also buildings situated within the zemindari is applicable only in the absence of evidence indicating an intention to exclude them from the sale.

The determination of the question solely depends upon the right construction of the deed of mortgage and, in my opinion, there is an indication of an intention to exclude the residence of the zemindar from the security.

There was a subsidiary argument advanced before us on behalf of the first defendant, which related to certain objections to the terms of the proclamation of sale. It has not been shown that the portion to which exception has been taken is likely to cause any prejudice to the first defendant; and even apart from this he has not satisfied us that at this stage we can interfere with the portion of the order relating to the terms of the proclamation.

In the result we allow the appeal to the extent of permitting the proclamation to be amended by excluding the palace building of the zemindar, and in other respects the appeals fails. Each party will bear his own costs of this appeal.

Spencer, J.—I agree. The specification of the mortgaged property at the foot of the mortgage-deed obviously controls the words in the body of the deed "the village of Kovilur which is included within the undermentioned boundaries, which is attached to our zemin, which belongs to us ancestrally and is, in our enjoyment, and which is made liable under Nagappa Chettiar's decree and is capable of yielding an annual melwaram kist of Rs. 3,000.

If what was mortgaged was expressed as "all that lies within the four boundaries" given I should hold that the family residence of the zemindar, or palace as it is called, was included; but it cannot be part of the 256 Velies 8 Mahs and 30 Kulis of wet and dry fields, and as there is a sweeping clause following the specification of cultivable lands, the other items should be taken to be ejusdem generis with those that are specified. I do not think such an important item as a family residence can have been intended to be covered by the description given in these words:—"the rest of the lands, be they a little more or a little less, together with the waste lands, poramboke and other lands, all sorts of trees, topes, wells, ponds, tanks, embankments, fruit trees, timber trees, foot paths, hills and dales, etc." In this detailed description the omission of housesites, houses and other superstructures is conspicuous. As for the cases quoted, none of them is on all fours with this. In Abu Hasan v. Ramzan Ali (1) it was held that the Killa or Fort was part and parcel of the zemindari rights and interests in the village of Hajipur. There was no specification of what was meant by the village of Hajipur, as there is here of the village of Kovilur. In Banke Lal v. Jagat Nardin (2) the determination of the question whether the Kothi (or house) passed by the sale turned principally on a consideration of what was attached in the warrant of attachment. In Asghar Reza Khan v. Mahomed Mehdi Hossein Khan (3) "bazzars" were included in the operative part of the mortgage-deed. So the Judicial Committee held that the interests of the defendant zemindar in the Kutugunge bazar passed by the sale.

Ground No. 4 in the memorandum of appeal raises a question as to the terms of the sale-proclamation. On this point no appeal lies. I agree with the order proposed.

JUDGMENT-DEBTOR—RESPONDENT.

Presidency Towns Insolvency Act (III of 1909), s. 106—Order for summary adjudication—Appeal—Leave of Court—Refusal of leave—Appellate Court, power of.

An order under section 106 of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, directing an estate to be administered in a summary manner is not appealable except with the leave of the Court, and where such leave is refused, the proper course is to apply to the Appellate Court for special leave. Where in such a case a question of principle is involved, the Appellate Court has inherent jurisdiction to hear the appeal, but it will not interfere with a finding on a question of fact.

Mr. Jinnah, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal which is, on the face of it, not competent. The facts are that one Stanley Dobson filed a petition on September 12, 1921, in this Court praying that he might be adjudged insolvent. On that petition an order for adjudication was made on the same day. On September 19, 1921, the Official Assignee reported that the property of the insolvent was not likely to exceed in value Rs. 3,000, and applied that the Court might order the estate to be administered in a summary manner, pursuant to section 106 of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act. The order which, I presume, was made on that application does not appear on the record. On April 4, 1922, a creditor of the insolvent obtained a Rule calling upon the insolvent to show cause why the order of adjudication made on September 12, 1921, on his petition should not be annulled for want of jurisdiction, or in the alternative, why he should not be ordered to pay Rs. 175 per month to the Official Assignee for the benefit of his creditors. The insolvent filed an affidavit against the rule in which he stated that he, as well as all persons working on the Rutlam section of the Bombay, Baroda and Central India Railway were engaged and dismissed from Bombay by that Railway which had its head-quarters at Bombay, their pay-sheets were submitted to and sanctioned in Bombay and they received orders from Bombay. He further stated that leave was sanctioned at Bombay and occasionally he was booked to run from Rutlam to Bombay and also from Bombay to Rutlam. The Rule was discharged by the learned Judge. He was of opinion that the work which the insolvents did came within section 11 (c) of the Act, that, in other words, they worked within the limits of the Ordinary Original Civil Jurisdiction of this Court, and that they did that work personally, and they did it for gain.

Now, under section 106 (a) of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act (III of 1909) in a summary insolvency, no appeal is allowed from any order of the Court, except by leave of the Court. The creditor applied for leave and this was refused by the learned Judge. He said:—

“I confess that the question does not seem to me to be of that importance to the petitioning creditor or to anybody else which would justify me in prolonging this litigation. Mr. Daver says that somewhere about 1904, the position of Engine-drivers was considered with reference to this point and certain conclusions were arrived at; but these authorities, if any, are not produced before me, and although this is a third time this case has come before me, I am still without any definite authority in insolvency to support the petitioning creditor's application.”

As leave to appeal was refused, no appeal to this Court was competent. The only course open to the creditor was to apply to this Court by petition for special leave to appeal. If this appeal were dismissed summarily on the ground that it was not competent, it might still be open to the creditor to file such a petition, and so we think it desirable to look upon this appeal as a petition praying for special leave. Then we can consider the question whether an appeal should be admitted from the original order of the lower Court. It might be said that, at first sight, the wording of the section 106 (a) excludes entirely the jurisdiction of this Court to question the decision of the lower Court. But I should not like to go so far as to hold that our inherent powers are altogether ousted and, if authority were necessary, a reference can be made to the decision in Ex parte Gilchrist; In re Armstrong (1). That was a case under the English Bankruptcy Act of 1882. An order had been made by the County Court Judge. It was reversed by the order of the Divisional Court. Under section 104 of the Act of 1882 leave would have to be granted by the Divisional Court before an appeal could be filed to the Court of Appeal. Leave was refused and special leave was granted by the Court of Appeal. Lord Esher said at page 527:—

“The Divisional Court refused an application for leave to appeal from their decision, but leave to appeal was given by this Court. The jurisdiction which the Judges of the Divisional Court have to give or to refuse leave to appeal from their own decisions is a very delicate one. Merely to say that they are satisfied that their decision is right; is not; I venture to suggest, a sufficient reason for refusing leave to appeal, when the question involved is one of principle and they have decided it for the first time. If that was carried to its legitimate conclusion, they ought to refuse leave to appeal in every case.”

In most cases where an order has been made that the estate should be administered in a summary manner, it would be unlikely that any important question of principle would arise in the course of the administration. But if such a question did arise, the Judge in all probability would not refuse leave to appeal.

However, in this case the only question was whether the petitioner did work personally and did it for gain within the limits of the Ordinary Original Civil Jurisdiction of the Court and that was a question which was to be decided on the evidence before the Court. Though it might be a mixed question of law and fact, it was mainly a question of fact. Therefore, we see no reason why we should hold in this case that the Judge was wrong in refusing leave Mortgage, usufructuary—Further charge—Stipulation to convert mortgage into sale—Clog on redemption—Foreclosure decree—Redemption decree, whether included—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), ss. 58, 67.

Where a deed creates a further charge on a property usufructually mortgaged and provides, among other things, that if, after the expiry of a certain period, the principal amount together with interest and compound interest due under it is not paid, the original deed shall, by virtue of the deed of further charge, be deemed to be an absolute sale-deed and the case provided for actually occurs, that is, the debt as stipulated is not paid, the original deed becomes, not indeed an absolute sale-deed, for "once a mortgage, is always a mortgage," but a deed in which the right of foreclosure is added to the rights already possessed by the usufructuary mortgagee. [p. 264, col. 1.]

An agreement in a deed of further charge that, as long as the debt due under the deed is not paid off, the mortgagor shall not be entitled to redeem the property mortgaged under the original deed, is binding and not to be regarded as coming under the doctrine forbidding a clog on redemption. The doctrine of clog relates only to dealings, which take place between the parties at the time when the original contract of mortgage is entered into. Parties are at liberty to deal subsequently with each other, so as to vary the terms upon which redemption of the original mortgage can be had. [p. 264, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT.—This is a first appeal by a defendant. The suit was one for foreclosure and was brought on foot of four deeds. These four deeds are in pairs. Two of them were executed by the present appellant Sangat Bakhsh Singh and the other two by his brother Gur Narain.

In the present appeal we are concerned with the deeds executed by Sangat Bakhsh Singh only. Gur Narain is dead and the suit has been dismissed as regards his sons defendants Nos 2 and 3, but a decree for foreclosure has been granted in respect of the two deeds executed by Sangat Bakhsh Singh defendant No. 1 appellant.

The first of these deeds is dated 11th September 1901. It is to secure a debt of Rs. 5,500. The interest is fixed at 8-annas per cent. per mensem. The property given in security is an 8-annas share in certain property extending over several villages. That mortgage is usufructuary. The deed conveys no right of foreclosure, or of sale and there is no period. Accounts were to be taken annually and the mortgage could be redeemed in any year in the month of Jeth.

The second deed (plaintiff's Exhibit No. 3) is dated 17th September 1901, only six days later. It will be found on page 12 of Part III. It is described as a deed of further charge and, there is a detail of property added with this description "Details of mortgaged property amounting to 8 annas in the villages detailed below in Pargana Inhauna, District Rae Bareilly, mentioned in the mortgaged-deed dated 11th September 1901, on which further loan is taken." It is plain from these words, and it is not now disputed by the appellant, that this deed creates a charge on the same property, which was usufructuarly mortgaged. The debt secured was a fresh advance of Rs. 2,000. The rate of interest was the same 8-annas per cent. per mensem. There were three covenants :—

The first clause is as follows:—

"That as long as I do not pay off the principal and interest due on this deed of further charge, I shall not be entitled to redeem the shares mortgaged under the deed of 11th September 1901."

The second clause provides for compound interest with six-monthly rests. The provision in the usufructuary mortgage was different. We shall have to discuss it lower down. The third clause, which is erroneously numbered 4 in Exhibit 3, is as follows:—

"That in case I do not pay the six-monthly instalment of interest I shall pay the principal along with the interest and compound interest in a lump sum in 6 years. If on the stipulated period I do not pay the principal amount together with interest and compound interest thereon, then on the expiry of the said period the original deed, dated 11th September 1901, shall, by virtue of this deed of further charge, be deemed an absolute sale-deed. I have, therefore, executed this deed of further charge so that it may serve as an authority and be of use in time of need."

The first question is one of construction. The case provided for in the clause is what has actually occurred. The 6 years expired on 17th September 1907, and the deed of usufructuary mortgage dated 11th September 1901, became by virtue of this covenant, not indeed an absolute sale-deed for "once a mortgage always a mortgage," but a deed in which the right of foreclosure was added to the rights already possessed by the usufructuary mortgagee.

As regards the effect of the first clause it must be remembered that when a decree is made for foreclosure the form the decree takes is this (Civil Procedure Code App. D. Form No. 6). First there is a declaration of the amount due under the mortgage. It is then decreed that if the mortgagor pays this amount by a certain date he will get back his property. It is then decreed that if he fails to pay by that date he shall be debarred of all right to redeem.

A foreclosure decree, therefore always includes in itself a decree for redemption. In this case the first clause takes effect and the decree will be to redeem on payment of the money due under both mortgages. This is the decree that has been given.

It is probable that the parties inadvertently omitted one clause from Exhibit 3. As I have said the third clause is numbered 4. In the corresponding deed which was executed on the same day by Gur Narain brother of Sangat Bakhsh there are four clauses. The first is the same as the first here, the second is that "I shall pay the original sum together with principal and interest due hereunder." That is a clause for consolidation of the mortgages. But the construction of the two deeds is identical. The insertion of this clause makes the construction easier, but it adds nothing. Even without that clause, the mortgages in suit are consolidated by the effect of the first clause of Exhibit 3.

The next question is, whether the agreement entered into between the parties is in contravention of the law. As regards the first clause there is a current of decisions in this Court that such a covenant as this is binding and is not to be regarded as coming under the doctrine forbidding a clog on redemption: Harihar Bakhsh Singh v. Bhawani Singh (1), in which it was said on page 101 "The doctrine of clog relates only to dealings which take place between the parties at the time when the original contract of mortgage is entered into. Parties are at liberty to deal subsequently with each other so as to vary the terms upon which redemption of the original mortgage can be had;" Abhai Narain Tiwari v. Mata Prasad Singh (2), in which the authorities are referred to; Naunidh Lal v. Mahadeo Singh (3).

The only case cited to us on the other side was Mohammad Sher Khan v. Raja Seth

(1) 39 Ind. Cas. 593; 20 O. C. 97.

Swami Dayal (4). In that case the facts were that the mortgage itself provided a period of 5 years. It was stipulated that if the entire amount of the money is not paid at the end of this period the mortgagee would have the option of taking possession of the mortgaged property for a period of 12 years, and that during these 12 years the mortgagor would not have the right of redemption. The money was not repaid and the mortgagee brought a suit for possession and obtained possession. Then the mortgagor filed a suit for redemption and was resisted under the clause in the mortgage-deed. This Court dismissed his suit but the Privy Council reversed this decision and decreed it on the ground that he could not be deprived of his right conferred by section 60 to redeem the property. That case can be distinguished from the case before us on the ground that the clog on redemption was contained in the mortgage-deed itself, whereas in the present case we have a subsequent contract in consideration of a further advance. That distinction was emphasised in Harthar Bakhsh Singh v. Bhawan Singh (1) See also Salt v. Northampton (Marquess), (5); Noakes v. Rice (6). It would appear, therefore, that the agreement stands good in law.

This disposes of the first three grounds of appeal. The second ground which is that the deed dated 17th September 1901, did not create any charge on the property in suit has been abandoned. The first three grounds, as I have said, fail.

The fourth ground relates to post diem interest on the second deed dated 17th September 1901. The argument is that, according to the third covenant if the amount is not paid at the end of 6 years, the earlier deed is to become a deed of absolute sale. It is argued that when this happens the payment of interest on this deed, would also cease. It is difficult to follow the argument. As a rule a man who lends money on interest expects to get interest until the money is repaid. There seems no reason to attribute to the parties an intention that interest was to cease at the end of the stipulated period. There are certainly no words to that effect in plaintiffs's Exhibit 3 at page 12. This ground of appeal also fails.

Issues Nos. 5 to 9 impugn the accounts filed by the mortgagee on the basis of which the decree was passed. In order to see on what basis accounts ought to be taken we have to look to the deed itself (plaintiff's Exhibit 1 on page 4 of Part III), and to section 76 of the Transfer of Property Act. In the deed it is provided that the mortgagee was to realise the rental from the tenants. He was to pay the Government revenue, the village expenses and Rs. 50 as pay to the servant making the collections, and appropriate the balance towards the interest. Accounts in this form have been submitted. The appellant claims that the decree ought to have been passed upon the gross rental and not upon the actual receipts. He appeals to clause 4 of the deed which is as follows:—

"That if I, the mortgagor, do in any year interfere in the matter of specified collections or disturb the mortgagee in making collections, or the amount is not realised from the tenants through Court, all that loss shall be borne by me, the mortgagor, the mortgagee having no concern with the same." He wishes to interpret this clause to mean that accounts shall be based not on collections but on the rent-roll, the mortgagee being entitled to make deductions only if the mortgagor interferes or if he himself brings his suit against a tenant and then fails to realise the money on the decree. But in face of clause (h) of section 76 (which contains as saving of contract between the parties as clauses (c) and (d) do) such an agreement would not be lawful. The point, however, is of no importance for the respondent's Counsel has satisfied us that the Subordinate Judge was right in holding that the mortgagor would be a loser if he were given a decree based on the rent-roll as stated by him. The mortgagee's accounts are detailed and there seems no reason to doubt that they are accurate. They represent full and good collections and they form a proper basis for the decree.

A point is made of sewai items such as grass, fish, timber, etc. It is true that these are mentioned in the deed and that some evidence was offered that there were some small actual receipts of sewai. But that evidence does not amount to proof that the mortgagee did, in fact, actually receive any income from this source, and in the deed itself, although in the preamble to the deed there is a long enumeration of sewai items, clause 3, which provides that the collections are to be appropriated towards the interest, speaks only of the rent of tenants and omits all mention of sewai. There are no materials before the Court to justify an alteration in the amount found due under the mortgage under this head.

The tenth ground relates to limitation. It was abandoned. The suit was brought within 12 years of the expiry of the period given in the deed.

The eleventh ground which impugned the adoption of the plaintiff as son of the original mortgagee was abandoned.

The appellants were allowed to add two other grounds of appeal but one of these was abandoned. The remaining ground is that the plaintiff-respondent is not entitled to interest upon interest in the deed dated 11th September 1901. The clause on this point is clause 7 which is as follows:—

"That every year in the month of Jeth, the mortgagee shall on rendering accounts, pay the surplus money after payment of the Government revenue, village-expenses, etc., and the interest, to me, the mortgagor under a receipt and shall realise the deficiency, if any, in the amount of interest from the other property of me, the mortgagor by suit. If the mortgagee does not choose to file a suit, I, the mortgagor, shall be liable to pay the deficit amount, principal with interest at the time of redemption."

Now the words "the deficit amount, principal with interest" do not mean the principal money due under the mortgage. The deficit amount is itself a deficiency in interest. This clause, therefore, does provide for the payment of interest upon interest. The calculation is correctly set forth in the accounts submitted along with the plaint on pages 6 to 8 of Part I. Each annual deficit in the receipts from the property is set forth and simple interest is added from the date when the balance accrued to the date of institution. This is an entirely correct way of framing the account.

Thus all the grounds of appeal fail. The appeal is dismissed with costs.

THE EAGLE STAR AND BRITISH DOMINIONS INSURANCE COMPANY—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT

versus

DINANATH & HEMRAJ—DEFENDANT
—RESPONDENT.

Construction of document—Policy of Fire Insurance—Provision to refer dispute as to amount due to arbitration—Rejection of claim—Cause of action.

A Fire Insurance Policy provided, inter alia, that if a claim made by the insured was rejected, and an action or suit not commenced within three months after such rejection all benefit under the policy would be forfeited, and, further, that if any difference arose as to the amount of any loss or damage, such difference should be referred to arbitration, and that it should be a condition precedent to any right of action or suit upon the policy, that the award of the arbitrator should be first obtained. In a suit to recover the amount of loss suffered in consequence of the destruction of plaintiff's goods by fire, it appeared that, after some correspondence between the parties, the Insurance Company informed the plaintiff that it was their considered opinion that, under the conditions of the policy, they could not admit liability on the policy, and the question was, whether there had been a rejection of plaintiff's claim by the Company, and whether such rejection gave to the plaintiff a right of action, or whether no cause of action could accrue to the plaintiff until the amount of loss had been ascertained by arbitration:

Held, that there had been a rejection of the plaintiff's claim by the Company, and that such rejection gave him a cause of action in order that it might be decided by the Court whether such rejection was right or wrong, and it was only in the event of that question being decided in his favour that it would become necessary that the amount of loss or damage should be ascertained. [p. 269, col. 2.]

Appeal from the decision of Mr. Justice Kajiji.

Mr. Binning (with him Mr. Jimnah), for the Appellant.

Mr. Taraporewala (with him Messrs. Kanga, Advocate General, and Inverarity), for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs filed this suit to recover from the defendant Insurance Company the amount of loss or damage, which, they said, they suffered in consequence of the fire, which had occurred to the godown at Bapty Road, in which there were goods, belonging to the plaintiffs, which had been insured with the defendant Company for Rs. 2,50,000.

The relevant clauses in the policy for the purpose of this appeal are clauses 13 and 18.

Clause 13 says:—

"If the claim be in any respect fraudulent, or if any false declaration be made or used in support thereof, or if any fraudulent means or devices are used by the insured or any one acting on his behalf to obtain any benefit under this policy, or if the loss or damage be occasioned by the wilful act, or with the connivance of the insured, or if the insured, or any one acting on his behalf shall hinder or obstruct the Company in doing any of the acts referred to in condition 12, or if the claim be made and rejected and an action or suit be not commenced within three months after such rejection, or (in case of an arbitration taking place in pursuance of the 18th condition of this policy) within three months after the arbitrator or arbitrators or umpire shall have made their award, all benefit under this policy shall be forfeited."

"Clause 18 is set out as follows:—

"If any difference arises as to the amount of any loss or damage such difference shall independently of all other questions be referred to the decision of an arbitrator, to be appointed in writing by the parties in difference, or if they cannot agree upon a single arbitrator, to the decision of two disinterested persons as arbitrators, of whom one shall be appointed in writing by each of the parties within two calendar months after having been required so to do in writing by the other party. In case either party shall refuse or fail to appoint an arbitrator within two calendar months, after receipt of notice in writing requiring an appointment, the other party shall be at liberty to appoint a sole arbitrator and, in case of disagreement between the arbitrators the difference shall be referred to the decision of an umpire, who shall have been appointed by them in writing before entering on the reference and who shall sit with the arbitrators and preside at their meetings. The death of any party shall not revoke or affect the authority or powers of the arbitrator, or arbitrators or umpire respectively, and in the event of the death of an arbitrator or umpire, another shall in each case be appointed in his stead by the party or arbitrators (as the case may be) by whom the arbitrator or umpire so dying was appointed. The costs of the reference and of the award shall be in the discretion of the arbitrators, arbitrators or umpire making the award. And it is hereby expressly stipulated and declared that it shall be a condition precedent to any right of action or suit upon this policy that the award by such arbitrator, arbitrators or umpire of the amount of the loss or damage if disputed shall be first obtained."

The fire occurred on March 21, 1921, and notice was given by the plaintiffs on the 22nd. Correspondence ensued, but I need not refer to it beyond pointing out that it continued from March 1921 until January 1922. Clearly, it was the defendants' case that there were disputes between the parties other than disputes with regard to the amount of loss or damage which the plaintiffs had suffered owing to the fire. On January 6, the plaintiffs wrote as follows:—

"We beg to draw your attention to condition 18 of the policy which provides that in case of difference as to the amount of loss or damage suffered by our clients such difference should be referred to arbitration. Our clients are prepared to go to arbitration if you intimate to our clients that the difference has arisen between our respective clients as to the amount of loss or damage suffered by our clients. If we do not receive any information from you within three days, from the receipt hereof by you that, the difference is as to the amount of loss or damage our clients will have no alternative but to file a suit against your clients at their risk as to costs."

In reply to that the defendants wrote on January 7, 1922, as follows:—

"If you will again refer to the condition you will see that each party must appoint an arbitrator within two calendar months having been required to do so in writing by the other party and, in case either party shall refuse or fail to appoint an arbitrator within two calendar months after the receipt of the notice in writing requiring an appointment the other party shall be at liberty to appoint a sole arbitrator. It appears that under the above condition our clients are entitled to a period of two calendar months from the time when they are called upon to appoint an arbitrator within which to consider such appointment. We agree that there is a difference as to the amount of any loss or damage but we think there may also be other questions involved."

On January 10, 1922, the plaintiffs wrote:—

"We shall thank you to let us know what other questions your clients say are involved in the matter in addition to the dispute as to the amount of loss or damage."

The defendants replied on January 12th, 1922:—

"We are in receipt of your letter of the 10th instant and in reply we have to say that our clients do not agree upon the amount claimed and further that it is their carefully considered opinion that, under the conditions of the policy they cannot yet admit liability on the policy and they also point out that under condition 18 of the policy the ascertainment of the amount of loss by arbitration is precedent to any suit being filed against them."

The defendants filed a very contentious written statement. Their main defence, was that under the terms of the policy it was a condition precedent to suit that there should be an award. Then the plaintiffs took out a summons on July 17, 1922, asking for reliefs of so varied a nature that the greatest care was necessary in passing orders upon it. The plaintiffs asked (1) that the defendant Company should disclose and produce for inspection of the plaintiffs the report made by the Surveyors appointed by the defendant Company, (2) that the suit might be set down on board for trial of preliminary issues whether the defendant Company by their solicitors' letter of January 12, 1922, did not reject the plaintiffs' claim, and whether in the events that had happened the plaintiffs were not entitled to file the suit without obtaining the award as to the amount of loss or damage sustained by them, and (3) that the defendant Company should give particulars for the other questions which they alleged were involved in addition to the dispute as to the amount of loss or damage. As I have so often pointed out, when it is necessary before an order for discovery can be made, that certain questions in the suit should be first decided, the proper order to make is that the suit should be set down for the settlement of the issues. The Judge will then be in a position to decide which of the issues are necessary to be determined before the question of inspection or discovery can be decided. The same procedure should be followed when one party suggests that the suit can be decided on the hearing of a preliminary issue. On the summons an order was made that the suit should be set down for trial of the preliminary issues (1) whether the defendant Company by their solicitors' letter of January 12 1922, rejected the plaintiffs' claim under the policy, and (2) whether in the events that had happened the plaintiffs were entitled to file the suit without obtaining an award as to the amount of loss or damage sustained by them, and, on the defendants stating through their Counsel that there were no other questions involved except as to the amount of loss or damage sustained by the plaintiffs, no directions were considered necessary as to the particulars asked for with reference to the allegation in paragraph 8. of the written statement. On the trial of these issues the Judge came to the conclusion (1) that the defendant Company did reject the claim of the plaintiffs by their letter of January 12, 1922, and (2) that the suit was maintainable.

On reading the correspondence which lasted from March 21, 1921, to January 12, 1922, it is obvious that the defendants were extremely unwilling to go to arbitration, so that the amount of loss or damage which had been suffered by the plaintiffs might be ascertained, and had been all along endeavouring to find out some ground on which they might dispute their liability on the policy. Even when they were asked to go to arbitration on the question of loss, they pointed out that they had two months under the policy to appoint an arbitrator. Then they said that besides the question as to the amount of loss or damage other questions were involved which could not be tried by arbitration. Then, finally, when they were asked what those questions were they could only say that it was their carefully considered opinion that under the conditions of the policy they could not admit liability on the policy. The defendants then clearly stated that there were questions involved in the case which had to be decided before they would admit that they were liable to pay the amount of loss which would be ascertained by arbitration. And, in my opinion, the defendants by that letter of January 12, 1922, rejected the plaintiffs' claim.

The next question is, whether such rejection gave to the plaintiffs a right of action, or whether as now claimed by the defendants no right of action could accrue to the plaintiffs until the amount of loss had been ascertained by arbitration. The appellants relied on Woodall v. Pearl Assurance Company (1) in that case condition II was :—

"If any question shall arise touching this policy or the liability of the Company thereunder or the extent or nature of such liability or otherwise howsoever in connection herewith then the assured... may refer and shall be bound... to refer the same to arbitration, and no person shall be entitled to bring or to maintain any action or proceeding on this policy except for the sum awarded under such arbitration."

It was there held that the making of an award was a condition precedent to a right of action. But the terms of the policy in this case are entirely different and are almost identical with the terms of the policy in Jureidini v. National British and Irish Millers Insurance Company,

Limited (2) in which it was held that the repudiation of the claim on a ground going to the root of the contract precluded the Company from pleading the arbitration clause as a bar to an action to enforce the claim. The words in clause 12 of the policy in that case were, as far as I can see, the same as the words in clause 13 in the suit policy. It is true that the defendants there resisted the claim on the ground of fraud. But in clause 13 there are various contingencies set out, which if established entitled the insured to bring an action without an award having been made by arbitrators. One of these contingencies is "if the claim be made and rejected" which if established give a right of action, the period of limitation provided for the suit being fixed at three months from the date of the rejection. While it is also provided that where arbitration takes place in pursuance of condition 18 of the policy, three months' time should be allowed for a suit to be brought after the award has been made. Therefore, it is quite obvious that a right of action accrued after the Company rejected the claim. Naturally that question would have first to be decided by suit as under clause 18 that question could never have been referred to arbitration. Therefore, when the defendants had rejected the claim, the plaintiffs had a right of action in order that it might be decided by the Court whether such rejection was right or wrong, and it was only in the event of that question being decided in favour of the plaintiffs that it would become necessary that the amount of loss or damage should be ascertained. The only question that might then arise would be, whether, after the Court had decided that the rejection of the plaintiffs' claim by the defendant Company was wrong, the amount of loss or damage would have to be ascertained by the Court or by means of arbitration or whether the arbitration clause had gone with the repudiation as Lord Haldane thought it would: see Jureidini v. National British and Irish Insurance Company, Limited (2). That is not a question before us now. The suit was only set down for hearing, for trial of the two issues which were contained in the summons, and as a result of the findings on those issues the hearing of the suit would continue in the ordinary course. We do not quite understand how the learned Judge came to make an order that the suit should be stayed, the parties being referred to arbitration as provided in clause 18 of the policy, because it was not competent for the Judge to deal with the question of arbitration on the summons. No doubt, when the order was made on the summons, the defendants stated through their Counsel that there were no other questions involved except as to the amount of loss or damage sustained by the plaintiffs, but that was on the question whether an order should be made for particulars. Whether the defendants could raise any other questions now in the face of that statement need not be considered. The appeal with regard to the decision on the issues set down for trial must be dismissed, but we set aside the order of the Court below that the suit should be stayed.

An appropriation by the licensor of the land licensed, to any use inconsistent with the enjoyment of the license, works a revocation, and the licensee may maintain an action for damages against the licensor for breach of contract in unlawfully revoking it. [p. 274, cols. 1 & 2.]

A license for valuable consideration and accompanied by the grant of a profit à prendre, is a license coupled with an interest and is not revocable. [p. 274, col. 2.]

Though every breach of duty arising out of contract gives rise to an action for damages, without proof of actual damage, the amount of damages recoverable is, as a general rule, governed by the extent of the actual damage sustained, in consequence of the defendant's act. In cases admitting of proof of such damage, the amount must be established with reasonable certainty. But this does not mean that absolute certainty is required; nor, in all cases, is there a necessity for direct evidence as to the amount. [p. 271, col. 2; p. 272, col. 1.]

Damages are not uncertain for the reason that the loss sustained is incapable of proof with the certainty of mathematical demonstration or is to some extent contingent and incapable of precise measurement. Certainty to reasonable extent is necessary, and the meaning of that language is that the loss or damage must be so far removed from speculation or doubt as to create in the minds of intelligent and reasonable men the belief that it was most likely to follow from the breach of the contract and was a probable and direct result thereof. [p. 272, col. 1.]

Where the defendant has, by his own wrong, put it out of the plaintiff's power to prove the quantum of damages exactly, the presumption is against the defendant, and the burden is upon him to reduce the amount from the highest possible estimate. [p. 273, col. 1.]

In actions for breach of contract, where there has undoubtedly been an infringement of a right, nominal damages are recoverable, even though no actual damage can be proved. [p. 273, col. 2.]

Where the grant of a license entitles the licensee to the exclusive right to catch elephants within certain defined tracts for a specified period, it does not follow as a matter of course that the licensee would be entitled to exclusive occupation of the entire territory during such time. JUDGMENT.

Mookerjee, J.—This is an appeal by the plaintiff in a suit, instituted against the

KINGSLEY V. SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA.

Secretary of State for India, for damages in respect of a license for catching elephants in Assam. On the 16th June, 1915, the plaintiff, Frederick Thomas Kingsley, a European British subject, obtained from the Deputy Commissioner, Goalpara, a license to catch elephants in Goalpara Mahals Nos. I and II and Bhutan Mahals Nos. I and II, for the period from 1st October, 1915 to 31st March, 1916 and from 1st October, 1916 to 31st March, 1917. The plaintiff paid a consideration of Rs. 66,000 for the license. The plaintiff captured 279 elephants in the first year and 342 elephants in the second year. The case for the plaintiff was that he could not catch as many elephants as he would have done, but for the wrongful acts of the officers of the defendant. His grievance was three-fold; first, the operations were delayed by reason of the failure of the defendant to provide him with the requisite pass-port; secondly, the removal of captured elephants was hindered by reason of wrongful refusal of the officers of the Forest Department to accept the prescribed royalty and to issue the transit passes; and thirdly, that the depot at Hail River and the whole of the Goalpara Mahals were wrongfully burnt out under the orders of the officers of the Forest Department. The damages under these three heads were claimed as follows:—

(i) Delay in commencement of operations ..	Rs. 5,800
(ii) Hindrance in the removal of elephants ..	Rs. 5,000
(iii) Loss due to fire—
(a) Hail Depot ..	Rs. 951
(b) Goalpara Mahal 1915-16 ..	Rs. 1,21,500
(c) Goalpara Mahal 1916-17 ..	Rs. 23,400

The Subordinate Judge has assessed Rs. 1,537-8-0 under the first head and has refused the claim in respect of the other two heads. The plaintiff has appealed against this decree, and a memorandum of cross-objections has been filed on behalf of the defendant. The matters in controversy have thus been re-opened in their entirety.

As regards the first point, we are of opinion that the plaintiff had a cause of action against the defendant. The plaintiff, who acquired the right to the license as the highest bidder at a public auction, was a European British subject. He could not cross the inner line into the Bhutan Mahals without the special sanction of the Government of India. The officer of the defendant should consequently have been ready to provide the plaintiff with the requisite inner line pass. It is an elementary rule that the grantor of license is under an obligation to place the licensee in a position to enjoy the license. The result was that the reference to the Government of India took some time, and the plaintiff was not enabled to enter the Bhutan territory till about the 15th October at the earliest. It cannot be reasonably urged that the plaintiff might have managed the business through his agents. The answer is that he was entitled to be present and to start the operations personally. There is thus no escape from the position that the operations were delayed for two weeks, by reason of default on the part of the officers of the defendant. The plaintiff is consequently entitled to damages. The Subordinate Judge has held that the damage should be assessed on the basis of what he calls the "actual loss" sustained by the plaintiff rather than the "profit" the plaintiff would have made during this period. On this basis, which ignores the fundamental principle of the law of compensation, formulated by the Roman jurist, lucrum cessans, damnum emergens—loss suffered, gain prevented—the Subordinate Judge has allowed the plaintiff a refund of the license-fee during this period and the expenses incurred in connection with the stockades. This he has assessed at Rs. 1,537-8-0. The plaintiff, on the other hand, urged in the Court below, and the argument has been repeated here, that the damages should be assessed on the basis of the probable number of elephants which might have been captured during the period. The Subordinate Judge describes the assessment of damages on this basis as purely speculative, because there is no certainty as to the number or value of the elephants which might have been captured. We are not prepared to agree with the Subordinate Judge on this point. It may be conceded that though every breach of duty arising out of contract gives rise to an action for damages, without proof of actual damage, Marzetti v. Williams (1), Embrey v. Owen (2), the amount of damages recoverable is, as a general rule, governed by the extent of the actual damage sustained in consequence of the defendant's act: Hiori v. L. & N. W. Ry. Co. (3). In cases admitting of proof of such damage, the amount must be established with reasonable certainty: The Commerce (4). But this does not mean that absolute certainty is required; nor, in all cases, is there a necessity for direct evidence as to the amount. Damages are not uncertain for the reason that the loss sustained is incapable of proof with the certainty of mathematical demonstration, or is to some extent contingent and incapable of precise measurement. As Harlan, J., observed in delivering the judgment of the Supreme Court of the United States in Hetzel v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. (5), certainty to reasonable extent is necessary, and the meaning of that language is that the loss or damage must be so far removed from speculation or doubt as to create in the minds of intelligent and reasonable men the belief that it was most likely to follow from the breach of the contract and was a probable and direct result thereof. To the same effect is the decision in Morris v. United States (6), that where absolute certainty is impossible, judgment of fair men as to damages directly resulting governs. The true doctrine lies between the two opposing extreme views which are well set out in the following judicial pronouncements, made in jurisdictions where damages are left to be assessed by juries:

Dupue, J.—Observed as follows in Wolcott v. Mount (7):

"It must not be supposed that...mere speculative profits, such as might be conjectured to have been the probable results of an adventure which was defeated by the breach of the contract sued on, the gains from which are entirely conjectural, with respect to which no means exist of ascertaining, even approximately, the probable results, can, under any circumstances, be brought within the range of damages recoverable. The cardinal principle in relation to the damages to be compensated for on the breach of a contract is, that, the plaintiff must establish the quantum of his loss by evidence from which the Jury will be able to estimate the extent of his injury, will exclude all such elements of injury as are incapable of being ascertained by the usual rules of evidence to a reasonable degree of certainty."

Christiancy, J.—Observed as follows in Allison v. Chandler (8):

"Shall the injured party be allowed to recover no damages (or merely nominal) because he cannot show the exact amount with certainty, though he is ready to show, to the satisfaction of the Jury, that he has suffered large damages by the injury? Certainty, it is true, would be thus attained; but it would be the certainty of injustice. Juries are allowed to act upon probable and inferential, as well as direct and positive proof. And when, from the nature of the case, the amount of the damages cannot be estimated with certainty, or only a part of them can be so estimated, we can see no objection to placing before the Jury all the facts and circumstances of the case, having any tendency to show damages, or their probable amount; so as to enable them to make the most intelligible and probable estimate which the nature of the case will permit."

In the case before us, the plaintiff has proved that he has on an average captured one elephant per stockade per week, which would make six elephants in two weeks in the three stockades concerned; on this basis, he urges that the damage should be calculated on the aggregate price of six possible captures. The Subordinate Judge has rejected this contention on the ground that there is no certainty that, during the period in question, any elephant at all would have been captured. If this view were well-founded, no damages could be assessed where a person had been dispossessed from a fishery or even a tract of land. It might well be argued that there was no certainty that if the owner had continued in occupation, he would have been able to catch fish or grow crops. Yet, when a person has been forcibly prevented from fishing in public waters, he may give evidence of the average quantity of fish caught in the waters from which he has been excluded by the defendants and the probable value thereof; this is taken as a fair measure of the damage which he has suffered from being deprived of the opportunity to make a catch of fish. Similarly, in the case of dispossession of land, the mesne profits are based on an estimate of the average outturn of crops, though there is no guarantee that in a particular year the entire crop might not have been destroyed by drought or flood, even if the land had remained in the occupation of the rightful owner. It must further be remembered that in the extreme case where the defendant has, by his own wrong, put it out of the plaintiff's power to prove the quantum of damage exactly, the presumption is against the defendant, and the burden is upon him to reduce the amount from the highest possible estimate. Mr. Bonnerjee has urged, in the words used by Lord Macnaghten in Williams v. Giddy (9), that if any more exact standard were set up, "plain folk would call it a mockery, a sham, a pretence." This is emphatic language; but the substance of the matter is, that only such approximation to certainty is required as would satisfy the mind of a prudent and impartial person; see the decision of the House of Lords in Gracie v. Argentino (10). Besides, if the method adopted by the Subordinate Judge were approved, the plaintiff would be entitled to nothing beyond a return of the purchase-money and refund of the expense actually incurred, even if he were deprived of all enjoyment of the right granted to him. We are of opinion that in the present case the damage under the first head should have been assessed on the basis claimed by the plaintiff and Rs. 5,800 should have been awarded instead of Rs. 1,537-8-0.

(10) (1889) 14 App. Cas. 519; 59 L. J. Adm. 17; 61 L. T. 706; 6 Asp. M. C. 433.

As regards the second point, the Subordinate Judge has correctly held that the plaintiff has a cause of action against the defendant. The Deputy Commissioner directed that royalty be received from the plaintiff at the Haltugaon Forest Office and the transit passes issued therefrom. The Deputy Conservator of Forests did not, however, carry out the instructions. The result was that the Range Officer at Haltugaon declined to receive from the plaintiff Rs. 4,100 on the 2nd January, 1916 and to issue transit passes. The Deputy Commissioner gave the direction in exercise of his lawful authority and his subordinate officers should have carried it out. The plaintiff was thereafter entitled to tender the royalty dues at the Haltugaon Forest Office, and the wrongful refusal on the part of the officer concerned gave the plaintiff a cause of action for damages for breach of contract. But, although the Subordinate Judge has taken this view he has dismissed the claim on the ground that the plaintiff has failed to prove actual damage. The evidence, however, leaves no room for doubt that the plaintiff was seriously inconvenienced, as the elephants were held up, by reason of the refusal of the Forest Officer to receive the royalty tendered and to issue the transit passes. It is no answer to say, that elephants are auctioned off immediately on arrival at the depot; that is the general rule. But it is not proved that this happened with each of the elephants held up on the 2nd January, 1916. Besides, even if the elephants found buyers, the plaintiff would be bound to provide them with transit passes, and if the animals were likely to be detained, the fact would, in the normal course of events, be taken into account in the settlement of the prices offered. We must further remember that in actions for breach of contract, where there has undoubtedly been an infringement of a right, nominal damages are recoverable, even though no actual damage can be proved: Marzetti v. Williams (1), Warre v. Calvert (11), Embrey v. Owen (2), Twyman v. Knowles (12). But we are of opinion that the evidence makes out that the plaintiff did suffer actual damage from the non-receipt of the transit passes, specially as the trained elephants would have to be maintained during the period. In view of the number of elephants (100) detained, and the period of detention (2 weeks), Rs. 1,000 may fairly be assessed as damages under this head.

As regards the third point, the plaintiff has, according to the Subordinate Judge failed to establish that the fires which hampered his operations were due to the action of the forest authorities; in other words, the plaintiff has not shown with reasonable certainty that loss resulted to him from the alleged wrongful act of the defendant. The evidence, which is accurately summarised by the Subordinate Judge, makes it clear that there were accidental fires as also departmental fires. The departmental fires, which are apparently periodical and systematic operations, are considered necessary for purposes of sal timber reproduction. They are as a rule carried out reasonably and properly, and the burnings are conducted under such control and supervision as is practicable in the circumstances. There is little doubt that the elephant-catching operations were, to a large extent, hampered by reason of the fires, whether accidental or departmental. On the one hand, the evidence does not indicate which fires were accidental and which were departmental. On the other hand, it is not made out with certainty that departmental fires, could not have extended beyond the original limits designed, and regarded, outside those areas, as accidental fires of unknown origin. We are, however, not prepared to disagree with the Subordinate Judge that there were extensive accidental fires in addition to the departmental fires, and that the evidence does not establish that the elephants, and if so, how many, were in fact scared away by the departmental fires or that the fodder was destroyed thereby, and if so, to what extent.

But the plaintiff has urged that the defendant could not derogate from his grant and could not, as grantor, interfere with the lawful enjoyment of the right conferred on the licensee. It need not be disputed that an appropriation of the land licensed to any use inconsistent with the enjoyment of the license, works a revocation, and the licensee may maintain an action for damages against the licensor for breach of contract in unlawfully revoking it. It may also be assumed that the license, in the present case, was not revocable; the license was for valuable consideration, was accompanied by the grant of a profit a prendre, and was consequently a license coupled with an interest: Wickham v. Hawker (13), Wood v. Leadbitter (14), Smart v. Jones (15), Hooper v. Clark (16), Kerrison v. Smith (17). It may further be conceded that, prima facie, the grant entitled the plaintiff to the exclusive right to catch elephants within the defined tracts and for the specified period. But it does not follow as a matter of course that the plaintiff would be entitled to exclusive occupation of the entire territory during such time. He has no right, for instance, to hunt animals other than elephants in the reserved forests, nor to fell timber therein. Such rights may, under authority from the Crown, be presumably exercised by other persons, without interfering with the enjoyment of the right created in favour of the plaintiff. We observe there is no express reservation in favour of the Crown as to forest operation by recourse to departmental fires or other methods, and whether such a reservation is implied by usage or custom in the case of grants of this description, has not been investigated. The question might have been of importance, if there were any possibility of proof that the plaintiff did in fact suffer damage from the departmental fires.

But we are by no means satisfied that any useful purpose would be served by a further enquiry into this matter, though the impression is left on our minds, from a perusal of the official correspondence on the record, that the undoubted rights of the plaintiff were not as scrupulously safeguarded as might have been expected. On the record as it stands, it is impossible for us, however, to award the plaintiff damages under the third head; the plaintiff fails here, as well from uncertainty of cause of damage, as from uncertainty of extent of damage.

The result is that the appeal is allowed in part, and the cross-objections disallowed. The decree of the Subordinate Judge is modified, and the amount of damages raised from Rs. 1,537-8-0 to Rs. 6,800. The plaintiff will have his costs in both Courts on this amount where the cost is allowed ad valorem; other costs will be allowed in full. The hearing fee in this Court will be assessed at Rs. 300. The defendant will bear his own costs in both Courts.

Execution of decree—Instalment decree—Entire sum payable on default—Acceptance of instalment after default—Waiver—Limitation, operation of.

Plaintiff obtained a decree on 29th February, 1916, for Rs. 6,562-8-0 payable by monthly instalments of Rs. 50. It was provided that in case of failure to pay any six instalments the whole amount due under the decree would become payable. No payments were made till 9th April 1917 when defendant paid Rs. 5,500; he made a further payment of Rs. 400 on 19th January, 1918. On 27th September, 1919 plaintiff applied to execute the decree for the balance remaining due, but it was objected that, as the whole sum due under the decree became payable in August 1916, by which date there had been a failure to pay six consecutive instalments, the application was barred by limitation. P. however contended that, on account of the payments of 1917 and 1918 a waiver should be inferred by the Court:

Held, that the application was barred by time and that from the mere fact of the payments it could not be inferred that the parties had come to an arrangement that there should be an agreement for a new period of limitation.

First appeal from the decision of the First Class Subordinate Judge, Poona, in Darkhast No. 628 of 1919.

Mr. Coyaje: (with him Mr. J. R. Gharpure), for the Appellants.

Mr. Thakor (with him Mr. P. B. Shingne), for Respondents Nos. 1 and 3.

JUDGMENT.—On February 29th, 1916, an award decree was made whereby the defendants were bound to pay to the plaintiffs Rs. 6,562-8-0 with interest thereon by instalments of Rs. 50 every month. It was provided that in case of default in payment of any six instalments, the whole amount should become due, by sale of the mortgaged property specified in the decree. On September 27th, 1919, the decree-holder put in a Darkhast, and it was objected that his Darkhast was time-barred because by August 1916 there had been a failure to pay six consecutive instalments. Therefore at that date the whole amount of the decree became due. Prima facie the Darkhast being given three years after the date on which the whole amount was recoverable would be time-barred.

It has been suggested that by reason of a payment made on April 9th, 1917, limitation is saved by virtue of section 20 of the Indian Limitation Act. But it is clear that section 20 could have no application, as the payment in question did not appear in the handwriting of the person making the same.

It was further argued that, in the circumstances of this case, the Court should infer a waiver. The only facts pointed out are that, on April 9th, 1917, a payment of Rs. 5,500 was made, and that, on January 19th, 1918, that is to say, eight months afterwards, a payment of Rs. 400 was made, i. e., eight times the instalments due under the decree. But it is impossible from these circumstances alone to infer that the parties came to an arrangement that there should be an agreement for a new period of limitation.

The appellant relies upon Amrit Khanderao v. Govind Ramchandra (1) in which case it was held that, upon the facts there established, a waiver might be inferred. But a perusal of the judgment in that case shows at once that there is no analogy between the facts there found and the facts in the present case. There execution proceedings were taken out from time to time without any objection being taken; and there were other circumstances also from which the Court inferred that, as a matter of fact, there had been a waiver. There is nothing of the kind here, and we are unable to hold that any waiver can be inferred. It follows that the order is correct, and that the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Jurisdiction.—Jurisdiction of Civil Court to declare Revenue Court's decree invalid—Pre-emption decree—Decree-holder obtaining possession privately—Vendee's name not omitted from khewat—Vendee obtaining decree for profits from Revenue Court—Jurisdiction of Civil Court to declare decree inoperative.

When a decree has been passed by a competent Court of exclusive jurisdiction, a Civil Court cannot declare it to be invalid and incapable of execution.

A pre-emptor decree-holder deposited the pre-emption money in Court, but instead of taking possession of the pre-empted property through the Court, took it privately and did not care to have a mutation effected in his favour, with the result that, after a few years, the vendee, whose name continued to appear in the khewat, sued the pre-emptor in a Revenue Court for profits. Upon this the pre-emptor filed a suit in a Civil Court for a declaration that he was the owner of the property and that the vendee had no right to get a decree for profits. The vendee's suit for profits was decreed and about a week later the pre-emptor's claim was also decreed. Again, when the vendee put his decree in execution the pre-emptor filed another suit for a declaration that the vendee had no right to realize profits under the decree of the Revenue Court and that his (pre-emptor's) rights had become absolute under the Civil Court decree. Held, that the pre-emptor's suit did not lie.

Second appeal against a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Aligarh, dated the 4th May 1921.

Mr. S. A. Haidar, for the Appellants.

JUDGMENT.—The facts are briefly as follows:—The plaintiff-respondent Syed Ghulam Husain obtained a decree for pre-emption against the defendants in 1908. He deposited the pre-emption money in Court, but did not proceed further to have mutation of names effected in his favour and to take delivery of possession. It appears, however, that he took possession privately and in the year 1913 the defendants-appellants sued him for profits as their names appeared in the khewat. That suit was withdrawn and then the defendants-appellants filed another suit for profits. The plaintiff then filed a suit for declaration of his title and for a declaration that the defendants had no right to get a decree for profits. This suit was decreed on the 2nd of September, 1916, but in the meanwhile the defendants had obtained a decree for profits on the 26th of August, 1916. The defendants have now put this decree in execution and the plaintiff has filed this suit for a declaration that the defendants have no right to realise profits under the decree of the Revenue Court and the plaintiff's rights have become absolute under the Civil Court decree. The only plea in defence with which I am concerned is that such a suit does not lie. The First Court decreed the claim. On appeal the learned Judge of the lower Appellate Court has modified the decree of the First Court by declaring that the plaintiff is the owner of the property and entitled to profits in question and has further issued an injunction restraining the defendants from executing their decree for profits. The defendants come here in second appeal and the contention pressed before me by their learned Counsel is that such a suit does not lie. In my opinion this contention must prevail. This case is very similar to the case of Mahabir Prasad v. Basant Lal (1) which held that such a suit would not lie inasmuch as the decree was a good decree the defendant being a recorded co-sharer at the date of the decree. Moreover, I think that the principle of the Full Bench case of Mollo v. Ramlal (2) applies to this case with full force. The decree for profits was one solely within the cognizance of a Revenue Court and the remedy open to the plaintiff in this case was either to bring to the notice of the First Court that a civil suit was actually pending in the Civil Court relating to the title of this property, or to have gone up in appeal and brought the fact to the notice of the Appellate Court. He did not do so and it was due to his own laches that all this trouble had arisen. The decree for profits being one passed by the competent Court of exclusive jurisdiction the Civil Court could not declare it to be invalid and incapable of execution. I, therefore, accept the appeal so far that in substitution of the decrees of the two Courts below I confine the decree in the suit for a declaration of the plaintiff's title to the property the right to get profit only. The parties will bear their own costs of this litigation.

(1) 70 Ind. Cas. 444; 17 A. L. J. 1028.

BHAGUBAI TUKARAM JOGDUNDE V. APPAJI SITARAM CHARATHE.

Mr. Y. V. Bhandarkar, for the Appellant
Mr. J. G. Rale, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

Macleod, C. J.—The plaintiff is the sister of one Bala Narayan who died while serving with the regiment of 121st Pioneers. He left a widow called Sogundha. Purporting to exercise her widow's rights she sold the plaintiff property to the second defendant. The plaintiff's suit is to recover this property. The plaintiff mainly relies on the "Kindred Roll and the Names of Heirs" appertaining to the deceased. A true copy has been produced signed by the Officer Commanding of the Depot, and we are entitled to accept that as evidence of the Kindred Roll of the deceased. But the question really is whether by virtue of that document, or any other evidence, in the case, the suit property has passed to the plaintiff. The Trial Court held that the Kindred Roll was a Will embodying the legal declaration of the intentions of the testator with respect to his property, which he desired to be carried into effect after his death. The District Judge held that the document was not proved. I think there he was wrong. But he was right in refusing to accept the view of the Subordinate Judge that Exhibit 23 was a Will. He then considered whether there was any evidence which proved an oral Will of the deceased, and considered that the evidence of Hussein Khan, the only witness on behalf of the plaintiff, was not sufficient to prove an oral Will. Accordingly, the decree of the Trial Court was reversed and the suit was dismissed. It is quite clear that the Kindred Roll, whatever other effect it might have, cannot be treated as a Will. At the most it is evidence that Bala made a declaration before the Military Authorities that Bhagu was his heir or was the person to whom his estate should be made over on behalf of the heir. It is not very clear for what purpose the Kindred Roll is prepared except that the Military Authorities wish to know who are the next-of-kin in case the soldier dies. They want to know to whom the family pension should be paid, and to whom any of the effects of the deceased which may remain in their hands after his death should be handed over. The Military Authorities have nothing whatever to do with the landed property which a soldier may have, and I do not think that, even supposing a soldier informed the Military Authorities that he considered a certain person to be his heir, that statement would be taken as meaning that the soldier intended to make an oral Will disposing of property which would not come into the hands of the Military Authorities after his death. The Kindred Roll, therefore, in my opinion, could only be used for a limited purpose. I do not think there is any evidence in this case that Bala made an oral Will disposing of the suit property in favour of his heirs. The decree, therefore, of the District Judge dismissing the suit was correct and the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Decree affirmed.

JUDGMENT.

Schwabe, C. J.—The facts of this case are, one Venkatasomayajulu died leaving a widow and a son, Subbanna Sastri. The son died 26 years ago unmarried at the age of 25. In 1913, the widow adopted the second defendant with the consent of the sapindas as the son of her late husband. The question to be decided is whether this adoption is good or bad.

That a Hindu widow can adopt a son in order to carry on the line and provide for the due performance of the obsequies

of her husband either with the authority of the husband or with consent of the husband's sapinda, is well-established in this Presidency. It is also well-established that this power of adoption can be exercised on the death of a son or adopted son, as often as occasion arises, but it is also established that there is some limit to the exercise of this power and that it can become exhausted. It is argued in this case that the limit is reached as soon as a son, natural or adopted, either marries or attains an age, which is put alternatively as that of attaining majority, that is 18, or that of attaining full legal capacity to himself adopt a son, which was held in Tarachurn Chatterji v. Surashchunder Mukerji (1) to be sixteen. No direct authority for this proposition can be found in any of the Indian Reports, but it is based on a dictum of the Privy Council in Madana Mohana Ananga Bheema Deo v. Purushothama Ananga Bheema Deo (2) which I will deal with more fully hereafter. The limit to the authority to adopt is stated in the judgment of the Privy Council in Bhoobun Moyee Debia v. Ram Kishore Acharji Chowdhry (3) which judgment was explained and the principle re-affirmed in Padmakumari Debi v. Court of Wards (4) and Thayammal v. Venkatarama (5). The principle to be deduced from these three cases is stated in the judgment of Chandavarkar, J., in the Full Bench case of Ramkrishna v. Shamrao (6) thus: "where a Hindu dies, leaving a widow and a son and that son himself dies leaving a natural born or adopted son or leaving no son but his own widow to continue the line by means of adoption, the power of the former widow is extinguished and can never afterwards be revived." This principle so laid down has the approval of the Privy Council in Madana Mohana Ananga Bheema Deo v. Purushothama Ananga Bheema Deo (2). No subsequent adoption will be allowed, which will divest a right vested by inheritance in some person other than the son or the mother herself as representing the son, so if a son dies leaving either a son or a widow the mother can no longer adopt as the estate is vested in son's son or if there be no son, in his widow, she having a right to adopt a son to her husband. There is direct authority that the limit is not reached when the son dies though of age without leaving a son or widow in Venkappa v. Jivaji Krishna (7), where a son had attained the age of 30 before his death and had married but left no widow, and Sangapa v. Vysapa (8) when he attained the age of 30 and died unmarried. This very point was also mentioned in Bhoobun Moyee Debia v. Ram Kishore Acharji Chowdhry (3) in the judgment of Lord Kingsdown, where he stated: "If Bhowanee Kishore, (that is the son) had died unmarried, his mother would have been his heir and the question of adoption would have stood on quite different grounds. By exercising the power of adoption she would have divested no estate but her own, and this would have brought the case within the ordinary rule." The ordinary rule referred to there is, as I understand it, the rule subsequently so clearly stated in the judgment of Chandavarkar, J. This statement was obiter but that is a clear indication of the view of their Lordships of the Privy Council.

Turning now to Madana Mohana Ananga Bheema Deo v. Purushothama Ananga Bheema Deo (2), in that case a widow adopted a son who died leaving a widow; and it was held following the cases quoted above that the right of adoption by the first widow had been exhausted. But after approving the principle laid down in the judgment in Ramkrishna v. Shamrao (6), their Lordships stated that they were of opinion that "the principle must be taken as applying, so as to have brought the authority to adopt conferred on the first widow to an end when the son, whom she had originally adopted, died after attaining full legal capacity to continue the line, either by the birth of a natural born son or by the adoption to him of a son by his own widow." It is to be observed that it does not say, "after himself attaining full age or the right to adopt a son." Their Lordships, however, went on to say that "they do not desire to be understood to say that, even in the absence of authority in the son's widow to adopt, the succession of the son and his dying after attaining full legal capacity to continue the line would not in themselves have been sufficient to bring the limiting principle into operation and so to have determined the authority of the first widow, who was not the widow of the last owner and could not adopt a son to him." I understand this to mean that their Lordships wish it to be understood that they do not give any decision on the point, which is the point in this case, and perhaps indicate that the inclination of their minds was against the contention that such adoption was permissible. But the point was not before the Council and did not arise in that case, and it would be most dangerous to treat a dictum of that kind as an authority.

When a point directly arises for decision, it is the duty of the Court to consider the point for itself, giving, of course, due weight to any words which fell, although obiter from their Lordships. I can find no authority in any decided case and the respondents have been unable to call our attention to any authority from the usual sources for ascertaining Hindu Law, in support of the proposition. If there is any such limit, it is not, in my judgment, open to us to find it on the material before us. It is to be observed that in Verabhai v. Bai Hiraba (9) Lord Lindley in delivering the judgment of the Privy Council remarked, referring to this point, that no authority had been produced before the Privy Council in support of it. I wish to refer to two cases which give some appearance of support to the suggestion of the existence of this limit, viz., Jagannadha Gajapati v. Kunja Bihari Deo (10). The head-note* of which runs as follows: "The power of a widow to adopt is not limited in point of time by the fact that a line of her husband's heirs have in succession come into possession of the estate. The limit to such power is when the husband's adopted son attains full age and so full capacity to continue the line by naturally born sons or by adoption." That head-note is in my judgment incorrect, for the case does not decide anything of the kind. It is true that Wallis, C. J., in his judgment states that the Privy Council in Bhoobun Moyes Debia v. Ram Kishore Acharji Chowdhry (3) so decided; but that observation does not appear to be borne out by a study of the judgment of the Privy Council in the case. It was unnecessary for the decision of the case in Jagannadha Gajapati v. Kunja Bihari Deo (10) and must be treated as obiter. In Venkataramier v. Gopalan (11) the decision in which case appears to be right, both the Judges explained what they understood to have been decided by the Privy Council in Madana Mohana Ananga Bheema Deo v. Purushothama Ananga Bheema Deo (2). They took the dictum which I have discussed above and read it as though it were a judgment. I do not agree with the observations of either Judge on the true meaning to be attached to the judgment of the Privy Council in that case.

The District Judge in this case took the interpretation put upon the words in Madana Mohana Ananga Bheema Deo v. Purushothama Ananga Bheema Deo (2) by this Court in Venkataramier v. Gopalan (11), and therefore held that this adoption is bad. For the reasons stated above I think his conclusion is wrong.

The appeal will be adjourned for a fortnight for further consideration and for enquiries to be made as to what took place in the Court below, so that we can decide whether to enter judgment or to send the case back to the District Judge. The respondent must pay the costs throughout.

TRIPURAMBA V. VENKATARATNAM.

Wallace, J.—The respondent relied, as the District Judge has relied, on the phraseology in certain passages in the Privy Council judgment in Madana Mohana Ananga Bheema Deo v. Purushothama Ananga Bheema Deo (2) and on the interpretation of those passages by a Bench of this Court in Venkataramier v. Gopalan (11).

The first passage is that the mother's authority to adopt must have come to an end when the son she originally adopted died, after attaining full legal capacity to continue the line either by the birth of a natural born son, (as distinguished from an adopted son) or by the adoption to him of a son by his own widow. The events which put an end to the mother's power to adopt to her husband in that view are either that her son or adopted son should have a legitimate son or should leave a widow, that is, the essential pre-requisite is not the attainment of his majority or even his succession to the estate, but that he has or has had a wife with the result that he leaves either a son to her or that she survives him as his widow. The common result in either event is that the deceased son's estate is on his death vested not in his mother but in his son or widow. Therefore, their Lordships, I consider, are not propounding any new principle but are taking their stand on the old principle enunciated by the Privy Council in Aichama v. Ramanatha Baboo (12) and Bhubun Moyee Debia v. Ram Kishore Acharji Chowdhry (3), namely, that when the estate is vested in some heir succeeding to, but directly from the deceased son, his mother will not be allowed to adopt to her husband so as to divest that heir.

The second passage in their Lordships' judgment relied on does not seem to me to carry the case any further. It is to the effect "that their Lordships do not desire to be understood as saying that even in the absence of any power in the son's widow to adopt, the succession to Brojo Kishore (that is the son) and his dying after attaining full legal capacity to continue the line would not in themselves have been sufficient to bring the limiting principle into operation, and so to have determined the authority of Adikonda's widow, who was not the widow of the last male owner, and could not adopt a son to him." Here again the phrase "succession to Brojo Kishore" does not to my mind mean anything more than that he has come into the estate. Had it meant attainment of his majority, that simpler phrase would have been used. I note further that that succession in itself is not sufficient to have determined the authority of Adikonda's widow, but that it must be coupled with the capacity to continue the line as previously explained, that is, coupled with a legal marriage. It is only from such a marriage that there will emerge an heir to continue the line in legitimate descent and, therefore, until such marriage, the full legal capacity to continue the line is not consummated. That marriage itself is not the whole test, but such a marriage as leaves an heir, a son or a widow, to the deceased has been laid down in Venkaappa v. Jivaji Krishna (7).

That I think is the meaning of Madana Mohana Ananga Bheema Deo v. Purushothama Ananga Bheema Deo (2), in which their Lordships were dealing with a case, where the adoption pleaded before them would have divested the adopted son's widow of the estate, it not having been shown that the son's widow herself had no power to adopt to her husband, and the Board purported to follow and were even in full agreement with the decision in Ramkrishna v. Shamrao (6) based on Bhubun Moyee Debia v. Ram Kishore Acharji Chowdhry (3) and Padmakumari Debi v. Court of Wards (4) and Thayammal v. Venkatarama (5) and held that the principle laid down in this case determined that case also. I find nothing, in Madana Mohana Ananga Bheema Deo v. Purushothama Ananga Bheema Deo (2) on which to find on principle that the mere attainment of majority by the son or the adopted son divested his mother of the power to adopt to her husband in the event of that son's death without heir. Under the Hindu Law a minor can marry to get legitimate sons and his widow can adopt to him, so that even a minor may fulfil the tests laid down in Madana Mohana Ananga Bheema Deo v. Purushothama Ananga Bheema Deo (2) though he has not yet come into full disposing possession of his estate.

There is, therefore, nothing in that case to support the District Judge's interpretation of it, as meaning that the full legal capacity to continue the line is equivalent to attaining majority, in a case where the son has attained age but dies unmarried. In this matter there appears to be no virtue in law in the attainment of majority and hence, when that is the only bar pleaded, there seems no reason for distinguishing between a mother's power to adopt to her husband when the minor son or adopted son has died, from the power to adopt to him when the major son or adopted son has died leaving no heir to himself who will be ousted from the estate by such adoption. See again Venkappa v. Jivaji Krishna (7).

Hence the mere attainment of majority introduces into the problem no new factor on which the respondent can rely for its solution. The purpose of adoption is to perpetuate the line; and if the only son dies without leaving any one to perpetuate the line, there seems no good reason for restricting the power of his mother to perpetuate it in the only way she can, by adopting a son to her own husband. No direct authority to the contrary has been produced by the respondent while there is much authority in its favour.

I therefore agree with the view of the learned Chief Justice.

This second appeal having been posted this day for further consideration the Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—This matter having come up for further consideration, we think that judgment should be entered for the defendants in the suit.

The question was raised before the Subordinate Judge as to whether the sapindas have in fact consented to the adoption or whether they or some of them must be taken to have consented. The Subordinate Judge decided that issue in favour of the defendants and the question formed part of the grounds of appeal before the District Judge. The District Judge's notes show that it was argued before him that these sapindas had no power to authorise the adoption. It also appears from his notes that the question covered by the first namely, whether the relations or who were described as remoter reve could authorise adoption, was argued before him, for we find his notes on contain reference to the question the reversigners were invited and refer the defendant's witnesses Nos. 1, 3 and a suggestion that witnesses Nos. 4 and interested witnesses. I can see no why this matter has been gone into before him, unless it was on the question whether or not the sapindas had authorised this adoption. Further, in the judgment itself of the District (paragraph 2) a passage in which cusses whether the consent of two or reversigners was in fact given, and in he finds that, in respect of one of them he had been adopted himself into the family, his consent was unnecessary as to the other one, after examining exhibits, he finds that he had power authority to adopt. This is enough in my judgment, to show that the Judge did dispose of the question before him; of course, on that question fact, no second appeal lies.

I, therefore, think that the whole has been disposed of and judgment be entered for the defendants respondents must pay the costs thereof.

Construction of document—Hindu Will made full owner—Son to succeed on her Estate taken by widow—Death of son sioners, right of.

MULCHAND JEKISONDAS V. BAI RUKSHMANI.

A Hindu testator by his Will appointed his wife to be the owner of his property which she was to take into her possession after his death, and consume, enjoy or do what she liked with what remained out of the property after performing his funeral and obsequious ceremonies, and declared that after her death his son, who was a lunatic, would be the owner of the estate and could do what he liked with the property. The testator's son died before the widow, and a suit was brought by the reversioners to restrain the widow from wasting the estate. The question was whether the widow took an absolute estate:

Held, that having regard to the ordinary notions of Hindus, it was obvious that the testator did not intend that the widow should have absolute powers of disposition during the lifetime of the son; that the son took a vested interest in his lifetime which on his death, went to his mother who, under the Hindu Law took only a limited interest, and, that if the disposition in her favour did not give her an absolute interest in the first instance, the fact that she succeeded as heir of her son would not enlarge that estate.

Appeal from the decision of the Extra Assistant Judge at Ahmedabad, in Appeal No. 471 of 1920, confirming the decree passed by the Joint Subordinate Judge at Ahmedabad, in Civil Suit No. 822 of 1919.

JUDGMENT.—One Ranchhoddas died seven years back leaving a lunatic son by name Chimanlal and a widow. He left a Will in which he stated, after setting out his property:

"So long as I am living I am heir and owner of the said property, the same I may consume, enjoy, use or do what I like. But if by the will of God I die, on my death I appoint my wife Bai Rukhi alias Juma to be the owner of my property. Therefore, after my death my wife is to take my property into her possession with full authority, and is to perform the funeral and obsequious ceremonies with respect to my death. And after doing the same my wife Bai Rukhi alias Juma is to consume enjoy or do what she likes with respect to what remains out of my property. And after the death of my wife, my son Chimanlal is the owner of my estate, the said Chimanlal may do what he likes with respect to my property. Therein none of my relatives, friends or other persons have a right or claim.

Chimanlal died before the widow, and the present suit has been brought by persons asserting their rights as reversioners to restrain the widow from wasting the estate. The suit has been dismissed in both the lower Courts on the ground that under the terms of the Will the widow took an absolute estate.

The principles of construction to be applied to a Will of this kind have been quite clearly laid down by various decisions of the Privy Council. At one time it was considered by the Indian Courts that the husband did not confer an absolute estate by his Will on his wife, unless he gave express powers of disposition, that it was not sufficient for him to say that the wife was the owner of the property, he must also say that she had the power of alienation. But in Surajmani v. Rabi Nath Ojha (1) it was held that if words were used conferring absolute ownership upon the wife, the wife enjoyed the rights of ownership without there being conferred by express and additional terms, unless the circumstances or the context were sufficient to show that such absolute ownership was not intended.

The decision was referred to with approval in Bhaidas Shivdas v. Bai Gulab (2). In that case the testator by his Will appointed his wife executrix, and by clause 3 constituted her owner (malik) of his property, and provided that she should leave whatever property might remain after her death to two named daughters as she liked. It was argued that later clauses in the Will in their terms were inconsistent with the view that the provisions of the earlier clause 3 constituted the wife an absolute owner, but it was eventually held by their Lordships that the subsequent clauses in the Will were not sufficient to displace the language of clause 3.

In the present case, we have to see whether the words which purport to give an absolute estate to the widow have been displaced by the later disposition of the property to Chimanlal as malik after the death of the widow. In Lallu v. Jagmohan (3) the testator provided as follows:

(1) 35 I. A. 17; 10 Bom. L. R. 59; 5 A. L. J. 67; 12 C. W. N. 231; 18 M. L. J. 7; 7 C. L. J. 131; 3 M. L. T. 144; 30 A. 84 (P. C.)

(3) 22 B. 409; 11 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 855.

SWAMINATHA MUDALIAR v. KUMARASWAMI CHETTIAR.

"When I die, my wife named Suraj is owner of that property. And my wife has powers to do in the same way as I have absolute powers to do when I am present, and in case of my wife's death my daughter Mahaluxmi is owner of the said property after that (death)." It was held that Suraj took only a life-estate under the Will, with remainder over to Mahaluxmi after her death. That decision was before the decision in Surajmani's case (1). It may be that the Court might not have considered the words in that Will sufficient to give the widow an absolute estate apart from the gift over to the daughter. It seems obvious in this case that the testator did not intend that the widow should have absolute powers of disposition during the lifetime of the son; considering the ideas a Hindu testator ordinarily has with regard to what will happen to his property on his death, he would not be anxious if he had a son alive to give an absolute estate to the widow; especially as in this case he only gave powers to the widow because the son was incapable of managing his own affairs. Nor we do think that it was intended that the son should only have a contingent interest as the learned Judge thinks. That would be contrary to the usual ideas of a Hindu testator, nor was there anything in the Will to show that Chimanlal's interest was merely a contingent one, as the case would have been if such words had been used as "if my son Chimanlal survives my wife then he will be malik of my property." We think Chimanlal took a vested interest in his life-time, and on his death that would go to his mother, who would under Hindu Law take only a limited interest and if the disposition in her favour did not give her an absolute interest in the first instance, the fact that she succeeded as heir of her son would not enlarge that estate.

We think, therefore, that the widow has not an absolute estate with powers of disposal over the property. The appeal must be allowed and the suit must be remanded for decision on the remaining issues. The appellants to have costs here and in the Court below. Costs in the First Court will be costs in the cause.

Appeal against the order, dated 27th January 1922, of the District Court, East Tanjore, at Negapatam in E. A. No. 406 of 1920 in O. S. No. 1 of 1921.

Mr. K. Rajah Iyer, for the Appellant.

Messrs. K. Bhashyam Iyenger and K. S. Desikam, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This suit was instituted under section 14 of the Religious Endowments Act by three persons acting in a representative capacity. The decree obtained in the High Court on appeal was for the recovery of a certain sum of money as damages on behalf of the temple. Two our of the three plaintiffs are still alive and there has been no devolution of their interest upon the respondents. The District Judge's order does not purport to be one made under O. XXII, r. 10 and it is, therefore, not necessary for us to consider the applicability of that rule.

The District Judge has ordered the respondents to be brought on the record as decree-holders because they represent the temple in their capacity as trustees and because it is in the interests of the trust that the decree should be executed, the original decree-holder having neglected to enforce it for over five years.

It may be unusual to bring fresh plaintiffs on the record after a decree has been passed, but there is authority for doing so under O. I, r. 10 in Vakhatchand Lakhmichand v. Advocate-General (1) and in Lingammal v. Chinna Venkatammal (2), although it might be improper and inconvenient, in particular cases to add defendants after decree and to allow proceedings to be taken against them in execution [see Goodall v. Mussoorie Bank Limited (3)]. On the contrary, it was held in Jotindra Mohan Tagore v. Bejoy Chand Mahatap (4) that the power of the Court to add parties depends on whether the questions arising in the case are still sub judice. That may be a sound principle in suits where no other interests are involved but those of the individual plaintiffs and defendants.

In a representative suit, however, like the present, as observed in Krishnamachariar v. Chinnammal (5), all the members of the class are in effect parties to the suit and any one of them is entitled to bring himself on the record as an actual party [see also Srinivasa Aiyangar v. Arayar Srinivasa Aiyangar (6)].

Order I, r. 8 expressly permits any person on whose behalf a representative suit is instituted to apply to the Court to be brought on the record, and the words of this rule are not limited, as they are by O. I r. 10, by the purpose being expressed as that of adjudication on the questions arising in the suit. In Prayag Doss Ji Varu Mahant v. Tirumala Srirangachariar Varu (7), which was a scheme suit, it was held that persons interested might enforce in execution the directions in the scheme.

The principle involved is the same here, and we, therefore, consider that the District Judge acted properly in bringing the respondents on the record.

The appeal is dismissed with costs.

BAIKUNTHA NATH CHATTORAJ v. PRASANNAMOYI DEBYA.

XI/I, r. 10, the Appellate Court may in its discretion demand from the appellant security for the costs of the appeal or of the original suit, or of both. We were referred to the decision in Maneckji Limji Mancherji v. Goolbai (1) in which a similar application was made, under the corresponding section 549 of the then Civil Procedure Code (Act X of 1877). The Court declined to make the order, the Chief Justice saying "The poverty of the defendant is no ground for depriving him of his right to appeal." That was a decision on the facts of the case. It was reported, because, I presume, it was considered that a rule of guidance for the exercise of the Court's discretion was thereby laid down. But where the Court has been given absolute discretion to make an order for security for costs, then, in my opinion no Bench of Judges can lay down rules which purport to fetter the discretion of other Judges in any similar application which may be made thereafter. It is quite true that as a general rule a Court is loath to prevent an appellant from pursuing the remedy allowed to him by law merely on the ground of poverty. But each case must stand on its own facts, and there may be cases in which a party should be directed to give security, at any rate for the costs of the appeal, before he is allowed to go further. In this case the appellant is a minor who filed a suit through his next friend, his natural father, asking for a declaration that he had been validly adopted. He has lost in the Trial Court, and we think that, as the costs in the Court below of the successful party could not be recovered, security should be given for the costs of the appeal. To that extent, therefore, we make the Rule absolute. One month is allowed to give the security. What the nature of that security should be is for the lower Court to decide. It does not matter where the security comes from so long as it is sufficient. Costs costs in the appeal.

Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 154, scope of—Hostile witness, declaration of—Court, power of—Will—Burden of proof—Forged document—Finding of Court.

There is nothing in section 154 of the Evidence Act as to declaring a witness hostile; that section merely provides that the Court may in its discretion permit the person who calls a witness to put any questions to him which might be put in cross-examination by the adverse party. [p. 287, col. 2.]

The burden of proving a Will is on the party who sets it up, and if the Court finds that an alleged Will is not a genuine document, it ought to record a finding that the alleged Will is not proved. To record a finding that the Will is a forgery is to go beyond what the law requires. [p. 290, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT.—These are consolidated appeals from two decrees of the High Court of Judicature in Bengal, dated the 14th April 1921, reversing two decrees of the Court of the District Judge of Bankura, dated the 20th February 1920.

Madhusudan Chatteraj, a Hindu governed by the Dayabhaga School of Hindu Law, died leaving four sons, Radha Ballav, Brahmananda, Raj Ballav, and the present appellant, Baikuntha Nath.

Brahmananda died in 1913 leaving all his property by Will to his widow, Mandakini Debi.

Mandakini died on the 16th September 1918, and her sister Prasannamoyi Debya the widow of Raj Ballav, and the respondent in these appeals, propounds in this litigation a paper writing, dated the 14th September, 1918, as the last Will of Mandakini.

She is opposed by Baikuntha Nath, her husband's younger brother, and by Ashutosh Chatteraj, Radha Ballav's son,

BAIKUNTHA NATH CHATTORAJ V. PRASANNAMOYI DEBYA.

The interest of the objectors is not in dispute.

The District Judge pronounced against the Will and granted Letters of Administration to Baikuntha Nath. The High Court, reversing this decision, ordered and decreed that Probate of the Will should issue to Prasannamoyi, and that the application for Letters of Administration made by Baikuntha Nath be dismissed.

The outline of the story as to the preparation and execution of the alleged Will as presented on behalf of the proponent is briefly as follows. On the 13th of September Natabar Mukerji, it is said, chanced to call on Mandakini, whom he describes as his Dharam mother, and found her suffering from fever. He was told by the night of that day that she intended to execute a Will, and that he should stay there to manage its execution. On the 14th at 2 P. M. he was asked to arrange for the execution of the Will, and on his protesting that he had no experience in Will drafting he was given a draft that had been prepared for Mandakini by a Pleader named Upendra Nath. A Pleader named Babu Bhut Nath Mandal was then called in; he examined the draft, and dictated the document now propounded to Natabar, who wrote it out.

At 4 or 4-30 in the same afternoon it was read over and explained to Mandakini, but as she was illiterate Natabar signed her name for her. The paper writing was signed by seven attesting witnesses, Bhut Nath Mandal, Kandrapa Behari Ghose, Raj Narayan Biswas, Trailokya Nath Karak, Nagendra Nath Ghose, Surendra Nath Mandal, and Gosta Behari Mandal. It was then taken to Prasannamoyi, who was in an adjoining hut, but as she, too, was suffering from fever, it was taken back to Mandakini, who, helped by Natabar, took the Will to another hut and placed it in an iron safe together with the draft. Natabar stayed at the bari that night and then left. Mandakini died on the 16th of September.

This is the proponent's version of what happened. The objectors contest its truth.

In proof of the execution the proponent has called Natabar, the writer, and the four of the seven attesting witnesses. On Surendra Nath Mandal no reliance has been placed by either Court, and his evidence need not be considered.

Nagendra Nath Ghose does not support the proponent's case, for in his examination-in-chief he declared that he did not know whether Mandakini executed any Will, and that it was to a blank paper that he put his signature at the request of Ram Lal Gossain.

An application was, therefore, made to the District Judge to declare the witness hostile and to allow the proponent to cross-examine him.

This is a position for which provision is made by section 154 of the Evidence Act, which says nothing as to declaring a witness hostile but provides that the Court may in its discretion permit the person who calls a witness, to put any questions to him which might be put in cross-examination by the adverse party.

One of the Appeal Court's adverse comments on the Trial Judge's conduct of the case is that the cross-examination of this witness was improperly disallowed. No such objection was made in the grounds of appeal to the High Court, and it would seem as though this comment must have been made without the Court's attention being drawn to that portion of the order-sheet in which the District Judge remarks as the record of the deposition indicates, that the witness was virtually cross-examined though the Judge in fact did not think he had turned hostile.

On this part of the case, therefore, it only remains to consider the evidence of the writer, Natabar Mukherji, and the two attesting witnesses Bhut Nath Mandal, and Trailokya Karak.

In a sense Natabar is the most important figure. The part he is said to have taken has already been indicated.

Though his home was in the neighbourhood of Kundu Pushkarni where Mandakini's bari was, he was actually employed at the date of the alleged execution at the Nakarka colliery 300 or 400 miles distant. His story is that in September 1918, hearing of his wife's illness he returned to his home, which is six miles from Mandakini's bari, having taken seven days' leave for that purpose. He went on the 13th of September to see Mandakini reaching her bari about noon. On the 14th there was the preparation and execution of the Will, which has already been sufficiently described for the present purpose. If this be accepted, as it was by the High Court, as a true story, there would be no difficulty in holding the Will proved. But the District Judge before whom the witness was examined, did not believe Natabar's testimony. In arriving at this conclusion he was to a considerable extent influenced by the letter and post-card, Exhibits A and A-1. Though it possibly is not a matter of any great importance, it would seem probable, from such post-marks as are available that the post-card, contrary to what has been supposed, was later than the letter.

The District Judge regarded the letter as showing in the light of the facts to which he refers that Natabar was not in Kundu Pushkarni on the date the alleged Will is said to have been executed. The High Court did not share this view, and evidently was greatly influenced by the idea that Natabar was never called upon to explain the contents of the communication. The same contention has been urged on this appeal, but it is founded on a misapprehension.

The letter was not sprung on the proponent as a surprise at the trial. In the previous arbitration proceedings the letter and the post-card were produced evidently as relevant to the issue whether the Will set up by Prasannamoyi was a genuine and valid document, and for the purpose of raising a suspicion in the minds of the arbitrators, as indeed would seem to have been its affect (see the deposition of Harish Chandra Sarkar).

When then the letter and the post-card were shown to Natabar the purpose must have been well understood, and from the record of his deposition it is manifest that, after being shown the letter, he was directly asked whether it was not a fact that he was not at Mandakini's bari on the alleged date of execution.

On re-examination no attempt was made to elicit any explanation and the learned Judge delivered his judgment in eight days, when the incident and the impression it created must still have been fresh in his mind. In their Lordships' opinion the materials on the record when carefully examined do not support the High Court's criticism.

But it is not by these Exhibits alone that the District Judge was influenced. Natabar, though alleged to have been in constant attendance at Mandakini's bari from noon of the 13th to the night of the 14th, was not seen by the Doctor, Sham Charan Barat, who was the lady's medical attendant throughout her illness and saw his patient every day. And not only did he not see Natabar, but he deposes that he did not hear of any Will by Mandakini during the time he treated her. There are other witnesses to the same effect to whom allusion will be made later.

Bhut Nath Mandal is not only an attesting witness, but is said to have dictated the Will using for that purpose the draft, Exhibit 2. Though he is a Pleader of the Burdwan Court, his persistent attempt to evade his obligation to give evidence does not inspire confidence in him as a witness. The District Judge was unable to believe him, he certainly was in the best position to judge of his credibility, and no sufficient reason has been shown for disturbing his appreciation of this witness's testimony.

Trailokhya Karak is a junior servant of Prasannamoyi on the small pay of Rs. 48 a year.

He deposes to the due exposition of the paper writing, but the Trial Judge did not think him a witness on whose testimony its genuineness could be supported. And it is significant that while Trailokhya is called his senior and superior in service, Raj Narayan Biswas, the chief Gomasta, though an attesting witness, was not cited.

Prasanna was examined on commission. She does not depose to the actual execution of the paper writing and her evidence does not materially strengthen her case.

This will be an appropriate place at which to allude to the evidence of Upendra Nath Das. He is not a witness to the execution of the Will, but he deposes, and no doubt truly, to having prepared the draft Exhibit 2. The Courts in India have, in their Lordships' view, attached more importance and significance to this document than it deserves. There can be no doubt that the alleged Will was based on it, and with such modifications as were necessary for the purpose in hand was in effect a reproduction of it. It might have been of distinct value if the issue had been whether

BAIKUNTHA NATH CHATTORAJ V. PRASANNAMEYOI DEBYA.

Mandakini had understood an instrument admitted or proved to have been executed by her, or if her mental capacity had been questioned. But that is not the issue here; the only matter in contest is the fact of execution by or on behalf of Mandakini. Upendra's statement that he cannot give the month or year of the draft, and that he cannot be positive if the draft was before or after the 16th September, which is the date of the Mandakini's death, may, in view of his intimate connection with the litigation, invite a certain amount of comment, but their Lordships find nothing on the record that would justify any imputation that this Pleader of 20 years' standing was party to any conspiracy or knowingly prepared the draft to further any sinister purpose. But, at the same time, their Lordships consider that his evidence has little or no bearing on the question whether or not the alleged Will was in fact executed.

From this survey of the evidence it is apparent that this is eminently a case where the value of the proof depends upon an appreciation by the Trial Judge of the credibility of the witnesses.

In their Lordships' opinion there is no sufficient reason shown for disturbing that appreciation, and in so saying they do not overlook what has been urged as to the propriety of the dispositions in view of the close relationship and intimacy between Mandakini and Prasannamoyi.

But the proponent's difficulties do not end with the infirmity of her direct evidence as to execution. There are other factors in the case which call for especial caution in approaching the proponent's story. The document was not actually signed by Mandakini, and so there is not the assurance of genuineness that would have been afforded by the presence on it of her recognized signature. Then, again, the absence of Mandakini's relations and connections invites comment, as does Prasannamoyi's conduct and her delay in putting forward the Will after Mandakini's death.

In contradiction of the story of the execution, several witnesses have been called who declare that, notwithstanding the opportunities of observation they possessed, Natabar was not seen by them at Mandakini's bari and no Will was mentioned. Another witness, Kalipada Roy, described as a Doctor, deposed that he was asked by Kandarapa Ghose and Ram Lal Gossain to become a witness to a Will alleged to have been executed by Mandakini and further to say that he "had attended Mandakini during her last illness and that she executed a Will in presence of such and such persons." This, he says, was after the death of Mandakini. The District Judge did not disbelieve him.

The High Court regarded this witness as "obviously unreliable", apparently under the impression that his evidence was that he had been asked to be an attesting witness to a Will then in the safe. But that is not the sense in which their Lordships read his evidence, for the expression used by him points to a request to be a witness to the Will at the trial, and this involves no such impossibility as the learned Judges ascribe to his words.

Ananta Lal Ghose's evidence may merit the doubt thrown on it by the High Court. No great reliance was placed on it by the District Judge, nor will their Lordships treat it as of any value. It, however, calls for this remark that it does not, in their Lordships' opinion, justify the charge founded on it in the argument before this Board that there was a conspiracy on the part of the objectors to procure false evidence in order to defeat the Will. No such suggestion was made in the grounds of appeal to the High Court, or even in the appellate judgment or the case for the appellant on these appeals. It was first advanced in the argument before the Board, and in their Lordships' opinion has no adequate foundation.

It may be that when the proponent's case was closed the precise character of the adverse evidence in disparagement of the alleged Will was not anticipated, but the strength of the opposition must have been sufficiently apparent to show the urgent necessity for calling all available evidence. And yet Raj Narayan Biswas and Kandarapa Behari Ghose, two of the attesting witnesses, were not called, nor was Ram Lal Gossain, to whom Nagendra Nath Ghose refers, though he seems to have been assisting in the conduct of Prasannamoyi's litigation.

The conclusion at which the District Judge arrived after a careful consideration of the evidence and all the circumstances of the case was that the Will was not a genuine document, but a forgery. In so finding he went beyond what the law requires. The burden of proving a Will is on the person who sets it up, and it would have been enough for the purpose of this case to find, as their Lordships hold to be the case, that the alleged Will was not proved. Their Lordships will, therefore, humbly advise His Majesty that these appeals be allowed, the decrees of the High Court set aside, and those of the District Judge restored, with costs throughout. The respondent Prasannamoyi must pay the appellant's costs of these appeals.

Mortgage-bond—Money payable by instalments—Entire sum payable on default—Default in payment—Suit to recover instalments in default only—Subsequent suit for remaining instalments—Cause of action—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 132—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. II, r. 2.

On 22nd October 1902 A executed a mortgage-deed in favour of B, which provided for payment of the mortgage-money by twelve annual instalments, and that in case of default of any one instalment the whole amount remaining due would be paid at once. Default having been made in payment of the first two instalments, B instituted a suit in 1905 to recover the amount of these instalments and obtained a decree. No further instalment was paid, so B on 20th May 1917 instituted another suit for the remaining ten instalments:

Held, that the right of action to sue for the whole amount of the mortgage having accrued to B in 1905, the suit was barred by limitation under Article 132 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act, and, further, that as B only sued for two instalments in 1905, instead of for the whole of the relief to which he was entitled the suit was also barred under O. II, r. 2, of the Civil Procedure Code. [p. 291, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.

Macleod, C. J.—This suit was filed by the plaintiffs to recover on a mortgage-bond, the balance due. The mortgage-deed was passed on October 22nd 1902. It was for Rs. 1,200, and it provided for the payment of Rs. 1,200 by 12 annual instalments of Rs. 100 each. In case of default of payment of any one instalment the mortgagors agreed to pay the whole amount remaining due at once. There was a further clause to the effect that the defendants should pay interest at fifteen per cent. on the amount accrued due from the date of default until the date of payment. The defendant only paid Rs. 44 during 1902 and 1903. In 1905 the mortgagee filed Suit No. 173 of 1905 to recover the amount of the first two instalments and obtained a decree for Rs. 180. No evidence was given to show whether anything was paid under the decree. Then the mortgagee waited until May 20th 1917, when he filed this suit for the remaining ten instalments. Two main issues were raised:—Whether the plaintiff's suit was in time; and whether the suit was barred by O. II, r. 2, of the Civil Procedure Code.

Now, under the terms of the mortgage-deed in the case of default the whole amount was payable, and consequently a suit could be brought by the mortgagee to enforce payment of the money charged upon the immoveable property within twelve years from the default because the money became due on such default. It seems to have been urged that, because a party to whom money is due is not bound to file a suit, therefore, time is not running against him. If that argument were to hold good, it would nullify the Statute of Limitation, for no one is obliged to bring an action. What the Statute of Limitation lays down is, that if a party has a right of action, that right can only be allowed to remain in existence for a prescribed time. If he does not choose to bring a suit within the time prescribed then his right of action is gone. Therefore, it would appear that, certainly in 1905, the plaintiffs had a right of action to sue for the whole of the mortgage amount, and as they only sued for two instalments, when they ought to have sued for the whole amount, any later suit to recover the balance was barred under O. II, r. 2. The learned Judge found it unnecessary to find on that issue as he found on the question of limitation that the suit was barred. But, as a matter of fact, the two issues are really connected with each other, because if the right of action to sue for the whole amount arose in 1905, when the first default was made, then clearly the present suit was barred by limitation. It was also barred under O. II, r. 2, because plaintiffs chose to file a suit in 1905 for two instalments when they ought to have claimed the whole of the relief to which they were then entitled.

We have been referred to various decisions. In Gaya Din v. Jhuma Lal (1) a Full Bench held that if in a mortgage re-payable by instalments the whole amount could be recovered in the case of default, the mortgage-money became due on such default and Art. 132 of Schedule I of the Indian Limitation Act was applicable. Again, in Nathi v. Tursi (2) the same point arose in a case where a mortgage-bond provided a period for re-payment, but also provided that if the borrower made default in the payment of any instalment of interest, the creditor could sue for the whole amount due. It was held that limitation, under Art. 132 of the First Schedule to the Indian Limitation Act, 1908, began to run from the date of the first default, that being the date when, according to the terms of the bond, the whole money became due. In the judgment their Lordships say (page 672*) :—

"The terms of the bond may be compendiously stated as providing that if the borrower makes default in the payment of any instalment of interest, the lender can sue for the whole amount, although a period is provided for re-payment if the borrower re-pays regularly according to the terms of the bond. It is impossible to hold, whether you call it an option or not, that a creditor has a right to sue; and yet that the money is not due. It is merely a question of contract. The borrower has agreed that the creditor shall have the right to sue for the whole of the principal and interest 'become due'."

Further they say :

"The liability to pay, or, in other words, the test of whether money becomes due or not, is the obligation which the borrower had taken upon himself by his signature to the written document. It cannot depend on the violation of the creditor. The violation of the creditor merely decides the remedy which he chooses to seek. No mortgagee or creditor is bound to sue."

We prefer to follow those cases rather than the contrary decision in Narna v. Ammani Amma (3). They are also in conformity with the decision of this Court in Raichand v. Dhondo (4) which no doubt was a case relating to the execution of an instalment decree, but the principle applicable is the same. We have also been referred to the decision in Amrit Khanderao Kango v. Govind Ramchandra (5) of Mr. Justice Heaton and myself where we held that the evidence showed that the parties had agreed that no advantage should be taken of the clause in the decree which enabled the creditor to take out execution for the whole amount.

But there is no evidence in this case that there was an arrangement between the mortgagor and mortgagee that, in spite of the default, the clause in the mortgage-bond enabling the mortgagee to sue for the whole amount should be treated as a nullity. In fact, there is no evidence whatever of any communication between the plaintiffs and the defendants with regard to this mortgage after the first payment was made of Rs. 44. We do not know whether the defendant appeared in the suit which was filed in 1905, and it is impossible for us to find anything in the record from which we could infer that there was any agreement between the parties which would enable us to hold that it was arranged that the mortgage-money should not be considered as having become due when default was made in paying instalments.

The result must be that we think that the decision of the lower Court on the question of limitation was correct. It follows that the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), ss. 60, 76, 83, 91—Mortgage—Mortgagee becoming owner of part of mortgaged property—Redemption by assignee of portion of equity of redemption—Tender, effect of—Account, basis of—Redemption suit—Decree—Deposit of mortgage-money—Withdrawal by mortgagee—Acquiescence—Appeal.

The assignee of a share only of the mortgagor's interest is a person entitled under section 91 of the Transfer of Property Act to redeem the whole mortgage and to deposit the whole of the mortgage-debt notwithstanding that the mortgagee has become owner of part of the mortgaged property. This statutory right is not taken away by recognition in section 60 of the Act of the right of partial redemption in certain cases. [p. 223, cols. 1 & 2.]

A tender or deposit by the assignee in such a case must be of the whole amount of the mortgage-debt without any proportionate reduction in respect of the part of the mortgaged property purchased by the mortgagee where such reduction has not been ascertained either by agreement or by Court. [p. 293, col. 2.]

Though in such a suit for redemption, the mortgagee has no right to retain possession after the tender, having regard to practical convenience and the scheme of the Transfer of Property Act, the proper course for the Court to adopt is to determine the amount of the mortgage-debt for which the properties purchased by the mortgagees are liable and to allow the redemption of the rest only, on payment of the proportionate amount and settle all the questions arising between the parties so as to obviate the necessity for a fresh suit to adjust the rights of the owners of the equity of redemption. [p. 295, col. 1.]

The effect of a lawful tender or deposit of the mortgage-money is to determine all the mortgagee's rights including his right of retaining possession and transfer them to the redeeming mortgagor and this principle is equally applicable to a case where part of the mortgaged property has been purchased by the mortgagee. [p. 293, col. 2.]

In taking account of the liability of a mortgagee remaining in possession after a lawful tender or deposit for the gross receipts of the mortgaged property under section 76 (1) of the Transfer of Property Act, the mortgagee is entitled to credit for amounts paid after tender to meet the revenue demands on the mortgaged property, for necessary repairs and collection charges. [p. 294, col. 1.]

Bank of New South Wales v. O'Connor, (1889) 14 A. C. 273; 58 L. J. P. C. 82; 60 L. T. 467; 38 W. R. 465; Asima Bibee v. Sheikh Ahmudee, (1854) S. D. A. N. W. P. Vol. IX p. 1, referred to.

Per Krishnan, J.—The right to deposit the mortgage-money in Court under section 83 of the Transfer of Property Act is co-extensive with the right to sue for redemption. Once a decree is passed settling the rights of parties on redemption, what is thereafter done should be referred to that decree. The payment of the mortgage-money thereafter can only be under that decree and not under section 83 of the Transfer of Property Act which no longer applies. Where the mortgagee draws out the money deposited in Court after the decree, there is no acquiescence in the decree so as to render an appeal from it incompetent. [p. 298, col. 1.]

APPEAL NO. 352 OF 1918.

Appeal against a decree of the Court of the Additional Temporary Subordinate Judge, Rajahmundry, in Original Suit No. 4 of 1917.

TADEPALLI SUBBA RAO GARU V. PALUSU BUCHI SARVARAYUDU.

APPEAL NO. 222 OF 1919.

Appeal against a decree of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge, Rajahmundry, in E. A. No. 538 of 1918, in O S. No. 4 of 1917, on the file of the Court of the Additional Temporary Subordinate Judge, Rajahmundry.

These appeals and the Memoranda of Objections came on for hearing on the 7th and 8th April 1921, and having stood over for consideration till the 28th April 1921, the Court (Wallis, C. J., and Krishnan, J.) delivered the following

JUDGMENT.

Wallis, C. J.—These are appeals by the defendants from the preliminary decree and final decree in favour of the plaintiff against the defendants-mortgagees who refused to restore the mortgaged property in spite of the mortgage-debt having been deposited by the plaintiff under section 83 of the Transfer of Property Act. The plaintiff is the assignee of three-fourths of the mortgagor's interest in item one and the mortgagees are also found to have become the owners of the equity of redemption in parts of the mortgaged property which were sold for arrears of revenue which had accrued on other property not the subject of the mortgage belonging to the heirs of the deceased mortgagor. The plaintiff impugned the revenue sales and also contended that the purchases were made benami for the mortgagors, but the Subordinate Judge found that the plaintiff had failed to establish his case on those points and I agree with my learned brother that in the argument in the Memorandum of Objections we have not been shown any sufficient reason for differing from him on this point. The case must, therefore, be dealt with on this footing.

The first question that arises is, whether the plaintiff is entitled, as the Subordinate Judge has found, to make a deposit of the whole mortgage-debt notwithstanding that the mortgagees have become the owners of part of the mortgaged property. On this question, I think the plaintiff was entitled to do so under the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act. They were undoubtedly persons entitled under section 91 of the Transfer of Property Act to sue for redemption and consequently come within the words "or any other person entitled to institute such suit" in section 83 so as to entitle him to make a deposit under that section. These statutory rights are not taken away by the recognition in section 60 of the right of partial redemption where the mortgagee has become the owner of part of the mortgaged property. It was no doubt held in Marakar Akaih Kondarakayil Mamu v. Punjapatah Kutlu (1) that where the mortgagee had acquired a part of the mortgaged property, the mortgagors could not even sue for redemption until the mortgagor had obtained a decree for partition, but this decision was before the Transfer of Property Act and even then was of very questionable authority for reasons which will appear later.

In the present case the plaintiff tendered the whole amount of the mortgage-debt without any proportionate reduction in respect of the part of the mortgaged property purchased by the mortgagee. On the principle of the greater including the less, omne majus continet in se minus, the tender was good even if they were entitled to tender a lesser sum, but, in my opinion, they were not, as the amount of the proportionate reduction in the mortgage-debt had not been ascertained either by agreement or by the Court, and in these circumstances it cannot be said that there was any lesser sum which the plaintiff was entitled to tender or the mortgagees were bound to accept.

The effect of a lawful tender or deposit is to determine the mortgagee's rights as distinguished from his liabilities under the mortgage including his right to retain possession, and, where one of several mortgagors redeems the mortgage, to transfer such right of possession to the redeeming mortgagor who is in turn entitled to retain it until redeemed by the other mortgagors. This is the principle embodied in section 95 which provides that, "Where one of several mortgagors redeems the mortgaged property and obtains possession thereof, he has a charge on the share of each of the other co-mortgagors in the property for his proportion of the expenses properly incurred in so redeeming and obtaining possession." This principle is, in my opinion, equally applicable to a case where part of the mortgaged property has been purchased by the mortgagee.

(1) 6 M 61; 2 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 321.

TADEPALLI SUBBA RAO CARU V. BALUSU BUCHI SARVARAYUDU.

In such a case the mortgagee's right to possession as mortgagee is equally determined by the tender or deposit and transferred to the redeeming mortgagor. The question as to the proper form of decree to be passed when he refuses to accept the tender will be considered later.

Another question which arises in these appeals is as to the extent of the liability of a mortgagee remaining in possession after a lawful tender or deposit to account for the gross receipts of the mortgaged property under section 76 (1). On this clause the Subordinate Judge has held that the mortgagees are not entitled to credit for amounts which they paid after the tender to meet the revenue demands on the mortgaged property, and for necessary repairs and collection charges and the commentaries and one or two cases bear out this view, but in none of them has the clause been very fully considered. Such a rule would involve great hardship to a mortgagee who refused to accept the tender under a bona fide claim of right. It is often exceedingly difficult under the existing law to say whether a transaction amounts to a mortgage or a sale, and where it is ultimately found to be a mortgage, it would be very hard to refuse the mortgagee credit for all the necessary expenses incurred by him whilst contesting the right to redeem. As observed in argument, it would put him in a worse position than a trespasser, and there seems no need for so stringent a rule. There is nothing like it in England where a mortgagee who refuses to accept the tender may have to bear the costs of the suit for redemption necessitated by his refusal and also loss of interest from the date of the tender, a provision now embodied in section 84 of the Transfer of Property Act, Bank of New South Wales v. O'Connor (2). In the case of his being in possession such a mortgagee would also have to account for the gross profits; but there is no authority for saying that he would not be entitled to all due allowances. I do not think that clause (1) when properly understood imposes any larger liability than would be incurred by a mortgagee in England. All that it says is, that he, that is, the mortgagee, must, notwithstanding the provisions in the other clauses of this section, account for the gross receipts from the mortgaged property from the date of the tender or the earliest occasion when he could draw the money out of Court. He does so account in legal parlance when he brings the whole gross receipts into account, but the section does not say that when he brings the whole gross receipts into account he is not to have the benefit of the same allowances as a trespasser. If the Legislature had intended to enact in this matter a novel rule of a drastic character, I think they would have used clearer language and would at least have said "notwithstanding anything" in section 72 as well as notwithstanding anything in the other provisions of section 76, because it is section 72 which deals with the credit side of a mortgagee's account and section 76 deals mainly with the debit side. Further, there is nothing in the history of the clause to suggest that they had any such intention. It is not to be found in the rules as to transfer of property appended to the Sixth Report of the Indian Law Commission, 1870, or in the Transfer of Property Bill based on these rules which was introduced in 1877, but was inserted by the Select Committee who re-drafted the Bill with express reference to the case of Asima Bibee v. Sheikh Akmudee (3) as cited in Macpherson on Mortgages which was then the accepted text book on mortgages in India. It was there held that after a lawful tender a mortgagee continuing in possession was not entitled in accounting for the profits accruing subsequently to the tender to the benefit of the stipulations in the mortgage-deed. The mortgage-deed had made the mortgagor responsible for any balances due from farmers and cultivators of the land and contained other stipulations as to the way in which the profits should be estimated. The Court held that the effect of the tender was to render the mortgage-deed of no effect from the date of the tender and to put an end to the mortgagor's liability for the balances in question and observed: "Upon the same principle, the appellant is entitled to the benefit of the tender in the mode of calculating the claim, the proceeds of the estate being estimated according to the gross jamabandi for 1252 Fasli without reference to the terms stipulated in the deed."

But for the words "notwithstanding the provisions in the other clauses of this section," clause (i) might be regarded as merely giving statutory effect to this decision. These words apparently were inserted in the clause ex abundante cautela to meet any possible contentions that might be based on the other clauses of the section and especially on clause (h) read with section 77. However this may be, they are, not, in my opinion, sufficient, especially having regard to the omission of any reference to section 72, to put the mortgagee in accounting for the gross receipts of the property in a worse position than a trespasser, and I think the Subordinate Judge was wrong in disallowing the items claimed by mortgagees on this head.

The Subordinate Judge has held that the plaintiff was entitled on the tender to take possession of the whole of the mortgaged properties, and has left the rights of the owners of the equity of redemption including the mortgagees to be adjusted in other proceedings. It is no doubt the practice in England to pass such redemption decrees subject to the rights of other persons interested. The appellants contended in the lower Court and here that the Subordinate Judge should have left them in possession of the items of mortgaged property purchased by them and allowed the plaintiff to redeem the remaining properties at a proportionate reduction instead of driving them to a fresh suit. It is, of course, true that the appellants had no right to retain possession after the tender and should be made accountable on that basis, but having regard to practical convenience and the scheme of the Transfer of Property Act I think the proper course in a case like this would have been to determine the amount of the mortgage-debt for which the properties purchased by the appellants were liable and to have finally settled the questions arising between the parties so as to obviate the necessity for a fresh suit. I concur with the order proposed by my learned brother.

IN APPEAL No. 352 OF 1918.

Krishnan, J.—The suit from which this and the connected appeal arise was one brought to redeem an usufructuary mortgage executed in 1896 by the late Ex-Nawab of Masulipatam in favour of one Tadeipalli Purushottam, now deceased, the then manager of the joint Hindu family of defendants Nos. 1 to 15, 18 to 34 and 38, for one lakh of rupees with the condition inter alia that the usufruct was to be taken in lieu of interest. The properties mortgaged consisted of 9 items. Plaintiff is the purchaser of a three-fourths share in Item No. 1 subject to the mortgage. Defendants Nos. 16, 17 and 35 to 38 are stated to be assignees of the shares in the mortgage of two of the members of the mortgagee's family and defendants Nos. 39 to 53 are the heirs, or assignees from the heirs, of the original mortgagor the Nawab who died in 1898. Defendants Nos. 54 to 61 claim to be purchasers of the equity of redemption in some of the items mortgaged. These defendants Nos. 39 to 61 were added as parties as persons interested or claiming to be interested in the equity of redemption. The plaintiff deposited in Court the whole of the mortgage-money Rs. one lakh under section 83 of the Transfer of Property Act in April 1916 but the mortgagees refused to receive it unconditionally and be redeemed. Hence this suit.

The lower Court passed a preliminary decree for redemption in plaintiff's favour directing the mortgagees to take the money deposited in Court and to deliver up possession of all the 9 items to him; and it also directed that he was to get the rents and profits of the mortgaged properties from the date of suit to date of delivery or for 3 years, whichever was the shorter period, at a rate to be determined subsequently. Appeal No. 352 is the appeal against the decree by the mortgagee; two Memoranda of Objections have also been filed against that decree one by plaintiff and the other by two of the heirs of the late Nawab, challenging the finding of the learned Subordinate Judge that the equity of redemption of Items Nos. 6 and 9 had been validly sold in a revenue sale and had passed from the mortgagors, but raising no other objections. A final decree was subsequently passed settling the amount of mesne profits which the defendants were to pay to the plaintiff, disallowing their claim to deduct the Government Revenue paid and the charges said to have been incurred for repairs and for collection. The connected Appeal No. 222 is by the mortgagees against that final decree and plaintiff has filed a memo. of objections in it claiming his costs which had been disallowed.

Several important questions have been raised in these appeals. It will, however, be convenient to dispose of the Memoranda of Objections in Appeal No. 352 first, as they raise the question whether the finding that the equity of redemption became vested in part in the mortgagees is correct or not, as much of the argument in the case depends on it. There is no real dispute about the facts regarding it. Arrears of Government revenue became due by the mortgagor's debts on certain properties belonging to them in the Cuddapah District. For the realisation of these arrears the equity of redemption of Items Nos. 6 and 9 was attached though they were situated in a different district and was sold in revenue sale and purchased, the latter by 54th defendant, a clerk of the mortgagees, and the former by the 55th defendant, his brother-in-law. The attempts of the mortgagor to get these sales set aside failed and the sales were confirmed. It is the mortgagor's case that these purchases were benami for the benefit of the mortgagor and it is contended that under section 90 of the Indian Trusts Act the mortgagees should be treated as having made the purchases and as holding the properties for the benefit of the mortgagor. The argument, however, fails as it is not shown that the mortgagees availed themselves of their position as such in getting the properties sold or in buying them, even if we assume that the purchases by 54th and 55th defendants were really benami for them. The sale was not for arrears of revenue due on the mortgaged properties and the mortgagees were under no obligation to pay the revenue on the mortgagor's other properties. It cannot, therefore, be said that they committed any default in allowing the equity of redemption to be sold for such arrears. It was, however, urged that as a sum of Rs. 2,500 had been left with the mortgagees by the mortgagor and that they should have paid the arrears out of it when the mortgaged properties were attached, to save them from being sold. But the evidence is that this money was left with the mortgagees for the express purpose of effecting repairs to the mortgaged properties and it could not, therefore, be properly used by them for paying any arrears of revenue. No other objection has been urged before us regarding these sales and we must, therefore, accept the finding of the Subordinate Judge on Issue No. 3 that the revenue sales are valid and binding on the mortgagor. The further plea that the purchases were benami for the mortgagor is not raised now and is not supported by any evidence. The Memoranda of Objections must, therefore, both be dismissed with costs.

Turning now to the Appeal No. 352 before us the main points argued were those raised (1) in Issues Nos. 1 and 2 and (2) in Issue No. 8, namely, whether plaintiff is entitled to get possession of all the properties including Items Nos. 6 and 9 on redemption and whether the payment into Court under section 83 of the Act was a valid deposit in law. Taking the first question first, there can be no doubt that under section 60 of the Transfer of Property Act a person entitled to a share only of a mortgaged property cannot redeem his share only on payment of his proportionate share of the mortgage-money except in the only case where the mortgagee or when there are more mortgagees than one, all of them has or have acquired in whole or in part the share of a mortgagor. In fact, the rule is that a mortgage should be redeemed as a whole; the right to redeem in part is given to a mortgagor as a privilege in the exceptional case noted above to avoid multiplicity of suits and in none else. Now, in the present case the plaintiff has sued to redeem the whole mortgage. I think he was bound to do so for he could not take advantage of the exception because the equity of redemption in Items Nos. 6 and 9 is not shown to have passed to all the mortgagees as a body but only to some of them as shown by the Subordinate Judge in paragraphs 14 and 15 of his judgment. Plaintiff was, therefore, clearly entitled to redeem the whole mortgage. Nevertheless, I agree with the learned Chief Justice that the more convenient course here is to decide in this case itself, as all the parties are before us, the question how much of the mortgage-money should be taken as proportionately chargeable on Items Nos. 6 and 9 and to allow redemption of the rest of the items only on payment of that proportionate amount. This can be done without prejudice to plaintiff's claim to mesne profits and without deciding between the several persons entitled to the mortgagee's interest their rights inter se. I would, therefore, call for a finding on this question on fresh evidence.

TADEPALLI SUBBA RAO GARU v. BALISU BUCHI SARVARAYUDU.

On the next question as to the validity of the deposit in Court, I agree with the learned Chief Justice that, under section 83 the right to deposit the mortgage-money in Court is co-extensive with the right to institute a suit for redemption as is apparent from the wording of the section. A person who owns a share only of the equity of redemption is thus, in my opinion, as much entitled as a person owning the whole of it to take advantage of section 83 by depositing the amount due on the mortgage, and as in this case I have held that the plaintiff is entitled to redeem the whole mortgage he was clearly entitled to deposit the whole mortgage money in Court as he did. In my opinion, the section applies equally to cases where the mortgagee has obtained a share of the equity of redemption for there is no limitation in its language. It is not necessary in this case to consider whether, in such circumstances, the mortgagor should deposit the whole mortgage-amount due into Court, or only that portion of it which he would have to pay if he were taking advantage of the exception in the last clause of section 60; for the mortgagor in this case has paid the whole mortgage-money. The objection that the plaintiff could not make a valid deposit because he was only the owner of a share of the equity of redemption and because some of the mortgagees had also become entitled to a share in it must thus be overruled.

A further objection was raised that the deposit ceased to be a valid one when the plaintiff through his Vakil opposed the application of the defendants under Exhibit IV to be paid the amount deposited and got it dismissed. If he improperly prevented the mortgagees from drawing out the money the tender may become bad under section 84 of the Act, but what happened here was the defendants wanted to take the money without prejudice to certain contentions they were raising and they asked for an order of Court to that effect. This appears from Exhibit IV itself. Plaintiff objected to the Court making any such order, as, I think, he was perfectly entitled to do; he did not object, so far as I can see, to the money being drawn out by them and I do not think his action affected the validity of his tender in any way. I, therefore, agree that plaintiff is entitled to the advantages flowing from such a deposit. What those advantages are in this case form the subject of the connected Appeal No. 222 and I shall consider the question there.

In this appeal one further argument raised by the respondent remains to be considered. It was contended that because the defendants drew out the money deposited in Court after the decree of the lower Court and pending the appeal to this Court, they must be taken to have acquiesced in that decree and their appeal is, therefore, incompetent. The facts bearing on this objection are not clear. Some of the money seems to have been taken away not by the defendants but by their attaching creditors and that can imply no acquiescence at all on defendants' part. Whatever they drew out themselves they seem to have drawn out in execution of the decree in this case. Execution of a decree has never been held to estop the decree-holder from appealing from it so far as it is against him.

Reliance was, however, placed by the learned Vakil for the 1st respondent for his objection, on the ruling in Ram Chandra Marwari v. Rani Keshobati Kumari (4). On examining that case it will be found to be entirely distinguishable. Their Lordships were considering the effect under the 2nd clause of section 83 of a withdrawal of money which had been deposited in Court in full discharge of the mortgage-debt. There was no decree in that case prior to the withdrawal. The case reported in Dal Singh v. Pitam Singh (5) was also relied on. In that case no doubt the money was taken out of Court after the decree of the Appellate Court and pending a second appeal. The facts of that case, however, are not very clear, for in meeting the argument that the money should be deemed to have been taken out in execution of the redemption decree, the learned Judges say that the appellants as defendants against whom the decree for redemption had been passed, were not the parties to apply for execution and that in the application they made to have the money paid out it was distinctly stated that it was lying in deposit under section 83, Transfer of Property Act. In the present case there is a clear order in the decree that the defendants were to take out the money in Court and it would, therefore, seem to be distinguishable from the Allahabad case. Otherwise, with all respect to the learned Judges, I would have been unable to follow their ruling. Once a decree is passed, settling the rights of parties on redemption, what is thereafter done should be referred to that decree. The payment of the mortgage-money can only be under that decree and not under section 83, Transfer of Property Act, which no longer applies. This objection must also be overruled.

Before disposing of this appeal it is necessary to call for a finding on the question "What are the proportionate amounts of the mortgage-debt chargeable upon Item No. 6 and Item No. 9?" The finding must be arrived at in the manner explained in Ponnamballa Pillai v. Annamalai Chettiar (6). Fresh evidence will be allowed. Finding in 2 months after the re-opening. Objections 10 days.

The question in this appeal turns on the meaning to be given to the expression "account for the gross receipts" in section 76 (i) of the Transfer of Property Act. The mortgagees claimed to deduct from the rents received by them certain sums of money for (1) revenue paid to Government on the mortgaged properties (2) repairs effected to them and (3) collection charges for collecting the rents and profits. The learned Subordinate Judge has disallowed the whole of these three items. It is contended in appeal that all these should be allowed in favour of the mortgagees.

As found in the connected appeal, the mortgage-money was properly deposited in Court by the plaintiff under section 83 and if the mortgage was one which provided for a rate of interest, that interest would have ceased to run under section 84. But in this case we have a mortgage with possession with the condition that the usufruct was to be taken in lieu of interest; section 76 (i), therefore, applies. The Subordinate Judge construes the words "account for gross receipts" as meaning "account to the mortgagor for the total receipts from the mortgaged properties without any deductions whatsoever," and he relies on Beni Prasad v. Narain Das (7), Satyabadi Behari v. Harabati (8) and Shepherd and Brown's Commentary on the Transfer of Property Act. There is no authority cited by the commentators for their opinion; and there is nothing in Satyabadi Behari v. Harabati (8) which supports the Subordinate Judge's view. In the case in Beni Prasad v. Narain Das (7) no doubt collection charges were disallowed but there is no discussion of the meaning of the words in question, in the judgment. There is thus no real authority on the point.

To take the meaning that the Subordinate Judge has given to the words would, as pointed out by the learned Chief Justice, impose an unduly excessive burden upon a mortgagee in possession who fails to accept a valid tender or deposit. Section 84 imposes on the mortgagee, in such circumstances, only the liability of interest ceasing to run; and in the case of a mortgagee in possession who takes his interest from the usufruct, the application of that rule would only result in his having to account for the whole of the usufruct without deducting anything for interest but it would not affect in any way his right to any other deductions he may be entitled to. Should we then construe the words of section 76 (i) as imposing a much larger liability by taking away from him all rights of deduction? There is no reason why a mortgagee in possession should be treated by the Legislature in a more stringent manner than any other mortgagee committing the same default. I think full effect can be given to the words "account for gross receipts" by holding that in the mortgage account to be made up for redemption, the mortgagor should be debited with the total receipts from the mortgaged property without reference to any covenants between the parties in the mortgage-deed to take any particular amount as representing such receipts or to appropriate anything for himself towards his interest or otherwise. The words will then have no bearing on the question of deductions claimed under the provisions of the Statute. The history of the provision as set out by the learned Chief Justice shows that this is the proper meaning to be attached to them. The words were introduced for the first time by the Select Committee on the Transfer of Property Bill and their report shows that the provision was taken from the case of Asima Bibee v. Sheikh Ahmudee (3). In that case the tender by the mortgagor was found to be valid and legal and the question was what surplus profits alleged to have been realised by the mortgagees in possession, the mortgagor was entitled to. The learned Judges held that on the tender being made the condition and stipulations in the deed in favour of the mortgagees ceased to be in force and, therefore, they were not entitled to interest thereafter and that they could not rely on an express stipulation in the deed which made the mortgagor answerable for balances due from farmers and cultivators from Fash 1252 and that the proceeds of the estate should be estimated according to the gross jamabanli without reference to the terms stipulated for in the deed. They, however, allowed the mortgagees credit for collection expenses. It would thus seem that the term "gross receipts" has no reference to statutory deductions but only to the stipulations in the deed. A mortgagee in possession who wrongly refuses to accept a tender or deposit does not thereby become a trespasser and cease to be a mortgagee. See Satyabadi Behara v. Harabati (8) and Rukhminabai v. Venkatesh (9). The duties imposed on him by section 76 continue in force against him and it will be very strange to hold that though he is compelled by law to make certain payments such as the Government revenue, he is not to get them repaid. I think the words in section 76 (i) do not necessitate such a construction and that they only mean that the mortgagor should be debited in the account with the total receipts from the mortgaged property without reference to the stipulations in the mortgagee's favour in the deed. If the mortgagee proves that he has made payments from the income validly under clauses (c) and (d), to that extent I would hold that he has accounted for the receipts. It seems to me that the words "notwithstanding the provisions in the other clauses of this section" have been added to clause (i) out of abundant caution as the learned Chief Justice has pointed out, to make it clear that the special rule in that clause is to prevail against the general rule embodied in clause (h) which enables the mortgagee to appropriate the receipts himself towards his interest and principal. They cannot be read as extending the scope of the words "account for gross receipts."

One other question has been raised on the construction of section 76 clause (i), namely, that the mortgagees are liable only for the total receipts or in other words for the total amount of rents and profits actually collected by them and not for those left uncollected. Section 76 (i) no doubt speaks only of receipts and under that section it will be difficult to make the mortgagees liable for uncollected rents and profits as the Subordinate Judge has done. But section 76 (b) imposes on the mortgagee in possession the duty of collecting the rents and profits and the last clause of the section makes them liable for any loss resulting from their failure to perform that duty. Their liability for uncollected rents and profits extends, therefore, only to the extent to which it can be brought within those provisions and does not depend on section 76 (i). No doubt, section 77 provides that clauses (b), (d), (g) and (h) of section 76 shall not apply to cases where by the contract between the parties the mortgagees are to take the receipts from the mortgaged property towards interest as was the covenant in the contract before us. But when on deposit of the mortgage-money in Court that covenant ceased to be in force, the excepted clauses became applicable to the mortgagees.

(9) 31 B. 5271 9 Bom. L. R. 938.

We have now to consider what deduction the mortgagees are entitled to. As regards the Government revenue alleged to have been paid, it seems clear they were entitled to pay it under section 76 (c) and on the view I have taken they are entitled to credit for it in the mortgage account. Collection charges were also properly incurred by them under section 72 (a) and they are entitled to credit for them also. The last item is the charge for repairs. This seems to stand on much the same footing. After the deposit was made in Court and the covenant for taking the usufruct for interest ceased to be in force, section 77 ceased to apply and section 76 (d) became applicable thereafter. The mortgagees were, therefore, entitled to pay the charges for any necessary repairs from the rents and profits and claim credit in the account.

No other question has been argued in this appeal. A fresh finding must be called for from the Subordinate Judge as to the proper amount payable by the mortgagees to the plaintiff for the Faslis in question and subsequent Faslis so far as necessary in the light of the above observations. In taking the account Items Nos. 6 and 9 will also be included. Fresh evidence may be taken and the finding returned at the same time as the finding in the connected appeal and ten days will be allowed for objections as in that case.

The Memorandum of Objections as to costs will stand over for disposal with the appeal.

In pursuance of the order contained in the above judgment, the Subordinate Judge of Rajahmundry submitted the following FINDINGS.

IN APPEAL NO. 352 OF 1918.

In this appeal I have been called upon to submit a finding on the question "what are the proportionate amounts of the mortgage debt chargeable upon Item No. 6 and Item No. 9?"

2. In the judgment in the appeal it is pointed out that the finding must be arrived at in the manner explained in Ponnambala Pillai v. Annamalai Chettiar (6). The principle laid down in that decision is that the proportionate amount of a mortgage-debt chargeable upon a portion of the mortgaged property would be that which bears the same ratio to the whole mortgage debt as does the value of that portion to the value of all the mortgaged properties taken together.

* * * * *

IN APPEAL NO. 222 OF 1919.

In this matter the question which has been referred by the High Court for a finding is:—

"What is the proper amount payable by the mortgagees as mesne profits for the plaintiff for the Faslis in question and subsequent Faslis so far as is necessary?"

* * * * *

10. The result is that the mesne profits which the plaintiff is entitled to get from the several items for Faslis 1326 to 1330 which takes us to 3 years from the date of the preliminary decree, for which period it is that under the terms of that decree the plaintiff would be entitled to recover mesne profits are as follows:—

No. of items.	Amount.
	Rs.	A.	P.
Item 1	15,366	0	0
Item 2	1,375	0	0
Items 3 to 5	270	0	0
Item 6	1,462	12	0
Item 7	1,525	12	10
Item 8	85	9	0
Item 9	12,168	1	9
TOTAL	31,253	3	7

11. I find accordingly upon the question which has been referred to me by the High Court. I have only to add that this finding proceeds on the basis of the statement filed by the parties in Court on 1st February 1922 subject to the modifications above mentioned with regard to item 1 and that that statement may be read as part and parcel of this finding.

TADEPALLI SUBBA RAO GARU v. BALUSU BUCHI SARVARAYUDU.

Messrs. P. Somasunderam, T. Ramachandra Row, P. Seva Sundaram, and Lakshmana, for the Respondents.

These appeals and the Memorandum of Objections in Appeal No. 222 of 1919 come on for hearing on the 25th July 1922 after the return of the findings of the lower Court upon the issues referred by this Court for trial, the Court (Krishnan and Venkata Subba Rao, JJ.) delivered the following

JUDGMENT.

IN APPEAL NO. 352 OF 1918.

This is an appeal against the preliminary decree in Original Suit No. 4 of 1917 on the file of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge of Rajahmundry. The learned Subordinate Judge has now returned the finding that the amount of the mortgage debt proportionately chargeable on Items Nos. 6 and 9 is Rs. 17,272. Neither party has objected to this finding. The total amount of Rs. 1,00,000 paid into Court having been withdrawn by the mortgagees they must refund the above amount (Rs. 17,272) on their being allowed to retain possession of Items Nos. 6 and 9 without those items being included in the redemption decree. To avoid any further complications we direct the mortgagees, defendants Nos. 1 to 38, to pay into the lower Court the above-mentioned amount within a fortnight from this day. We make this order as the parties agree to it without prejudice to their contentions. The appeal is adjourned to 21st August 1922 for final orders.

IN APPEAL NO. 222 OF 1919.

This is an appeal against the final decree passed in Original Suit No. 4 of 1917. In that suit this Court called for a fresh finding from the Subordinate Judge as to the proper amount payable by the mortgagees to the plaintiff for the Faslis in question and subsequent Faslis from 1326 to 1330 taking into consideration the deductions to be allowed to the mortgagees. The Subordinate Judge has now returned his findings as regards the profits the mortgagees are in his opinion accountable to the mortgagor for the Faslis in question.

As regards Items Nos. 2, 3, 4, 5, 7 and 8 there is no dispute raised by the defendants (mortgagees) or by the mortgagor. The dispute is confined to Item No. 1 and Items Nos. 6 and 9. As regards

Item No. 1, the first objection taken is that the estimate of the Subordinate Judge of the profits payable for Faslis 1326 and 1327 by the mortgagees is excessive. It seems to have been argued in the lower Court that it was not open to the mortgagees to raise the question as the previous proceedings barred them from doing so, but we think it is not necessary in the circumstances to go into that question, for it is sufficient to find on the mortgagors' second contention that there was no true deficit in the collection in those Faslis. The Subordinate Judge has discussed the evidence bearing upon this point at some length. We entirely agree with him that the evidence is quite inadequate to establish that that was any deficiency whatever and that any tenant had failed to pay his rent for those Faslis. The evidence of D. W. No. 6, as the Subordinate Judge points out, is practically mere hearsay evidence. It is, strictly speaking, not admissible. The evidence of D. W. No. 7 is quite indefinite and inconclusive, and not supported by any accounts. Although it is admitted that there were chittas and averjas for those Faslis, none of them has been put into Court and proved. Furthermore, as we have already held in our previous judgment, the mortgagees would be liable to account even for the amount that he has failed to collect if the failure was due to his failure to use his best endeavours to collect them; and there is evidence on the record to show that, if there was any failure to collect the whole of the rent, that must have been due either to indifference or negligence on the part of the mortgagees to collect. In these circumstances we agree with the Subordinate Judge that the mortgagees were rightly debited with the total amount of rent payable upon these lands for the Faslis in question by the tenants in occupation.

There is a second point raised with reference to Item No. 1 and that refers to the complaint made by the plaintiff that he did not get possession of 19 acres and odd cents in Item No. 1 when he got possession thereof. The Subordinate Judge has found it proved on this point that the 19 acres and odd were not really put in possession of the mortgagor. So far we are in agreement with him, for there is no contradiction of what the witness D. W. No. 7 says on the point;

1. ADEPALLI SUBBIA RAO GARU v. BALUSU BUCHI SARVARAYUDU.

But on the question whether the mortgagees (defendants) are liable to account for the profits for these 19 acres for the Faslis in question, we regret we are unable to accept the Sub-Judge's view. There is nothing on record to show that the failure to obtain possession of these 19 acres was due to any default on the part of the mortgagees. The Court directed the whole of the item to be put in possession of the mortgagor. If he had not been so put in possession, it was his duty to complain to the Court and point out that he had not been so put in possession, and ask the Court to direct the judgment-debtors (the mortgagees) to so put him in possession but he did not do any such thing. He seems according to the evidence of the mortgagees, to have been obstructed by somebody in actual possession of the land against whom it is said he had taken proceedings to clear the obstruction and has now brought a suit. There was no complaint to the Court of any short delivery, as the Subordinate Judge points out, nor was any intimation given to the defendants that there was any difficulty on account of short delivery; the evidence seems to indicate that the plaintiff had adopted the method of suing the party in possession and recovering the property from him with mesne profits. That assumes that the property is not held by the person in possession at the instance of, or under, the judgment-debtors. There is also no direct proof that the obstructors were put in possession by the judgment-debtor or that they were holding it for the benefit of the judgment-debtors. If they were either trespassers or were persons who were already in possession before the mortgage was created, the mortgagees would not be under any obligation to give vacant possession to the plaintiff. They were bound to give such possession as the mortgagor gave to them. In these circumstances, considering that the plaintiff has chosen to seek other means to get profits from the party in possession, it is not right to make the defendants liable for such profit of the 19 and odd acres included in Item No. 1, and we disallow that. In this view it is not necessary to go into the question of quantum of profits of these 19 acres.

These are the only objections with reference to Item No. 1. Now as regards Items

No. 6 and 9 it is contended before us that some of the mortgagees having purchased the equity of redemption of those items, they are not bound to give the profits of those lands to the plaintiff. Some question was raised whether this point was not covered by our previous judgment, but, assuming that we did not expressly decide the question though our observations would seem to indicate that we were rather inclined to think that the defendants would be liable for such profits, we have come to the same conclusion now and hold that the defendants are liable to make good to the plaintiff the profits of these lands as well. The plaintiff had paid into Court one lakh of rupees, the total of the mortgage amount and the plaintiff was entitled, therefore, as we have already held, to get possession of the whole of the lands, and of course he would have then been able to collect the profits of all the lands. It is only as a matter of convenience and concession to the defendants we have allowed them in this suit itself to retain Items Nos. 6 and 9 on the payment of the proportionate amount of the mortgage-debt chargeable on those items. Strictly they were bound to hand over possession of the mortgaged properties on payment of the lakh of rupees into the Court. If they did not draw out the money it was their own fault. In those circumstances it is clear that the plaintiff is entitled to the profits on these items up to the date when the defendants pay back into Court the Rs. 17,000 and odd the debt chargeable upon these two items.

As regards Item No. 6 there is no dispute as to the amount of profits. But as regards Item No. 9 a dispute has been raised by the defendants (mortgagees) as to the quantum of profits charged against them for Faslis 1328, 1329 and 1330. It is admitted the charges are correct for Fasli 1326 and 1327. The contention here is very much like the contention as regards Item No. 1. What the mortgagees say is that they were not able to collect the whole of the rents payable by the tenants according to their engagements, and that there was a deficiency in Fasli 1328 of about 16 puttis, in Fasli 1329 of about 12 puttis and in Fasli 1330 of about 7 puttis, the normal rent payable being 44 puttis and sum of Rs. 100. As regard the deficiency alleged, the Subordinate

Judge has found that such an allegation has not been proved and, on a consideration of the whole of the evidence bearing upon it, we are not prepared to say that the evidence is such as to justify us in reversing that finding. No evidence on the point has been given by the persons who actually collected the rents. Certain books are produced which were books kept in the Head Office in Massaulipatam, but they were books written up from chittas and other notes which had been sent by the persons who collected rents. Such chittas are not produced, nor are those accounts of the actual collections proved. In those circumstances it is difficult to say that the defendants have discharged their burden of proof that there was really a deficit in collection in spite of their best endeavours. They were certainly under a duty to keep proper accounts and if they have not done so and are put to any loss in consequence, it is their own fault. We accept the Sub-Judge's finding that for these *Fasli*s also the rent collected should be taken to be the same as the rent collected for the two previous *Fasli*s.

There is, further, as we have already pointed out, in respect of Item 1 the fact that on the evidence of the defendants themselves it would seem that they did not use their best endeavour to collect the rents, that they did not effect the necessary repairs and that they somewhat neglected the collection because of the pendency of this suit. The difference in amount as expressed in rupees of the rent of these lands in the plaintiff's account is due to the fact that the price of the paddy was different in the different years but they all represent the value of 44 puttis of paddy and the Rs. 100 rent payable each year. In these circumstances, we accept the Subordinate Judge's finding that on Item No. 9 the amount of profits payable by the mortgagees to the mortgagors is what he finds it to be, namely, Rs. 12,168-1-9.

There are the objections raised by the defendants in this Court. The plaintiff has also filed objections claiming that he should be granted interest on the profits from the date of collection. We think he has not established that claim. After all, what he was entitled to under section 76, clause (2) of the Transfer of Property Act is the gross receipts by the mortgagees from the date when he had paid the money into Court. We could not construe that as meaning that interest is also payable upon the amounts collected.

As regards the deductions made on account of Government revenue and other charges there is no dispute between the parties. Those items are accepted by them both.

Now, a further claim has arisen in favour of the plaintiff (mortgagor) on account of the lapse of time, for at the time when the Subordinate Judge estimated the amounts payable by the defendants to the plaintiff Fasli 1330 and come to an end and Fasli 1331 was beginning; now that Fasli has also come to an end. The plaintiff is, therefore, entitled to get added on to the figures found by the Subordinate Judge the rents and profits for Fasli 1331 so far as lands which were not given possession of with crops standing on them before the end of Fasli. That is a matter which we cannot dispose of at this moment but the parties have stated before us that, if they are given a little time, they would file statements and that possibly they could agree as to the amounts to be added and there would be no necessity to keep this suit on the file of the Court any further; for this purpose alone we shall give them a short adjournment. The plaintiff would file a statement and give a copy of it to the other side in ten days' time. The defendants will then have a week to say whether they agree to it or if they disagree, to file statement. We will defer passing final orders till the case is heard again on the 21st August.

There remains the question of costs raised in the Memorandum of Objections. The first Court gave the plaintiff costs of the preliminary decree, but as regards the final decree it made each party bear its own costs. On hearing both sides before us we are inclined to think that there is no sufficient cause for interfering with the discretion exercised by the Court in that matter except as regards the stamp-duty payable on the amount which should have been decreed to the plaintiff by the lower Court according to the views we have now expressed.

MARUTI BALAJI PATIL v. DATTU MUKUNDA SAVANT.

As regards the costs of this Appeal No. 222, we direct each party to bear its own costs.

The appeal is adjourned to the same date as Appeal No. 352, namely, 21st August, for final disposal.

These appeals having been posted for orders on the 21st August 1922, in pursuance of the order contained in the judgment dated the 25th July 1922, the Court (Krishnan and Venkatasubba Rao, JJ.) delivered the following

JUDGMENT.

The money not having been paid in the lower Court as directed, the parties ask that time may be given for the money to be paid in this Court. Three weeks from this date is allowed for the payment of Rs. 17,272 to the credit of Appeal No. 352 of 1918 in the High Court. Plaintiff will have leave to draw out the money from the Court when paid in.

The appeals are adjourned for final orders to 14th September 1922.

These appeals came on this day for final orders in pursuance of the order of this Court, dated the 21st August 1922, the Court (Krishnan and Venkatasubba Rao, JJ.) delivered the following

JUDGMENT.

IN APPEAL No. 352 OF 1918.

The money Rs. 17,272 ordered to be refunded under the above order having been paid into Court and as plaintiff has leave to draw it out, the decree of the lower Court must be modified by omitting Items Nos. 6 and 9 from it. Otherwise the decree is confirmed. Appellants will pay plaintiff's costs of the appeal.

IN APPEAL No. 222 OF 1919.

The only dispute now is as to the amount of profits that the defendants are bound to account for to the plaintiff for Fasli 1331 with respect to Items Nos. 2, 6 and 9. The plaintiff claims in his statement Rs. 3,172 and odd; the defendants admit only Rs. 2,410 and odd. We think if we take Rs. 2,800 as the proper amount, we will not be far wrong, for each side is likely to exaggerate. It is not necessary to delay the case further by calling for a finding as the difference is small. There will be a final decree drawn up according to our judgment. By consent of parties defendants are given two months' time from this date to pay the moneys payable by them to the plaintiff including costs in Appeal No. 352 of 1918.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 105 OF 1922.
December 1, 1922.

Present.—Sir Norman Macleod Kt., Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice Cramp.

MARUTI BALAJI PATIL—

versus

DATTU MUKUNDA SAVANT

—DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT.

Registration—Sale-deed—Endorsement by Registrar—Proof of document—Registration Act (XVI of 1908), s. 60.

In a suit on a registered sale-deed, the endorsement by the Registrar that the executant admitted execution before him is not by itself sufficient evidence to prove that document. The endorsement merely shows that a certain person admitted execution and although one is entitled to presume that the person who admitted the execution was the person who signed the deed, that does not show who signed the deed, nor that the person so signing was the person who could give title to the plaintiff. [p. 305, cols. 8 & 2.]

Second appeal from the decision of the Assistant Judge, A. P., at Sholapur in Appeal No. 62 of 1921, reversing the decree passed by the Subordinate Judge at Barsi, in Civil Suit No. 468 of 1920.

Mr. P. B. Shingne, for the Appellant.

Mr. P. V. Kane, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The only question in this appeal is whether Exhibit 29-A has been proved. The plaintiff's title to the suit property would stand or fall on that document which is a sale-deed. As the lower Appellate Court says:

"It purports to have been passed by defendant No. 1, but defendant No. 1 has not been examined, nor has the signature alleged to be his, been verified, nor has the writer of the document or any of the witnesses who purport to have attested it, been examined. In these circumstances, can it be said that the document has been proved."

AMIR v. WAZIR.

The answer at first impression to that question would certainly be in the negative. When the appeal came up for admission before me, it was urged that, under section 60 of the Indian Registration Act, the certificate of the Registering Officer was admissible for the purpose of proving not only that the document had been duly registered in the manner provided by this Act, but also that the facts mentioned in the endorsements referred to in section 59 have occurred as therein mentioned. Reference was made to Thama v. Govind (1). In that case the learned Judges said (page 404):

"On the document here there are endorsements made in accordance with the provisions of section 58, and in those endorsements it is stated that the executants admit execution of the document and receipt of money. We are unable, sitting here in second appeal, to say that these endorsements prove the execution and the receipt of consideration money, but we are able to say that the endorsements may be admissible for that purpose. We must, therefore, reverse the decree of the lower Appellate Court and send back the case for redetermination in the light of these remarks. At the same time, we desire to make it clear that though the certificate is admissible for the purpose of proving that the facts mentioned in the endorsement occurred as therein mentioned, we do not wish to fetter the discretion of the Court, or to suggest that by reason of those endorsements the Judge is bound to hold that there has been such execution and payment as the endorsement suggests."

The only effect of that decision is that the certificate can be considered as proving certain facts within the meaning of section 60 of the Indian Registration Act. These facts might go so far, as in this case, as to show that the person purporting to sign Exhibit 29A admitted his signature before the Registrar. In the absence of any further evidence, and no evidence was led in the Courts below, that would not be evidence of the necessary link in the chain that the person who admitted execution before the Registrar was the person who could give title to the plaintiff. The only facts which are mentioned in the endorsement are, that a certain person admitted execution, and one is entitled to presume that the person who admitted execution was the person who signed the deed. But that, as I have tried to point out, does not of itself prove who signed the deed. It is useless, therefore, in my opinion, to send down the case for further examination by the Court below. It is unfortunate for the plaintiff that he was unable to prove his document, but as the evidence stands he was bound to fail. The appeal, therefore, will be dismissed with costs.

Mr. S. A. Razzaq, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The defendants in this case present this second appeal relying on a certificate granted by the District Judge regarding the existence of a custom amongst the Muhammadan Bhatti Rajputs of the

AMIR V. WAZIR.

Dasuya Tahsil in the Hoshiarpur District, as to whether a sonless proprietor can adopt his brother's son. Counsel also wishes to argue the question of whether in this case it has been proved that the sonless proprietor actually did adopt his nephew. On this point there is a clear finding of fact and he can only urge that the whole of the evidence on the subject was not considered by the District Judge. His only reason for saying so is, that the District Judge has not recapitulated in his judgment every piece of evidence which is on the record. In the first place, this is not, in my opinion, a sufficient reason for holding that the District Judge did not consider every piece of evidence and, even if it could be shown that he did not do so, there would still be no justification for attacking in second appeal the findings of fact which are certainly based on evidence.

As to the existence of the custom, the onus doubtless lay upon the plaintiff and in support of his case he produced the Riwaj-i-am of the Hoshiarpur District relying more especially on the answer to question 69, three decided cases described as P. 6, P. 7 and P. 8 on the record, Art. 35 of the Rattigan's Customary Law, Beg v. Allah Ditta (1), Hassan v. Samma (2), and the various instances quoted by Mr. Humphreys in his Riwaj-i-am, of the existence of the custom amongst Muhammadan Rajputs in this and other Tahsils of this District. Both sides rely on Umar Bakhsh v. Sohne Khan (3) which appears to me to be of special value to the plaintiff, for in that case, in spite of the general entry made by Mr. Humphreys in the Riwaj-i-am, to the effect that the Muhammadan Rajputs of the Garhshankar Tahsil did not follow custom in this matter, the Chief Court held that it was established by instances that they did. It is true that in the course of that judgment the value of the Riwaj-i-am was discounted, but on the whole I think the judgment helps the plaintiff more than it does the defendants. The answer to question 69 in the Riwaj-i-am regarding adoption by Muhammadan Rajputs runs as follows:— "Rajputs of Tahsil Dasuya. In the absence of collaterals, only a daughter's son and sister's son can be adopted no other persons outside the got are eligible." Counsel contends that this means that a man who has collaterals cannot adopt at all and, if he has none, can adopt his daughter's son or sister's son. The wording is not very happy but, if the answer be read with the context, it is clear that it means that the sonless proprietor can adopt a collateral and, if he has no collateral, can go further afield and adopt his daughter or sister's son. Art. 35 of Rattigan's Customary Law explains the position generally as regards Muhammadan agriculturists in the Central and Eastern Punjab. It is clear that, amongst the purer Muhammadan tribes, especially those residing in the North-Western Districts, the influence of their religion has been more marked, but in the Central Punjab, Muhammadan agriculturists as a whole have retained the custom of adoption. This is more especially the case with regard to Muhammadan Jats converted from Hinduism, and Sir William Rattigan definitely places the onus of disproving the existence of the custom among such Jats on the man who denies it. The position with regard to Muhammadan Rajputs is not so strongly established but even amongst them in this area of the Province the more general practice is clearly to recognise the right of adoption. Out of the decided cases P. 6, P. 7 and P. 8 one only is among Bhatti Rajputs, namely, P. 6, and comes from this very village, but, as pointed out by the learned District Judge, it is of no value inasmuch as the property was self-acquired. P. 7 and P. 8 are instances of Muhammadan Rajputs but not of Bhattis. Counsel urges that, unless it can be shown by instances that Bhatti Rajputs have adopted the custom, the evidence of its existence among other Muhammadan Rajputs is of no value. With this contention I cannot agree, for it appears to me that the Muhammadan Rajputs of this area must be taken as a whole and it is clearly established by the many instances given by Mr. Humphreys in his Riwaj-i-am as well as by the reported cases amongst Ghorewaha and other Raj- puts quoted in Art. 35 of Rattigan's Customary Law that the custom clearly exists amongst Muhammadan Rajputs in this tract. The case for the defendants-appellants rests entirely on challenging the plaintiff's case and it is not even seriously contended before me that the contrary has been proved, namely, the non-existence of the custom or the observance of strict Muhammadan Law in this matter by Bhatti or any other Muhammadan Rajputs of this District. I find, agreeing with the learned District Judge, that the custom is fully established and I dismiss the appeal with costs.

Marudayi v. Doraisami Karambian, 30 M. 348, 17 M. L. J. 275, followed.

Second appeal from the decision of the Acting District Judge of Ratnagiri, in Appeal No. 118 of 1917, reversing a decree passed by the Subordinate Judge at Deorukh, in Civil Suit No. 309 of 1916.

Mr. P. B. Shingne, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—The question in this appeal is, whether Gangadhar as the surviving son or Naro succeeded to Naro's property to the exclusion of the sons of his deceased brothers. Naro and his four sons had become separated. Gangadhar contended that after the death of Naro he was entitled to one-fifth share in the khochi which had come to Naro on the partition. The question was considered in Marudayi v. Doraisami Karambian (1). It was there held that the right of the divided sons, grandsons and great grand-sons of the last male owner to succeed to his divided property, is the same as in the case of undivided family property. Their Lordships said (p. 351):—

"It must, however, be conceded that to allow a rule of succession per stirpes in a separated family is to admit an exception to the rule of Hindu Law by which the inheritance devolves on the nearest sapinda; but the exception is one which, in our opinion necessarily follows from the exposition given by Vijnaneswar (Mit. i. l. 3) of the rights of sons and grandsons in the estate of the grandfather."

With respect, I agree. Moreover, speaking for myself, I should not be inclined to differ from a decision on the question such as the present one, by a Division Bench of another High Court, unless it could be established in argument before me that there were very good grounds for thinking that we were justified in coming to a different conclusion. In this case the applicant's Pleader has not been able to put before us any reasons why we should differ from the decision of the Madras High Court except that it would be against the interest of his client.

There is a further reason why we should follow it, as this case is cited in the 8th Edition on Mayne's Hindu Law, paragraph 540, at page 755, and no exception whatever has been taken to the law as laid down therein. We, therefore, follow that decision and dismiss the appeal. As the respondent has not appeared, there will be no costs.

ORDER.—This is an application to vacate an ex parte order excusing the delay in representation and to dismiss the second appeal with costs.

The second appeal in which the Rajah of Ramnad is the appellant was filed in time but without a copy of the decree appealed against. The papers were returned for re-presentation with a copy of the decree.
When the copy of the decree was filed, the appeal was 53 days out of time as the papers were returned on the 6th of December 1918 and the decree was filed on the 16th of January 1919. On the 18th of January 1919 the papers were again returned with the remark that the appeal became out of time when the copy of the decree appealed against was filed and that an affidavit explaining the cause of the delay should be filed. On the 20th January 1922 the papers were again presented with an affidavit and orders were obtained from me on the same day excusing the delay. The petitioner who was served with notice of the appeal on the 15th of April 1922 has filed this application on the 13th of November 1922 for setting aside the ex parte order passed.

There can be little doubt, that, though the second appeal was presented in time, there was no valid presentation because the Memorandum of Appeal was not accompanied by a copy of the decree appealed against. Order, XLI, r. 1 is imperative and states that a Memorandum of Appeal shall be accompanied by a copy of the decree appealed against. In Sitikantha Roy v. Bipra Das (1) it was held that it was a condition precedent to there being a valid Memorandum of Appeal that it should be accompanied by a copy of the decree appealed from. The same view was taken in Binapani Debi v. Sashibhushan Sinha (2), *Khrode Sundari Debi
v. Jnanendra Nath* (3) and *Chamela Kuar v.
Amir Khan* (4). In *Dand Bahadur Singh v.
Deo Nandan Prasad* (5), it was held that where an ex parte order is passed excusing the delay, it is open to the other party to apply to have it set aside. There can be little doubt that Courts have power to excuse the delay in the presentation of a copy of the decree appealed against, and I need only refer to Binapant Debi v. Sashibhushan Sinha (2), Hem Chandra v. Jadub Chandra (6) and Prosonno Kumari Debi v. Ram Chandra Singha (7) where it has been held that it is open to the Court to pass an order that a certified copy of a decree be received and attached to the Memorandum of Appeal, if it is satisfied that the discretion vested in it under section 5 of the Limitation Act should be exercised in favour of the appellant.

The question here is, whether the delay should be excused. So far as the affidavit filed on behalf of the appellant is concerned, the reason for not filing the copy of the decree appealed against along with the Memorandum of Appeal is that the Dewan of the appellant did not send a copy of the decree along with the papers to be filed and that as the last day for filing the appeal was the 7th of November 1918 the clerk of Mr. A. Krishnaswamy Aiyar, Vakil for the appellant, filed the appeal without the copy of the decree. On the application to set aside the ex parte order excusing the delay, no affidavit has been filed either by the appellant or his Dewan or any other person explaining why a copy of the decree was not sent along with the other papers or why there was a delay of 53 days. In the absence of any explanation, I am of opinion that the delay has not been properly explained. I am, after hearing the petitioner, of opinion that the long delay has not been explained so as to justify me in exercising my discretion under section 5 of the Limitation Act and excuse the delay in the presentation of the appeal, as the authorities which have been cited to me by the petitioner's Vakil show that the second appeal itself was incompetent at the time of presentation owing to the absence of a copy of the decree appealed against.

I, therefore, set aside my order excusing the delay and direct that the second appeal be posted for orders before a Bench.

Under the Hindu law where a member of a joint Hindu family has obtained an absolute right to a share in the family property on partition, the fact of his adoption subsequently into another family does not divest him of the property which had come to him on partition. [p. 311, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.

Macleod, C. J.—A joint Hindu family consisted of one Shivram Joshi, his three sons, Mahabaleshwar, Ganpati and Venkatraman, by his first wife, and one son Subramanya, by his second wife. In 1904 there was separation of the family and partition of the family property, the father and his four sons each taking one-fifth of the family property. Mahabaleshwar, the present first defendant, after partition, was in 1907 given in adoption by his father to one Narayan Bhatta Devte. He thereby became a member of his new family. Shivram Joshi died leaving a Will dated September 28, 1907, wherein he stated that he was not quite confident as to whether he could own the entire property which had been acquired by partition by the first defendant or only one-fourth share. If he owned the whole, he left it in equal shares to Subramanya and Ganpati. If he only had a share, he left it all to Subramanya. Subramanya then brought this suit seeking to recover from the first defendant the share which was given to him by his father's Will in the property originally acquired by the first defendant on the partition. The suit has been decreed in both Courts on the ground that the decision in Dattatraya Sakharam v. Govind Sambhaji (1) was conclusive on the point.

In order to see whether the decision in that case applies, it is necessary to ascertain the facts. One Mahadev and his brother Sambhaji were divided in interest. Mahadev died more than twenty years before the suit, leaving a widow Parvatibai, a son Ram Chandra, and daughters. After Mahadev's death Ramchandra was given in adoption to a different family at Gwalior, and the properties in suit, which were originally assigned to the share of Mahadev and which were vested in Ramchandra alone after Mahadev's death, were mortgaged by Parvatibai in 1909 to one Dattatraya, long after Ramchandra's adoption. The mortgagee filed a suit to enforce the mortgage. The opponents were the sons of the divided brother of Mahadev and the heirs of Paravatibai. The plaintiff's claim was contested on the ground that the property being vested in Ramchandra at the time of his adoption remained vested in him even after he was given in adoption, and that Paravatibai had no right to mortgage the property as Ramchandra was alive. Mr. Justice Shah in giving judgment, at page 433* said:—

"The text of Manu (Adhyaya IX. verse 142) bearing on this point is clear. It is translated in Volume XXV of the Sacred Books of the East, at page 355, as follows:— 'An adopted son shall never take the family (name) and the estate of his natural father; the funeral cake follows the family (name) and the estate, the funeral offerings of him who gives (his son in adoption) cease (as far as that son is concerned).'"

It was urged there by Mr. Shingne that there was no provision in the text for the divesting an estate once vested in a person, and that the person leaving the family of his birth could not be divested of property exclusively vested in him before adoption. But the learned Judge thought that that argument ignored the essential idea of an adoption. He said:

"There is a change in the position of the boy, and this divesting of the estate of the natural father is an incident, and, in my opinion, a necessary incident, of that change. The boy given in adoption gives up the rights, which may be vested in him by birth, to the property of his natural father, if the adoption takes place in his father's lifetime. To that extent the rights vested in him are divested after adoption. If the divesting of a vested interest so far is to be allowed, I do not see any difficulty in holding that even if the estate of the natural father be wholly vested in the boy before adoption, he is divested of it when he is given in adoption."

That is the ratio decidendi in that case. If the father and son are joint, and the son is given in adoption, then any vested interest which the son had in the joint family property is divested by virtue of the adoption. If the father dies and the whole estate becomes vested in the son, then on the son being adopted the learned Judge thought the same result would follow.

There was a further argument that if the adopted boy could take his self-acquired property with him and was under no obligation to leave it in the family of his birth, there was no reason why he should not take with him the property which had vested in him exclusively on the death of his father before the adoption. The learned Judge thought that that argument ignored the difference between the self-acquired property and the estate which had become vested in him exclusively on his father's death. In one case the property was his own, and in the other it was the estate of his natural father.

The same question came before a Bench of the Madras High Court in Sri Rajah Venkata Narasimha Appa Row v. Sri Rajah Rangayya Appa Row (2). One Venkata mayya had become entitled after partition with his brother to what was called the Madur estate. Venkatamayya had a son Narayya who on his birth became a co-sharer with his father in that estate. Then Venkata died and his son became the last surviving member of the family and was solely entitled to the estate subject to the right to maintenance of his mother. Narayya was adopted by the widow of another Narayya belonging to an elder branch of the same family and the question was whether he was divested of the Madur estate by reason of his adoption. The learned Judges, after citing the texts bearing on the question, including the text of Manu, Adhyaya IX, verse 142, came to the conclusion that there was nothing in those texts which necessarily carried with it the idea that the adopted son was divested of property which was his own absolutely at the time of adoption. In their opinion the correct view seemed to be that, by the adoption the filial relationship, as the author of the Chandrika said, was extinguished in one family and was created in the other family, and that thereafter the person adopted could not claim or take any property in his natural family by virtue of the extinguished filial relationship therein.

With the very greatest respect, it seems to me that there was a good foundation for the conclusion arrived at by their Lordships.

In the present case the first defendant had an absolute right to the share in the family property which had come to him on partition. He could have disposed of it so long as his right of disposition was not fettered by a son being born to him. It might be said that the rights of disposition possessed by the sole surviving member of the joint family would be the same until a son was born to him, but the origin of his title to the property would be of a different character, since nothing would have been done to put an end to the existence of the joint family. In my opinion it cannot be said that in the case of a partition in a Hindu joint family consisting of a father and his sons, the sons take their shares as the estate of their natural father and, therefore, the decision in Dattatraya Sakharām v. Govind Sambhaji (1) cannot be taken as governing this case. Otherwise, the heir of the defendant at the time of his adoption would have had to be ascertained as if he was dead and if there were no heirs then such property would have escheated to the Crown. As their Lordships said in Sri Rajah Venkata Narasimha Appa Row v. Sri Rajah Rangayya Appa Row (2), there is a great danger in speaking of adoption as civil death and a re-birth and in attempting to enforce the consequences that might be supposed to logically flow from those conceptions. It could only be on the assumption that the first defendant was civilly dead that his father as his heir would be considered as entitled to deal either inter vivos or by will with the property in the first defendant's possession. There are certain circumstances which by operation of law may bring about the devolution of an interest in property from the holder to another person; but I do not think that the texts which have been relied upon in this case show that under Hindu Law the interest of the first defendant in the suit property devolved upon his father on his adoption. I think the appeal must be allowed and the suit dismissed with costs throughout.

Where a landlord accepts rent tendered in the name of a deceased tenant by a person in possession of the holding, such acceptance has the effect of constituting the person paying the rent a tenant of the landlord, and the latter is not competent to eject him as a trespasser.

1918. He accepted rent even after that. I submit there is estoppel by conduct. His acceptance of rent amounts to sufficient recognition. They cannot turn me out as trespasser.

Babu Girija Prosanna Sanyal, for the Respondents.—It has been found that the defendant admitted that he was not recognised. Mere acceptance of rent would not convert him into a tenant. He was a marfatdar. The tenancy existed in the name of the deceased tenant. I submit the case should be remanded.

Babu Priya Sankar Marumdar, replied in brief.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the defendants in an action in ejectment. The plaintiff sued to eject the defendant as trespassers in possession of a non-transferable occupancy holding. The defendants have proved that in 1919 and 1920 the plaintiff accepted rent from them for the lands in suit in the name of the deceased *raiya*s. The effect of this acceptance of rent was to constitute the defendants tenants under the plaintiff. Consequently, at the date of the suit, the plaintiff was not competent to eject the defendants as trespassers. In this view, it is unnecessary to consider whether there was a recognition by the plaintiff of the defendants as the holders of the original tenancy.

The result is that this appeal is allowed and the suit dismissed with costs in all the Courts.

Hindu Law—Religious office, share in, transfer

Mr. G. S. Rao, for the Appellant.

Mr. Coyajee (with him Mr. S. S. Mulgaonkar), for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal raises a question on which there does not appear to be any direct authority. The facts are simple. Fifty years ago a Guru owned a temple at Sadashivgad and he appointed a certain person as a priest to perform Puja and other services to the deity on receipt of a certain quantity of paddy. The present plaintiff is the third Guru in order of descent. The defendant is the son of the original Pujari who had two sons, the defendant and Dattatraya, the plaintiff's case being that Dattatraya having a half interest in the office of Pujari transferred or surrendered it to him. It has been held in this Court in Mancharam v. Pranshankar (1) that hereditary offices, whether religious or secular, are no doubt treated by the Hindu text writers as naturally indivisible; but modern custom, whether or not it be strictly in accordance with ancient law, has sanctioned such partition as can be had of such property by means of the performance of the duties of the office and the enjoyment of the emolument by the different co-parceners in rotation. The Court said that "there was no reason why the alienation of a religious office to a person standing in the line of succession, and free from the objections relating to the capacity of a particular individual to perform the worship of an idol or do any other necessary functions connected with it, should not be upheld." It was, therefore, in favour of alienations in the family of the original grantee of the office.

(1) 6 B. 298; 6 Ind. Jur. 426; 3 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 655.

RAGHUNATH VITHAI, v. PURNANAND SARASWATI.

In Kuppa v. Dorasami (2) it was held that the sale of a religious office to a person not in the line of heirs, though otherwise qualified for the performance of the duties of the office, was illegal. Mancharam v. Pranshankar (1) was discussed and the Court was not prepared to go so far as to say that a purchase by a person standing in the line of heirs, or otherwise qualified should be upheld.

We have been referred to no decision which differs from those cases and, therefore, unless there is direct evidence of custom, it should be taken that the transfer by one member of the family entitled to an hereditary office to an outsider would be considered by the Court invalid. The transfer by one member of his share to another member of the family could not be considered in any way objectionable. It would only reduce the number of members who were entitled to the office and a share in the emoluments.

The other question that arises is, whether one member of the family entitled to an hereditary office can surrender his share to the original grantor. If all the members of the family agree to give up the duties of performing worship and receiving emoluments, then there could be no objection to their doing so. But there is a great difference between the whole group of members surrendering their rights to the grantor, and one member purporting to give up his rights to the grantor which would cause an interference with the rights amongst the remaining members of the family. It seems to us that the matter is entirely one of first impression, and it can only be decided in accordance with the principles which would be most consistent with the proper performance of an office of this nature. We do not propose to decide anything which might cause disputes in future or interfere with the harmonious performance of the duties appertaining to the office. It seems to us that the duties of the office and the emoluments appertaining thereto remain within the family of the original grantee, and those members of the family, who wish to retain the office and share the emoluments, are entitled to do so, and if one of the members of the family wishes to get rid of his duties as well as his rights, he could only do so in favour of the remaining members of the family, and he cannot evade the ordinary rule as to alienations by purporting to surrender his share to the original grantor, or, put in other words, the alienation of a share by one member of the family is invalid whether it is made in favour of an outsider altogether or whether it is made in favour of the original grantor of the office.

It seems to us that this aspect of the case has not been considered by the lower Courts. The District Judge has treated the matter as a question of contract. No doubt, every promisee may dispense with or remit the performance of any promise made to him. But we do not think that is a proper principle to apply to the decision of this case.

Then, it was argued that the plaintiff lay under an estoppel because Dattatraya, who was a plaintiff in a suit against the Guru, admitted that he had parted with his share in favour of his brother. There could be no case of estoppel. It would be a question of proof whether Dattatraya had, as a matter of fact, transferred his share to his brother, the present defendant, for it is difficult to say that, in consequence of that statement, the defendant altered his position for the worse. However that may be, it is hardly necessary for the purposes of this case to decide, when sitting in second appeal, that as a matter of fact Dattatraya, when he purported to assign his share to the plaintiff, had, as a matter of fact, already surrendered it to his brother. We decide the case on principles that are already recognised in this Court. Dattatraya, although he could have given up his share in the office to his brother, could not endeavour to alienate it either to a person outside the family or to the original grantor or a descendant from him. The appeal, therefore, must be allowed and the suit dismissed with costs throughout.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 21, applicability of—Case remanded to one Court—Trial by another Court—Jurisdiction.

The jurisdiction of a Court trying a remanded case depends entirely on the order of the Appellate Court when remanding the case.

When the High Court remands a case for trial to a particular Court no other Court has jurisdiction to try it. Where a case is tried by a Court other than the one to which it is remanded, objection can be taken at any time to the jurisdiction of the Court, and the Court is bound to give effect to it. Section 21 of the Civil Procedure Code has no application to such a case.

Annammal v. Sambasiva Aiyar, 53 Ind. Cas. 463; 37 M. L. J. 349; 26 M. L. T. 186; 10 L. W. 293; (1919) M. W. N. 636, distinguished.

Petition, under section 115 of Act V of 1908, praying the High Court to revise an order of the District Court, Madura, dated 6th September 1921, in Civil Miscellaneous Appeal No. 6 of 1921, preferred against an order of the District Munsif, Madura Taluk, at Madura in I. A. No. 773 of 1920, in Original Suit No. 118 of 1917.

Mr. T. L. Venkatarama Aiyar, for the Petitioners.

Mr. M. Patanjali Sastri, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the main point taken before me is, that the High Court having remanded the case for trial by the Munsif's Court of Madura Town, the Court of the Madura Taluk, which is a different Court altogether, has no jurisdiction to deal with it or pass any orders in it, and consequently the orders passed by that Court must all be set aside and the Town Court directed to dispose of the case.

This argument seems to me to be sound. Though the judgment of the High Court indicated "the Court of the first instance" as the Court to try the remanded case, that Court had been abolished and the decree, therefore, specified the Town Court as the Court to try the case in quite unambiguous language. So long as that direction stands, I must hold the Town Court alone can deal with the case.

The learned Vakil for the respondent attempted to contend that I should apply the principle underlying section 21, Civil Procedure Code, to this case and refuse to give effect to the objection as it was not taken at the earliest stage in the Taluk Munsif's Court which actually was dealing with the case. It is conceded section 21 will not in terms apply. I am unable to accept the argument that any principle underlying it applies to this case. The jurisdiction of the Court trying a remanded case like the present one depends entirely on the order of the High Court when remanding the case. It is not a matter of doubt or difficulty. Nor is it a matter for the parties to make up their minds about. The rule in Annammal v. Sambasiva Aiyar (1) is not applicable to the present case at all. There the objection was taken to the High Court's jurisdiction in a subsequent suit by a party to the High Court suit in which it had been alleged that he was resident in Madras to give jurisdiction to the High Court. The party had not disputed this averment, but actually submitted to the trial. He could not afterwards be permitted to assert that he was not so resident and object to the Court's jurisdiction. If he had raised the objection in the High Court suit itself, it would have been a matter for that Court to decide and its decision could not be attacked collaterally in another suit. That case is thus entirely different from the present one.

The objection as to jurisdiction was taken at a fairly early stage in the First Court itself in this case. But, even otherwise, the objection is now taken in the same proceedings and I see no ground for refusing to give effect to it. I must, therefore, set aside all orders of the Taluk Munsif of Madura and direct him to forward the records to the Town Munsif's Court for disposal of the case. It is to be regretted that more care was not taken in reading the High Court's decree before the Taluk Munsif began to deal with it.

In the circumstances, there will be no order as to costs for either side in this Civil Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), ss. 11, 47—Mortgage—Redemption suit—Decree nisi—Second suit for redemption, whether barred.

If a mortgagor brings a redemption suit and obtains a decree nisi, which entitles him on payment of a certain sum by a certain time to get back the property, and nothing further is done, and no attempt is made to get back possession, and no order is made barring the mortgagor's right to redeem, then a second suit can be brought for redemption and the same would not be barred either by section 11 or section 47 of the Civil Procedure Code. [p. 315, col. 2.]

Ramji Bapuji Patil v. Pandharinath Ravji, 49 Ind. Cas. 894; 43 B. 334; 21 Bom. L. R. 56 (F. B.), followed.

Second appeal from the decision of the Assistant Judge, with A. P., at Sholapur, in Appeal No. 133 of 1921, confirming, a decree passed by the Subordinate Judge at Madha, in Civil Suit No. 39 of 1920.

Mr. J. R. Gharpure, for the Appellant.

Mr. P. V. Kanz, for Respondents Nos. 1, 4, 5, 7 and 8.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff sued to recover possession of the suit property as the mortgagor. The original mortgage was passed by his father to his uncle Dada acting benami for the plaintiff's father. Dada mortgaged the plaint land with possession to one Bala in 1884. Dada brought a suit for redemption in 1892 under the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act, and on taking account it was found that nothing was due under the mortgage and, therefore, a decree was passed directing that he should get possession. In appeal this decree was set aside. It was found that Rs. 310-9-0 were due to the mortgagee, and unless the sum was paid the possession was to be given back to the mortgagee. The amount was not paid and an order was made restoring the land to the possession of the mortgagee. It may be noticed that, but for the erroneous order of the Trial Court, the land would never have got into the possession of the mortgagor. We may take it, therefore, that on the final order of the Appellate Court the same effect resulted as if there had been originally a decree nisi in favour of the mortgagor, directing that if he paid Rs. 310-9-0 within the time fixed he should get possession of the property. He did not pay, and, as far as one can see, there is no order of the Court which could be considered to operate as a decree for foreclosure so as to put an end to the mortgage. Dada's heir Pandharinath gave up all his rights over the plaint property in favour of the plaintiff by a deed of release in 1920. The plaintiff has brought this suit for redemption. The defendants contended that the equity of redemption had been extinguished by the proceedings in the previous suit and this contention has found favour with both the lower Courts.

We think that the learned Judges have not sufficiently recognized the effect of the Full Bench decision in Ramji Bapuji Patil v. Pandharinath Ravji (1). The simple decision there was that if a mortgagor brings a redemption suit and obtains a decree nisi, which entitles him on payment of a certain sum by a certain time to get back the property, and nothing further is done, and no attempt is made to get back possession, and no order is made barring the mortgagor's right to redeem, then a second suit can be brought for redemption and the same would not be barred either by section 11 or section 47 of the Civil Procedure Code, and if the facts in the present case could be brought within that Full Bench ruling, then the mortgagor, in spite of the previous suit, is entitled to redeem.

It has been suggested that if the suit is brought under the provisions of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act, some inherent element in a decree passed thereunder prevents the Full Bench ruling being made applicable. The Chief Justice said (page 355*):

"A suit for redemption under the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act is substantially a suit to have an account taken in accordance with the provisions of section 13, and a decree for foreclosure is never passed in the first instance, or until the mortgagor has had ample opportunity of paying the sum found to be due. But in such cases section 47 of the Civil Procedure Code might affect the plaintiff's right of suit as Chapter XXXIV of that Code would not be applicable."

These remarks were commented on by Mr. Justice Heaton in the same case when it returned to the Court after the decision of the Full Bench: [reported as Bapu Ramchandra Kulkarni v. Guja Mhadu Dhangar (2).] The learned Judge was evidently referring to the last paragraph of the Chief Justice's judgment when he said that there was a disturbing element in the judgment, which was the possibility of their being under the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act a decree in a redemption suit which was not a decree nisi. Then he came to the conclusion that the decree, although it was made in a suit filed under the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act, was a decree of the ordinary kind. Here it may be said also that the decree is made under the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act, but it is a decree of the ordinary kind, and not one of the variant decrees which can be passed under section 15-B of the Act. Whether a decree made under the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act in a mortgage suit is a decree nisi or a decree which puts an end to the mortgage will always be a question for decision in each case when it comes before the Court. We think that in this case there was a decree nisi, and it comes within the Full Bench ruling. The appeal must be allowed and the case sent back to the Trial Court for the hearing on the merits. The appellant to get his costs here and in the Court below. Costs of the Trial Court to be costs in the cause.

Crump, J.—I agree. This decree, on the face of it, is within the Full Bench ruling in Ramji Bapuji Patil v. Pandharinath Ravji (1) and unless it can be shown that there is something in the special provisions of the Dekkhan Agriculturists Relief Act to prevent the operation of that ruling we are bound by it. I can find nothing in the special provisions of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act and indeed the respondent's Pleader has not specifically referred to any section which could have the effect of altering the nature of this decree in such a way as to prevent the operation of the law as laid down in the Full Bench case. It is, on the face of it, a decree which does not put an end to the relations of the mortgagor and mortgagee, and, therefore, the present suit for redemption cannot be held to be barred.

Punjab Pre-emption Act (I of 1913), ss. 15, 21—
Sale of occupancy rights—Landlord, right of, to pre-empt.

The landlord of an occupancy tenancy is not entitled to sue under section 21 of the Punjab Pre-emption Act for pre-emption of that tenancy against a person having a right of pre-emption under section 15 (a) or (b) of the Act.

Ahbar Hussain v. Ali Ahmed, 38 Ind. Cas. 712; 116 P. R. 1916; 186 P. L. R. 1916, distinguished.

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Attock at Campbellpur, dated the 5th October 1921, affirming that of the Munsif, First Class, Attock, at Campbellpur, dated the 20th May 1921.

Mr. Badr-ud-Din Qureshi, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—This judgment will dispose of three Second Appeals Nos. 49, 50 and 51 of 1922 in all of which the question for decision is the same, viz., whether the landlord of an occupancy tenancy is entitled to sue under section 21 of the Punjab Pre-emption Act, 1913, for pre-emption of that tenancy against a person having a right of pre-emption under section 15 (a) or (b) of the Act.

(2) 44 Ind. Cas. 908; 42 B. 246; 20 Bom. L. R. 164.

AHMAD KHAN v. JANGBAZ KHAN.

There were two sales and three suits as follows:—

(1) Nadir, one of several joint occupancy tenants, sold two kanals of the tenancy to Mir Baz, his nephew and a co-sharer in the tenancy, for Rs. 40. Sardar Khan, landlord, sued to pre-empt. His suit was dismissed by the First Court but was decreed on appeal by the District Judge who held, on the authority of Akbar Hussain v. Ali Ahmad (1), that the landlord has a right of purchase against all the world.

The vendee's second appeal is No. 50 of 1922.

(2) Jang Baz, a co-sharer in a joint occupancy tenancy, sold 1 kanal 15 marlas out of the tenancy to Saadulla, a stranger, for Rs. 350. Two pre-emption suits were brought one by Hasan Khan and Sardar Khan, landlords, and the other by Ahmad Khan, nephew of the vendor and co-sharer in the tenancy. Both the Courts below concurred in finding, on the strength of Akbar Hussain v. Ali Ahmad (1), that the landlords had the superior right and decreed in their favour relegating Ahmad Khan to the position of inferior pre-emptor. The latter has preferred two Second Appeals Nos. 49 and 51 of 1922.

All three appeals have been heard ex parte against the respondents.

The records do not show under which section of the Punjab Tenancy Act the tenancies are held but the point is not material. The lower Appellate Court appears to me not to have appreciated the significance of the difference in situation between the present cases and that reported as Akbar Hussain v. Ali Ahmad (1).

In Akbar Hussain v. Ali Ahmad (1) there was no suit by a landlord to claim and enforce a right of pre-emption. The landlord had purchased the tenancy and the vendor's collaterals sought to utilize the provisions of the Punjab Pre-emption Act, 1913, to turn him out. It was held that the landlord's position as a vendee was unassailable by any one claiming to pre-empt under the Punjab Pre-emption Act, because he (the landlord) had power under another Statute (The Punjab Tenancy Act) to prevent any sale whatsoever of the tenancy, and because, by purchasing himself, when the tenant wished to sell, he had in effect done no more than exercise that power. It was pointed out, for example, that to interpret the law otherwise would lead to absurdities, for example, if a statutory pre-emptor were allowed to pre-empt, the defeated landlord might annul the sale by having recourse to a Revenue Court.

In the present cases the landlord is not in possession as a vendee resisting attempts to oust him by the heirs or relatives of the vendors. He has come into Court as a plaintiff to assert a right which he does not possess under the law of pre-emption. His rights are perfectly clear under the Punjab Tenancy Act. He can sue in a Revenue Court to annul any sale of a right of occupancy held under him, which, if under section 5, has not been offered to him under section 53 at a price to be fixed by a Revenue Officer, or if under one of the other sections, has not been sanctioned previously by him in writing. The practical effect of this power to set aside transfers is that, if an occupancy tenant finds himself forced to sell, the landlord can acquire the tenancy at a bare market-price, if under section 5, or on his own terms, if under sections 6 or 8. His position is much more favourable than that of any pre-emptor, and this is why we find that section 15 of the Punjab Pre-emption Act confers a right on an occupancy tenant to pre-empt his landlord's proprietary land, but confers no right on the landlord to pre-empt in that capacity his occupancy tenant's rights in land owned by himself, and confers a right to pre-empt those rights upon other persons, who are owners in the same estate but otherwise are in no way connected with the tenancy.

A decree for pre-emption of an occupancy tenancy can only be passed by a Civil Court in this Province in favour of a person declared entitled to a right of pre-emption by the Act of 1913. The landlords in the cases before me are so entitled but only under sub-section (c) of section 15 as owners in the sub division in which the land is situate. The rights of the vendee in one case and of the rival pre-emptors in the other are superior, they being collaterals and coming under sub-section (b) of section 15. As landlords, Hasan Khan and

PANDURANG V. SAMPAT.

Sardar Khan have no rights at all under the Act, and hence in these suits they cannot succeed against the co-sharers.

The respective positions of a defendant and of a plaintiff differ. A defendant in a pre-emption suit can resist the claim on any and every possible ground and is not restricted to showing that he has a superior right under the section 15 of the Act. A plaintiff must depend for success upon the letter of the Act. He cannot seek the aid of another Act, the administration of which is not in the hands of the Civil Courts. Herein lies the distinction between the present cases and Akbar Hussain v. Ali Ahmad (1).

All three appeals are accepted with costs and the decrees of the lower Appellate Court are set aside and varied as follows:—

The suit Sardar Khan v. Nadar and Mir Baz is dismissed with costs throughout.

In the suit Ahmad Khan v. Jangbaz Khan the plaintiff is given a decree directing that, on payment into Court of Rs. 350 less costs due to him from the defendants in this and the two Courts below, on or before 1st December, 1922, the defendants shall deliver to him possession of the land in suit and his title thereto shall be deemed to have accrued from the date of such payment, and that, on failure to make such payment by the date fixed, the suit shall stand dismissed.

In the suit Hasan Khan and Sardar Khan v. Jang Baz and others the decree in the plaintiff's favour is modified to the extent of declaring that it shall not take effect unless and until the superior pre-emptor Ahmad Khan has failed to comply with the provisions of the decree in the suit Ahmad Khan v. Jang Baz and others. In that event, the date for payment of Rs. 350 by the plaintiffs will be extended to the 15th January 1923.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 35, O. XXI, rr. 36, 96—Symbolical possession—Formal possession—Actual possession.

There can be no symbolical possession as between the parties to a decree where the property is immoveable property which is capable of immediate actual possession and comes within the scope of the directions in sub-rule (1) of r. 35 of O. XXI of the Civil Procedure Code. Symbolical possession is the term properly applied where the property is of a kind which can be taken possession in an execution only under sub-r. (2) of r. 35 and r. 36 and r. 96 of O. XXI of the Code—these being the cases when actual possession cannot be given.

Formal delivery of possession under section 35 (1) of the Code is actual delivery of possession, it is not delivery of symbolical possession.

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Nimar, dated the 20th September 1921, in Civil Appeal No. 20 of 1921.

Mr. G. G. Hatwalne, for the Appellant.

Mr. W. R. Puranik, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The main question raised by the appellants in this appeal is, whether the decision of the lower Courts that actual possession of the malik makbuza field in suit was not delivered to him in execution proceedings is a correct decision. The learned District Judge, in paragraphs 10 to 19 of his judgment, does not appear to have appreciated exactly what had to be established by the plaintiffs. The District Judge seems to have been under some misapprehension as to what is meant by symbolical possession. There can be no symbolical possession as between the parties to a decree where the property is immoveable property which is capable of immediate actual possession and comes within the scope of the directions in sub-rule (1) of r. 35 of O. XXI of the First Schedule to the Civil Procedure Code, either the decree-holder is put in actual possession or not. Symbolical possession is the term properly applied where the property is of a kind which can be taken possession of in execution only under sub-rule (2) of r. 35, and rr. 36 and 96 of O. XXI. These are all cases where actual possession cannot be given. Rule 35 (1) lays down in what manner possession of immoveable property in the actual possession of the judgment-debtor is to be given, and what the lower Courts had to decide was whether possession was given in such manner or not. The point mentioned by the District Judge that the order-sheet contains nothing about the malik makbuza field is entirely irrelevant since the warrant shows that possession of the malik makbuza field was to be given. Unfortunately, the prescribed form of warrant under r. 35 does not give separate directions for carrying out execution under sub-rules (1) and (2); the warrant is the same in both cases. In this case part of the property had to be delivered under sub-rule (1) and part under sub-rule (2); the property in dispute fell under sub-rule (1). It is impossible to give actual possession of a field without the process-server and the person to whom he gives possession going to that field. The process-server can then put the representative of the decree-holder in possession by declaring that he is in possession of it; if any person representing the judgment-debtor is in possession, he may under sub-rule (1) be removed, but unless such a person is on the field he cannot be removed. If, then, the process-server and the decree-holder's representative did go to the field, it was not necessary for the decree-holder's representative to assert his possession by some means or other so long as he was not obstructed; once a person is put in possession in this manner, for however short a time, the execution is complete. If he is resisted in the actual taking possession the obstructor can be removed, and recourse may be had to rr. 97 and 98.

Formal delivery under the provisions of r. 35 (1) is actual delivery, as is made clear in the case of Dhansingh v. Ganpat (1). In some rulings, the words "symbolical possession" seem to be loosely used in the sense of formal possession which has not been subsequently maintained. The question here is, whether possession even formal has been given under r. 35 (1); if it is so, then certainly the plaintiffs have a cause of action.

I would remark that the District Judge was in error in not having referred to the original execution proceedings. If he does so, he will find that the application for execution did refer separately to the malik makbuza field. What the lower Courts have to decide is, whether or not the provisions of section 263 of the old Civil Procedure Code and of r. 35 (1), O. XXI of the present Code, were carried into effect. Of the problem so stated, the lower Appellate Court has not, as far as I can see, attempted to arrive at any decision which is conclusive. I, therefore, remand the appeal to the lower Appellate Court with reference to the above remarks.

The decree is supported by the learned Pleader for the defendants-respondents on the ground that it is not proved that the present field in suit is the same field as Field No. 64 which was the field mortgaged. I am bound to say that the reasons given by the lower Courts for coming to a conclusion that it is the same field appear to me, on the face of it, inadequate. The matter should be gone into more deeply. The decree is also supported on the ground that the second defendant was not properly represented in the mortgage-suit and that the decree therein can have no effect as against him. This is a point which must also be taken into consideration. Costs will be costs in the suit; there will be no refund certificate.

Although under sub-section (1) of section 4 of the Provincial Insolvency Act an Insolvency Court has full power to decide a question of title, yet when it does not deem it expedient or necessary to decide any question of the nature referred to in sub-section (1) but has reason to believe that the debtor has a saleable interest in any property, it may follow the course laid down in sub-section (3) and may without further enquiry sell such interest in such manner and subject to such conditions as it may think fit.

Dr. Sarat Chandra Basak, Babu Sarat Chandra Mookerjee, for the Appellant.

Babus Banku Behari Mullick Chowdhuri, Jitendra Nath Roy, Peary Mohan Chatterjee and Krishna Lal Banerjee, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The Court, no doubt, under sub-section (1) of section 4 of Act V of 1920, has full power to decide a question of title, but the Judge has in the present case followed the course laid down in sub-section (3).

It is contended that no sufficient reasons are given for adopting this course and that evidence ought to have been given before doing so. But the Court, where it does not deem it expedient or necessary to decide any question of the nature referred to in sub-section (1) but has reason to believe that the debtor has a saleable interest in any property, may without further inquiry sell such interest in such manner and subject to such conditions as it may think fit.

It appears that notice was served upon Jitendra Nath Bhattacharjee, who is the appellant before us, on the 8th September 1919. He did not appear in Court until the 25th September 1920. The learned Judge put to him certain questions and the purport of the answers is mentioned in his order. Upon a consideration of the matters stated in the report of the Receiver and of the answers given by the appellant when questioned by the learned District Judge, he came to the conclusion that the debtor had saleable interest in the property.

At one stage of the case, it is true, the creditors wanted to have a decision on the question whether the properties were joint family properties or not; but we understand that the creditors are now willing to purchase whatever interest the insolvent had in the property.

In these circumstances, we do not think that we should interfere with the order of the Court below.

The appeals are accordingly dismissed with costs—two gold mohurs—to be divided among the persons who have appeared.

Appeals dismissed.

Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), s. 35—"In the same case," meaning of—Decree for specific performance of contract—Default in payment under decree—Rescission of contract—Separate suit, if necessary.

The words "in the same case" in the last paragraph of section 35 of the Specific Relief Act refer to case (c) in that section. Where therefore, a default in payment has been made in a case under that clause, the Court can make an order to rescind the contract in the same suit in which the decree has already been made, instead of putting the opponent to file another suit for rescission.

Sir Thomas Strangman, in support of the notice of motion.

Mr. Mirza, for the Opponent (Respondent No. 1.)

JUDGMENT.—A decree was passed in this suit granting specific performance to the plaintiff of the suit contract for the sale of certain land. The decree directed him to pay Rs. 12,000 as the purchase price, but, unfortunately, no time was mentioned within which the purchase price should be paid. As the plaintiff did not comply with the direction in the decree that he should pay the purchase price, an application was made to this Court for an order in the suit that the decree should be vacated as a consequence of such default on the part of the plaintiff. The plaintiff has now paid the money. So that the only question is, whether the plaintiff should pay the costs of the motion. It is urged on his behalf that a wrong procedure has been followed, for, under section 35 of the Specific Relief Act, a suit ought to have been filed in order to secure the performance of the contract or its rescission. There can be no doubt that section 35 is somewhat obscurely drafted. First, it directs that any person interested in a contract may sue to have it rescinded, and such rescission may be adjudged by the Court in any of the following cases:—

"(a) Where the contract is voidable or terminable by the plaintiff:

"(b) Where the contract is unlawful for causes not apparent on its face, and the defendant is more to blame than the plaintiff:

"(c) Where a decree for specific performance of a contract of sale, or of a contract to take a lease, has been made, and the purchaser or lessee makes default in payment of the purchase money or other sums which the Court has ordered him to pay."

Therefore, in the last case where there has been a default in payment of the purchase-money which the Court has ordered a party to pay in a decree for specific performance of the contract of sale, it is open to the opponent to file a suit for a rescission of the contract. Then by the last paragraph of the section it is stated:—

"In the same case, the Court may, by order in the suit in which the decree has been made and not complied with, rescind the contract, either so far as regards the party in default, or altogether, as the justice of the case may require."

It is not at all clear to what the words "in the same case" refer, but it appears to me that these words must refer to case (c) in the section, so that the Court is empowered to make an order in the suit in which a decree has already been made, to rescind the contract, instead of putting the opponent to file another suit for rescission. That is clearly the English practice as appears from Fry on Specific Performance, Sixth Edition, pp. 546, 547, paragraph 1171:—

"There are two kinds of relief after judgment for specific performance of which either party to the contract may, in a proper case, avail himself."

Paragraph 1172 (i):

"He may obtain (on motion in the action) an order appointing a definite time and place for the completion of the contract by payment of the unpaid purchase money and delivery over of the executed conveyance and title-deeds, or a period within which the judgment is to be obeyed, and, if the other party fails to obey the order, may thereupon at once issue a writ of sequestration against the defaulting party's estate and effects."

DURASAMI IYER v. SUBBARAYA IYER.

And paragraph 1173 (ii):

"He may apply to the Court (by motion in the action) for an order rescinding the contract. On an application of this kind, if it appears that the party moved against has positively refused to complete the contract, its immediate rescission may be ordered: otherwise, the order will be for rescission in default of completion within a limited time."

In my opinion this is the practice which it has been directed should be permissible by the last paragraph of section 35 of the Specific Relief Act, and the argument urged by Mr Mirza, that this Court has no jurisdiction to make an order on a motion of this kind after specific performance has been decreed cannot be sustained. The opponents must, therefore, pay the costs of the motion; including costs reserved.

Hindu Law—Joint family—Alienation, invalid, by co-parcener—Partition—Alienated property taken into account—Subsequent suit to recover property, whether maintainable.

It is only in his capacity as co-parcener that a member of a joint family can sue for joint family property unlawfully alienated. His suit must be in the nature of a partition suit. But once there has been a general partition in which the property in question and the sale of it has been taken into account, the parties to that partition cease to be co-parceners and none of them has any right to sue to recover the property alienated [p. 323, col. 1.]

Second appeal against the decree of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge of Salem, in Appeal Suit No. 87 of 1919 (Appeal Suit No. 41 of 1918 on the file of the District Court), preferred against the decree of the Court of the District Munsif of Namakkal, in Original Suit No. 571 of 1915.

Mr. C. S. Venkatachariar (with him Mr. V. N. Venkatavaradachariar), for the Appellant:—This is a suit to set aside an alienation and partition. Both the lower Courts have sustained the alienation on the ground that it was of benefit to the family.

The sale was for Rs. 1,960 of which Rs. 1,000 was paid in cash and for the rest a mortgage was executed by the alienee. There was admittedly no antecedent debt or family necessity. The sale-deed recites the object was to purchase other lands. None was admittedly purchased. A series of decisions of this Court have held that this is not legally sufficient to sustain an alienation of joint family properties. The lower Courts rely on some sand sifting which can not entitle a manager to sell family land. Clearly, there was no necessity within the meaning of the decisions and the alienation cannot be upheld. See Palaniappa Chetty v. Sreemath Deivasikamony Pandara Sannadhi (1), Sahu Ram Chandra v. Bhup Singh (2).

[SCHWABE, C. J.—But the real point against you is the prior general partition. The lower Court has found, that the sale proceeds were invested in the family money-lending business which was taken into account in the partition. How can you now bring a suit for partition of the alienated property?]

There is no estoppel. The prior partition was only of the admitted family properties. The co-parcener's right to set aside the alienation is not lost by a partition of the other items. There is no acquiescence or ratification of the alienation. Where the alienation is not for necessity, it is void as regards the share of others and as such is incapable of ratification.

A subsequent assent or ratification by a junior member cannot validate the void alienation. The assent is only evidence of the family necessity. Where there is no necessity, a subsequent assent is of no avail. See Kamakshi Ammal v. Chakrapany Chettiar (3), Kandsami Asari v. Somaskanta Ela Nidhi (4). The case in Bommali Musiligadu v. Madugula Nannigadu (5) cited in the latter case rested on personal estoppel of which there is none in the present case. See also Mayne's Hindu Law, paragraphs 342—345.

Further, the question of acquiescence is one of fact and has not been raised in either of the Courts below. If necessary, the matter must go down to the lower Court for a finding.

[SCHWABE, C. J.—But the lower Court has found as a fact that the purchase-money was in effect partitioned.]

Even if that is so, it can only entitle defendant to ask that plaintiff should be directed to pay his share of the consideration before the sale is set aside. That cannot constitute a legal bar to the maintainability of the suit.

[SCHWABE, C. J.—If the property itself had been partitioned you would certainly have had no right of suit. Instead, that into which the property had been converted was included in the assets for partition. The result is the same. We have further recently held that unless the other co-parceners are prejudiced the alienee's right in equity to get the alienated properties allotted to alienor's share must prevail over a co-parcener's right to partition.]

Mr. C. S. Venkatachariar. In Second Appeal No. 817, 1920 the question that arose for consideration was somewhat different from the present one. But, apart from that, it was open to the alienee in this suit to have asked for a general partition. He has not asked for any. There is nothing to prevent him even now from filing such a suit separately. He was not a party to the partition between the father and the sons and is not bound by it. There is nothing to prevent him from re-opening it to work out his right in equity. Those rights of the alienee cannot bar the present suit. The alienation not being for a binding purpose, the co-parceners are legally entitled to have it set aside.

Mr. L. S. Veera Raghava Iyer for the alienee and Mr. A. Srirangachariar for the other co-parcener, were not called upon.

JUDGMENT.

Schwabe, C. J.—In this case the facts are, that the 1st plaintiff, the managing member of a joint Hindu family, in 1903 sold some land. It is conceded that that sale was not binding on the other members of the family as not being for necessity. The plaintiff was at the date of that sale 17 years of age and he knew all about it then and thereafter. The money that was realised on the sale was invested by the managing member in a family money-lending business which he carried on. In 1915 there was a general partition of the family property between the plaintiff and the 1st defendant and other members of the family. In that partition the money-lending business was brought into account but the property alienated in 1903 was not, though the proceeds of that sale, were in effect brought into the accounts of the money-lending business as it stood in 1915.

After this partition, plaintiff sued the other members of his family and the alienee to recover back the property alienated. It was held by the Munsif and the Subordinate Judge that the alienation was perfectly good. It was also held by the Subordinate Judge that on the partition in 1915 this property was brought into account in the way I have mentioned. In my judgment, that finding which was on admitted facts, was conclusive of the suit. It is only in his capacity as co-parcener that a member can sue for joint family property unlawfully alienated. His suit must be in the nature of a partition suit. In that suit, it is open to the alienee to claim partition, so that the property in dispute may, if possible, without injustice, be decreed to the alienor on partition and the alienee standing in his shoes may keep it. But once you have got a general partition in which the property in question and the sale of it has been taken into account, the parties to that partition ceased to be co-parceners. If there were property left outstanding and not dealt with in that partition, they would be entitled, indeed, to claim that property and to have that property divided. But the property in question in this suit was taken into consideration in the partition between the parties and the plaintiff has no right, title or interest whatever to it. He cannot sue for partition, there being nothing left outstanding for partition. He cannot sue his father or other members of the family. I entirely fail to see, that being so, how he can sue the alienee of his father. The second appeal on that ground alone must be dismissed with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 115, O. XXIII, r. 1—Withdrawal of suit—Costs of defendant—Discretion of Court—Revision.

Where a plaintiff is allowed to withdraw his suit, the ordinary rule is that costs follow the event and if a plaintiff finds he is unable to proceed with his suit and asks for leave to withdraw it, the opposite party is entitled to the costs which he has been put to in defending the suit. [p. 324, col. 2.]

The discretion of the Court as to the award of costs, so long as it is judicially exercised, should not be bound down by any artificial rules. A great deal must depend upon the facts of each case. [p. 324, col. 2.]

Although in a particular case of a withdrawal of a suit it may be a sound exercise of discretion to refuse costs where the suit is based on a state of law which has afterwards been altered, the most important thing to consider in all such cases is on which of the parties rests the responsibility for the litigation. Where the plaintiff has been in the wrong throughout, the defendant should not be deprived of his costs. [p. 324, col. 2.]

Mr. H. V. Divatia, with him Mr. Hiralal D. Nanavati, for the Applicant.

Mr. R. J. Thakor, for the Opponents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application in revision to set aside the order of the First Class Subordinate Judge of November 17, 1920, by which he allowed the plaintiff's Suit No. 572 of 1919 to be withdrawn, but refused to allow the defendants their costs. The ordinary rule is, that costs follow the event, and that, if the plaintiff finds himself unable to proceed with his suit, and asks for leave to withdraw it, then the opposite party is entitled to the costs which he has been put to in defending the suit. The granting of leave to withdraw from a suit is a concession because the defendant is ordinarily entitled to ask the Court to decide the suit on the merits, and if he wins, he would be entitled to his costs. The Judge declined to follow the ordinary rule, as he thought he ought to follow the decision in Ramaswami Naicken v. Venkataswami Naicken (1) where it was held that it was a good cause for depriving a successful respondent of the costs of an appeal if the law had been altered since the filing of the appeal. But it seems to me that he has read one portion of the judgment in that case, and not the other, with the result that he has failed to realize the ratio decidendi. No doubt it may be in a particular case a sound exercise of discretion to refuse costs where the suit is based on a state of law, which has been afterwards altered either by Statute or by the decision of a superior Tribunal, and that might be a good ground for the decision in this case provided the learned Judge had also considered the facts, for the judgment in Ramaswami Naicken v. Venkataswami Naicken (1) proceeds at page 64:—

"Under the Indian law, it can safely be stated that the discretion of the Court as to the award of costs, so long as it is judicially exercised, should not be bound down by any artificial rules. A great deal must depend upon the facts of each case and upon its presentation by the party and upon circumstances and authorities which were pre-existing before the suit was launched. has been responsible for the whole of the litigation; neither the plaintiffs nor the other defendants have been guilty of any act of commission or omission which can be charged against them. If the judgment of the Divisional Bench had stood, the appellants might have succeeded. That is a consideration which cannot altogether be ignored in apportioning costs. Taking all these circumstances into consideration, we think the appellant should not be made to pay the costs of defendants."

There the costs had followed the event. The first defendant who was responsible for the whole of the litigation was made to pay the costs of the other defendants. In this case it is just the opposite way. From the decision in Civil Suit No 85 of 1918, the basic suit in these disputes, which came up to this Court, and is reported [see Khimchand v. Bhogilal (2)], it will be seen that it is the present respondents-plaintiffs who had been in the wrong throughout, and if the learned Judge had considered all the facts and surrounding circumstances of the case, he would have seen, that it was not the present applicant who was responsible for the litigation but the respondents-plaintiffs. That makes a great deal of difference in considering who should pay the costs of the suit which was allowed to be withdrawn. In this case the Judge has not considered all the facts which he was bound to consider, before exercising his discretion with regard to the award of costs; and when there is an omission to consider the necessary circumstances then there cannot be a sound exercise of discretion, and this Court is entitled to interfere. We think the application must be allowed, and the applicant must get his costs of the suit and of this application.

JUDGMENT.—I think the amendment was properly allowed in this case. There is nothing to show that the claim based on the original debt is barred by limitation. That is a matter to be decided in the suit. If it is barred, the suit will no doubt be dismissed. There is no reason why a claim for money due based on the original loan or dealings should not be combined with a claim for the same money as due under a pro-note; in case there is any difficulty in enforcing the note, the party is entitled to fall back on the original consideration. See Duggempudi Nagamma v. Tirumala Reddi (1). Pleadings—Appeal, second—Question of limitation Question of law, when not entertainable.

Although questions of limitation, being questions of law, are not excluded from being heard in second appeal when they have not been raised in the lower Courts, where a question of law depends upon a finding of fact or evidence, and that evidence has not been led in the Trial Court, the High Court in second appeal will not deal with the question.

Second appeal from the decision of the Assistant Judge, Satara, in Appeal No. 284 of 1920, confirming the decree passed by the Second Class Subordinate Judge at Wai, in Civil Suit No. 833 of 1918.

Mr. S. R. Bakhale, for the Appellants.

Mr. P. B. Shingne, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff sued to obtain a declaration that he was the owner of the plaint lands, and that the tenants in actual cultivation of the lands were his own tenants, and for an injunction restraining the defendants from recovering rent of the lands from the tenants or otherwise interfering with them in any way. The suit was brought in the Court of the Second Class Subordinate Judge at Wai, although the lands were situate within the jurisdiction of the Court at Rahimatpur. No objection, however, was taken to the jurisdiction of the Wai Court, presumably because the suit asked for personal relief respecting immoveable property held by or on behalf of the defendant within the proviso to section 16 of the Civil Procedure Code, and it may be admitted that the suit is not one for possession of land, in which case the Wai Court could have had no jurisdiction. So we need not consider the question whether the point of jurisdiction had been raised too late under section 21 of the Civil Procedure Code. But, although it is not a suit for possession, the issues which were raised in the Trial Court were the same issues as would be raised in a suit for possession, and it was found by the Court that the plaintiff was in possession of the suit lands within twelve years of the suit. In the first appeal Court the decree in favour of the plaintiff was confirmed.

For the first time in second appeal it is suggested that the period of limitation for such a suit is six years, not twelve. It may very well be that the period of limitation for the plaintiff's suit was six years. But it would be a question of fact when time began to run against the plaintiff for the suit which he brought; and although questions of limitation being questions of law are not excluded from being heard in second appeal, when they have not been raised in the lower Courts, we have always maintained that where a question of law depends upon a finding of fact on evidence and that evidence has not been led in the Trial Court, then this Court in second appeal will not deal with the question of law. The defendants have not proved that the plaintiff was not in possession within six years of the suit, and they have not put the plaintiff to the proof that he was. We cannot, therefore, remand the case to the Trial Court for a finding on an issue of fact which was never raised in the Trial Court, and as we cannot consider the question of law without that finding, we now decline to deal with it. It follows, the plaintiff's suit was rightly decreed. The appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Where a member of a joint Hindu family has been declared insolvent, the Insolvency Court alone has jurisdiction in the matter of a debt due by him jointly with other members of the family, despite the fact that there are minors concerned who are not insolvents. Such a debt must be proved under section 28 of the Provincial Insolvency Act. It cannot be split up so as to render a suit competent for the recovery of a moiety of the debt from the non-insolvent members of the family in the ordinary Courts.

Application for revision of the judgment and decree of the Judge, Small Cause Court, Wardha, dated the 30th June 1922, in Civil Suit No. 54 of 1922.

Mr. D. T. Mangalmurti, for the Applicants.

Mr. Atmaram Bhagwant, for the Non-Applicants.

ORDER.—In this case plaintiffs state that after making accounts the deceased Shrikrishna and defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 3 and defendant No. 4 were found to owe Rs. 1,443 on 4th January 1916. Rs. 1,000 were remitted, Rs. 143 paid off and for the balance of Rs. 300 the 4th defendant executed a bond for himself and for the minor defendants Nos. 1 to 3, they being members of a joint Hindu family. Plaintiffs sue on that bond.

The plaint contains the following note:—

“Defendant No. 4 in this suit has been declared insolvent. An application is made to the Insolvency Court for permission to file a suit against him. Plaintiffs will file a copy of that order in this suit later on.” That order was never filed. The bond itself states that it was signed by Ganpat Balkrishna for himself and as guardian of defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 3. The lower Court has found for the plaintiff. It finds that Ganpati executed the bond in suit for previous debts owing by himself and his brother Shrikrishna, the deceased father of defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 3. The family was joint and Ganpati was the managing member of the family after the death of Shrikrishna and that as the most senior member of the family he could execute the money bond on behalf of the family. There being a plea that the first defendant was of age the Court thinks this point immaterial for Ganpati as manager could act for the family.

It is here not denied that Ganpati was declared an insolvent on 14th April 1909 and it is here contended that plaintiffs were bound to bring this case in the Insolvency Court. As a matter of fact, they brought the existence of this debt to the notice of the Insolvency Court but nothing further seems to have been done. It is contended that under section 28 of the Provincial Insolvency Act the debt would have to be proved under that Act. There seems to me some force in this contention. It has been held that, where the father of a joint Hindu family which includes minor sons as well as himself seeks the protection of the Bankruptcy Court, he must place all his property at the disposal of the Court: see Barwan Das v. O. M. Chiene (1); and it has also been held that the members of a joint Hindu family can be adjudicated insolvents in a single petition by a creditor if they are liable on a joint debt or have been guilty of a joint act of insolvency.

It is very clear that in the present case the plaintiffs could not proceed against Ganpati in the Court they did. This situation is accepted by the learned Pleader for the plaintiffs here. But it is contended that the suit against the minors would lie and that at the most the debt should be cut into half and half, and the half appertaining to Shrikrishna's share be made payable from Shrikrishna's share of the family property. I am not able to accede to this request. It seems to me that in a case like the present it was the plaintiffs' business to proceed with their case under the Insolvency Act despite the fact that there were minors concerned who were not bankrupts. It is impossible to split the debt into two and to treat the debt as two separate debts, one against the representatives of Shrikrishna and the other against Ganpati. The debt is one, if it exists at all, for which the family property of the whole family would be liable. I think the plaintiffs have mistaken their venue and that this case should not have been gone into by the Small Cause Court but by the Bankruptcy Court.

For the above reasons, I set aside the decree of the lower Court and dismiss plaintiffs' suit with costs. They will pay the defendants' costs throughout.

Hindu temple—Idol, removal and replacement of—Worshiper, right of.

The removal of an idol from a temple in order to replace it by a new one is not an act of worship; such removal is an act of management, and a worshipper who claims the right to remove it, must prove that he has some right to manage the temple.

Second appeal against a decree of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge, of Ellore, in Appeal Suits No. 187 and 188 and 190 and 191 of 1919 (Appeal Suit, Nos. 170, 171, 176 and 177 of 1918 on the file of the Sub-Court, Ellore) preferred against a decree of the Court of the District Munsif of Ellore, in Original Suit No. 307 of 1916.

Messrs. A. Krishnaswami Aiyar and A. Venkatachalam, for the Appellant.

Messrs. B. Sathanarayana and Ch. Raghava Rao, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the question is, whether the plaintiff can sue to establish his right to remove an idol from the temple of his village, that idol being alleged to be cracked, and to re-place it by a new idol made by himself. The temple, it is not disputed, has no trustees and no property. It is referred to as the temple of the villagers, who are the worshippers in it.

The plaintiff supports his right to remove the idol and to re-place it by a new one on the ground that it would be an act of worship, which, like any other villager, he is entitled to perform. We cannot see how, in any ordinary sense, the removal of an idol from a temple and the substitution of a new one is an act of worship.

Next the plaintiff argues that such removal and substitution would be an act of management. The difficulty, however, is that he has not shown that he has any right to manage. He, no doubt, presented an application in the Court of first instance for leave to sue as representing the villagers as a body. But that application was dismissed, and, as he has no ground of appeal against the dismissal as improper, we are not prepared to allow him to argue the point. In these circumstances, the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs payable by the plaintiff (appellant) to defendants Nos. 1 to 9, 12, 13, 15 and 16 (respondents Nos. 1 to 9, 11, 12, 14 and 15). There was no necessity for the 14th defendant (13th respondent) to appear here and he will bear his own costs.

Article 130 of the First Schedule to the Limitation Act does not apply unless and until the land is found to be rent-free; the mere non-payment of rent for a period does not bar the landlord's right to have the rent assessed and to recover rent from his tenant. [p. 331 col. 1.]

Kamini Sundari Chowdhurani v. Abdul Halim, 47 Ind. Cas. 420; 28 C. L. J. 254 and Dhanajoy Manjhi v. Upendranath Deb; 46 Ind. Cas. 428; 22 C. W. N. 685, relied on.

Under Article 131 of the First Schedule to the Limitation Act the right to levy assessment, as a recurring right, accrues when there has been a demand and refusal only in those cases where the relationship of landlord and tenant or landlord and occupant has ever existed. Once that right is established, then the non-payment of rent or assessment would not be sufficient to enable the tenant to begin to set up a title by adverse possession. There must be some overt act, such as refusal to pay the rent or assessment, before time begins to run. [p. 332 col. 2.]

A suit to assess and recover rent of the plaintiff's mal land is not barred by limitation under Art. 131 of the First Schedule to the Limitation Act where the defendant repudiates the right of the plaintiff to assess and recover rent for the first time within 12 years of the suit. [p. 332, col. 2.]

Where a contract between the landlord and tenant contemplates that liability to pay rent should accrue only after assessment, the tenant should not be made liable for rent for a period anterior to the assessment. [p. 332, col. 2.]

Appeal against a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Rajshahye, dated the 30th of November 1920, affirming that of the Officiating Munsif, Boalia, dated the 27th of September 1918.

Babu Jalindra Nath Lahiri, for the Appellants:—The Courts below ought to have held that the plaintiff's suit was barred by limitation under Art. 130 of the Schedule to the Limitation Act. Under that Article a suit like the present ought to have been instituted within 12 years from the date when the right to resume or assess the land first accrues. The right to assess the land first accrued on the termination of the first ten years of the settlement. But after the expiration of that period no rent was ever assessed and the present suit having been instituted more than 12 years after the expiration of the first ten years of the settlement, that is, more than 12 years after the right to assess accrued, is barred by limitation under Art. 130 of the Limitation Act. Even if it be held that the suit is within time, having regard to the express terms of the settlement, the tenant could not be made liable to pay rent for a period antecedent to the assessment.

pondents.—Article 130 of the Limitation Act has no manner of application to the facts of the present case. That Article relates to the assessment of rent-free land. See Kamini Sundari Chowdhurani v. Abdul Halim (1). The mere non-payment of rent cannot make the land rent-free. Refers to Prosonna Kumar Mukherjee v. Srikanth Raut (2), Barhamdat Missir v. Krishna Sahay (3) and Ganesh Vinayak Joshi v. Sitabai Narayan Joshi (4). If the liability to assessment is established there is no reason why the tenant should not be liable to pay rent for the period antecedent to the assessment.

JUDGMENT.

Mookerjee, J.—This is an appeal by the defendants in a suit for assessment and recovery of rent upon declaration that the disputed land is rent-paying. The Courts below have found in favour of the plaintiff, and the substantial question now in controversy is, whether the claim for assessment is or is not barred by limitation. The defendants have urged a further point of subordinate importance, namely, that rent should not be decreed for a period antecedent to the date of assessment.

On the 18th December 1844 one Karim Sarcar, now represented by the defendants-appellants, executed a kabuliyat in favour of Mritunjoy Moitra, the father of the plaintiff-respondent. As the determination of the rights and obligations of the parties depends upon the terms of the contract between them, the relevant portion of this document is set out here:

"I, Karim Sircar, son of Fozdar Sircar, of Haldi, Thana Tanar, District Rajshahye, executed this kabuliyat in the year 1251 to the effect following:—

"That you have an eight-anna Zemindari interest in Kismat Haldi the Mahal No. 1210, borne on the Touzi of the Collectorate, within Pargana Chinashour which you are in ownership and possession of without any objection of others. Two plots of land described in schedule below appertaining to your distinct Saham of the aforesaid eight-annas of the aforesaid Touzi and measuring about 4 bighas, are now lying patit and covered with jungle. As it requires great labour and expense of money to render the lands of the aforesaid two dags fit for cultivation by clearing the jungle thereof and filling up khals and khandars you notified to make the said land hassil by granting a settlement thereof for a term of 10 years, free of rent, that is to say, keeping the rent in abeyance. I, accordingly, having agreed to take the said land, execute this kabuliyat and agree that I shall myself bear the expenses that will be required to render the lands of the two dags mentioned in schedule below fit for cultivation by clearing the jungle thereof and filling up the khals and khandars, and to recoup myself for the said expenses, I shall enjoy the profits of the said lands and hold the same as lakheraj for 10 years from the beginning of 1252 up to the end of 1261: that is, up to (torn) you shall not get any rent (torn) but on the expiry I shall be bound to pay the rent that may be fixed upon a measurement and according to the rate and the area of land whether more or less. If I, through any neglect on my part, fail to re-claim the said lands within the said term or if I partly re-claimed the same and leave partly unreclaimed, then you shall, on the expiry of the term, bring the said land into your khas possession, and I shall be bound to pay the costs that will be incurred to bring the said land under cultivation, as also damages. If I do not pay the same amicably, you shall realise the same with costs by bringing a suit in proper Court. I shall keep intact the limits, etc., of the land. If any one encroaches upon the boundaries through any neglect on my part, then I shall make good the loss that you may sustain to bring the same in your possession, together with interest thereon. If any measurement of the mahal or assessment of rent thereof is made, then I shall be bound to pay the rent that may be fixed at any time according to the rate. To the above effect I, having received a patlak as a counterpart of this kabuliyat, do execute this habuliyat. Finis. The 5th Pous 1251 B. S."

There is no room for doubt that the land leased out was mal land, which was intended to be re-claimed and brought under cultivation by the lessee. No rent was to be paid during the first ten years, inasmuch as the lessee would have to undergo great labour and incur heavy expenditure. On the termination of ten years, that is, with effect from 13th April 1855, the lessee would be liable to pay such rent as might be fixed upon a measurement and according to the rate and the area of the land. No rent was, however, ever assessed, and in the course of Survey and Settlement proceedings, which took place shortly before this suit, the defendants asserted before the Revenue Authorities that the land was held by them as perpetually rent-free. The plaintiff thereupon instituted the present suit on the 3rd October 1917 for declaration that the land was rent paying, for assessment of rent at the rate of Rs 6. a bigha, or such other rate as might be deemed fair and equitable by the Court, and for recovery of arrears at the assessed rate with effect from the 14th April 1914. The defendants resisted the claim on a variety of grounds which need not now be re-capitulated. They were all overruled by the Primary Court, and rent was decreed at the rate claimed. This decree has been affirmed by the Subordinate Judge on appeal. On the present appeal, two points have been urged, namely, firstly, that the suit was barred by limitation under Art. 130 of the Schedule to the Indian Limitation Act; and, secondly, that rent should not have been decreed for a period antecedent to the assessment.

As regards the first question, our attention has been invited to Art. 130 which prescribes that a suit for the resumption or assessment of rent-free land must be instituted within twelve years from the date when the right to resume or assess the land first accrued. This Article, in our opinion, has no application to the present case. It was pointed out in Kamini Sundari Chowdhurani v. Abdul Ha'im (1) that Art. 130 can have no application, unless and until the land is found to be rent free; the mere non-payment of rent for a period does not bar the landlord's right to have the rent assessed and to recover rent from his tenant. To the same effect is the decision in Dhananjay Manjhi v. Upendranath Deb (2). There, as here, the suit was not for the resumption or assessment of rent-free land, but for the assessment of mal land presumably liable to be assessed. In that state of things, the circumstances that rent has not in fact been paid for more than 12 years before suit, is not per se sufficient to support a decree of dismissal; Prosonna Kumar Mukherjee v. Srikanth Raut (2) which has been affirmed by the Judicial Committee in Jagdeo Narain Singh v. Baldeo Singh (6). The right to have rent assessed must continue so long as the relationship of landlord and tenant continues in respect of land liable to be assessed; Birendra Kisore Manikya Bahadur v. Nazir Mahommed (7). The right can only be lost by one or other of the modes recognised by law. The land is prima facie mal land, and until the presumption and the results flowing therefrom are rebutted, the principle applied which underlies the decision in Protap Chunder Chowdhury v. Shukhee Socnduree Dassee (8) as explained in Bir Chunder Manikya v. Raj Mohun Goswami (9), see also Jotindra Mohan Tagore v. Chandra Nath Saffi (10), Barhamdai Missir v. Krishna Sahay (13), Jagannatha Pandiajiar v. Muthia Pillai (11), Mohammad Husain v. Mohammadi B. B. (12). Reference may also be made to the decision of the Judicial Committee in Hurryhur Mookhopadhyaya v. Madub Chunder Baboo (13) and the decisions of this Court in Arsumnessa v. Peary Mohun Mookerjee (14) and Koylashbhashiny Dossee v. Gocoolmoni Dossee (15) where the law applicable to the resumption and assessment of lakheraj grants will be found reviewed; see also Regulation

AKBAR SARKAR V. RAMESH CHANDRA.

XIX of 1793, section 10 and Regulation II of 1805, section 3. The true scope of Arts. 130 and 131 was recently explained by the Bombay High Court in the cases of Sakharam Gopal Page v. Trimbakrao Ramchandra (16) and Bhimabai v. Swamirao (17). The right to levy assessment upon rent-free lands is governed by Art. 130 and is consequently extinguished under section 28, if no suit to enforce the right is instituted within the time allowed, Abhoy Churn Pul v. Kally Pershad (18), Madhavrao Hariharrao v. Anusuyabai (19). On the other hand, under Art. 131, the right to levy assessment would, as a recurring right, accrue when there has been a demand and refusal, only in those cases where the relationship of landlord and tenant or landlord and occupant had ever existed. Once that right is established, then the non-payment of rent or assessment would not be sufficient to enable the tenant to begin to set up a title by adverse possession. There must be some overt act, such as a refusal to pay the rent or assessment, before time begins to run, see Ganesh Vinayak Joshi v. Sitabai Narayan Joshi (4), Kirpa Ram v. Jai Chand (20), Bangarayya Garu v. Jagannatha Garu Raju (21), Manavikrama Zamorin Raja Avergal of Calicut v. Achutha Menon (22). This is in harmony with the view that where a tenant claimed land as rent-free to the knowledge of the plaintiff, and no suit for resumption or assessment was brought till after the expiry of 12 years, the suit was barred by limitation under Art. 130, Birendra Kishore v. Roshan Khan (23), Birendra Kishore v. Akram Ali (24), Birendra Kishore v. Dilwar Ali (25).

(25) 13 Ind. Cas. 517.

In the case before us, the defendants repudiated the right of the plaintiff to assess and recover rent, for the first time within 12 years of the suit, consequently, the suit is not barred under Art. 131.

As regards the second question, we are of opinion that the defendants should not be made liable for a period antecedent to the assessment. The contract clearly contemplated that liability to pay rent should accrue only after assessment. We should, in such circumstances, follow the course adopted in Rangayya Appa Rao v. Bobba Sriramulu (26) and Assanulla v. Mohini Mohan Das (27) rather than apply the principle that a landlord may claim back rents for additional area, Jagannath Manjhi v. Jumman Ali Patwari (28), Upendra Nath Nag Chowdhury v. Surya Kanta Roy Chowdhury (29).

The result is, that this appeal is allowed in part, and the decree of the Court below modified. The plaintiff will be declared entitled to rent at the rate claimed with effect from the date of the judgment of the Trial Court (27th September 1918) and not before. The plaintiff will, however, be entitled to his costs in all the Courts.

Railways Act (IX of 1890), s. 72—Non-delivery of consignment—Suit for damages—Risk Note, B—Loss of consignment—Burden of proof.

Under section 72 (1), Indian Railways Act, 1890, the responsibility of a Railway Administration for the loss, destruction or deterioration of animals or goods delivered to the Administration to be carried by Railway is that of a bailee under sections 151, 152, and 161 of the Contract Act. But this responsibility might be limited by special contract as provided by clause (2) of the section. Risk Note B is one form of such contract, which exempts the Railway Administration from liability, unless for the loss of a complete consignment under particular circumstances. [p. 334, col. 1.]

Where in a suit against a Railway Company for damages caused by non-delivery of goods consigned to it under a Risk Note B executed by the consignor, the Company admit non-delivery, such admission does not exonerate them from liability; they must plead and prove that the circumstances in which the Risk Note was intended to operate and exempt them from liability have occurred. A mere allegation of loss by the Company or an admission of non-delivery by the consignor is no proof of such loss. [p. 334, cols. 1 & 2.]

Application for revision of the decree of the Small Causes Court, Nagpur, dated the 26th September 1921, in Civil Suit No. 1098 of 1921.

REFERENCE.

Hallifax, A. J. C. (August 10, 1922.) The plaintiff sued the G. I. P. Railway Company for compensation for their failure to deliver goods which he had consigned at Nagpur for delivery to himself at Ahmadabad. The defendant Company apparently admitted the loss of the whole consignment, which consisted of one bale of cotton only, though it was asserted that the loss took place after the bale had been handed over to another Company. As the consignor had executed what is known as Risk Note Form "B", it was held, on the authority of Agent, G. I. P. Railway, Bombay v. Karaylal (1), that the plaintiff had to prove that the loss occurred in the special circumstances mentioned in his contract which would make the Company liable to him in damages for it, and as no evidence was given the suit was dismissed. Several later rulings of the Bombay High Court have been published, particularly Ghelabhai v. E. I. Railway Company (2), in which a somewhat different view has been taken of this matter, which is that mere non-delivery is not necessarily "loss", and that the Railway Company cannot prove loss by merely admitting it but must at least prove that the goods are really lost and are not lying about on their premises, that is to say, that some kind of a search has been made for them. I am distinctly inclined to the view that, if nothing is known about the goods except that they were delivered to the Railway Company by the consignor but were not delivered by the Railway Company to the consignee, the presumption must be that they are still in the possession of the Company, and it is for the Company to rebut that presumption by showing that they have gone out of their possession, that is to say, are lost. This view appears, however, to conflict with that taken in the published ruling of this Court already mentioned, where the admission of loss by the Company was accepted as sufficient, though the point was not specifically raised. Under section 9 of the C. P. Courts Act, 1917, I, therefore, refer for a decision of a Bench the question of law which is already sufficiently defined in this order.

OPINION.

Kotwal, A. J. C. and Pridaux, A. J. C.—(December 12, 1922).—Under section 72 (1), Indian Railways Act, 1890, the responsibility of a Railways Administration for the loss, destruction or deterioration of animals or goods delivered to the Administration to be carried by Railway is that of a bailee under sections 151, 152 and 161 of the Contract Act. goods delivered for carriage may be wholly or partly lost or destroyed and to that extent not delivered to the consignee by the Railway Company or they may have deteriorated or been damaged while in the Company's possession before delivery to the consignee. It may also be that the goods are neither lost nor destroyed but are still in the Company's possession, mislaid as it were and not delivered. In most cases of non-delivery the plaintiff is not in a position to say whether the goods are lost by the Company or are destroyed though in the plaint the allegation is made that the goods are lost. All that is meant is that the Company has failed to deliver the goods and alleges in explanation that they are lost. It is possible that before the institution of the suit the Company may have satisfied the plaintiff that the goods are really lost and the plaintiff may come into Court with an admission that they are lost, but that has never happened in our experience.

To lay a foundation for the Company's liability the plaintiff would have to prove non-delivery, loss, destruction or deterioration of the goods bailed but the responsibility under section 72 (1) might be limited by special contract as provided in clause (2) of the same section. Risk Note B is one form of such contract. It provides for exemption of liability for any loss, destruction or deterioration of or damage to the goods from any cause whatever except for the loss of a complete consignment or of one or more complete packages forming part of the consignment due either to the wilful neglect of the administration or to theft or to the wilful neglect of its servants, etc. As stated in the order of reference, the plaintiff in this case really sues on the ground that he delivered certain goods to the Railway Administration for carriage to Ahmedabad and delivery to himself there and that the Company has failed to deliver them to him. Apparently, he is not in a position to admit that the Railway Company has lost the goods.

The Company admit non-delivery but set up in defence the Risk-Note. It is for them, therefore, to plead and prove that the circumstances in which the Risk

Note is intended to operate and exempt them from liability have occurred, or in other words the goods have in this case been lost or destroyed. Neither a mere allegation of loss by the Company nor an admission of non-delivery by the plaintiff is proof of such loss. If the Railway Company prove the loss, which they may do as stated in the order of reference, they are exempted from liability by the Risk-Note unless the plaintiff proves that his case comes within the exception mentioned therein. It may be that the loss alleged by the Railway Company is admitted by the plaintiff. In such a case the Company need not adduce evidence to prove the loss. In Agent, G. I. P. Railway, Bombay v. Karaylal (1) the point now raised was not discussed and it may be that the plaintiff had admitted that the goods were lost. It is probable, however, that what both parties meant when they spoke of "loss", in that, as in most other similar cases decided before the point was raised by the Bombay High Court, was that the Company did not know where the goods were at the moment and so had not delivered them, not that any serious search had been made for them and had failed or that they were known to have gone out of the Company's possession or control. We agree with the view taken in the Order of Reference and the Bombay case referred to in it.

JUDGMENT.—Mr. R. N. Padhye appears for the Applicants and Mr. P. Lobo for the Railway Company. For the reasons stated in the Order of Reference, dated 10th August 1922, and the judgment of the Bench thereon dated 12th December 1922, (of both of which copies will be sent to the lower Court with this order) the decree of the lower Court is set aside and the suit is remanded to that Court for a fresh decision. The costs of these proceedings, in which the Pleader's fee will be Rs. 15 will follow the result.

Mr. K. P. Rama Krishna Iyer, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

Spencer, J.—The petitioner applied under O. XXI r. 89, Civil Procedure Code, to have the sale of certain properties set aside on depositing the amount specified in the proclamation of sale plus 5 per cent of the purchase-money. The District Munsif and the District Judge to whom she appealed both disallowed her application but on different grounds. The District Munsif's reason for dismissing her application was that she had previously applied to pay the amount due to the decree-holder before the sale was held and that he then rejected her application because she had no locus standi to pay the amount. The District Judge dismissed the appeal on the ground that the petitioner having claimed the property previously in a claim petition under O. XXI, r. 58, and that claim petition having been dismissed, her only right was to bring a suit within one year to establish her title.

The property sold in Court-auction originally belonged to Swaminadha Mudali. The petitioner claims as a legatee under a Will of Papammal, who purchased the property from Swaminadha Mudali in 1907. In 1911 when the property was attached by another creditor of Swaminadha Mudali, Papammal put in a claim petition and having failed therein, she instituted a suit and established her title in second appeal. Again, the property was attached in 1915 by another creditor and upon a further claim petition being put in by her in 1915 being dismissed she brought a second suit which was dismissed for default. The appellant also preferred a claim petition in 1920 which was dismissed as too late, and upon the sale being adjourned, she filed a second application on February 9th, 1921 which was dismissed on 23rd, March 1921.

That being the history of the case, we must see whether the orders of the lower Courts can be supported for the reasons given therein. The District Munsif observed that the order passed on the petitioner's application before the sale was binding on her. He describes the petition as a similar one. The earlier application was one made under no definite provision of law, to have the sale stopped on payment of the decree amount. It may have been treated as an application under O. XXI, r. 2, for adjustment of the decree. The Court held that the petitioner had no locus standi to make the application and that money could not be received from her. There is no connection between her application made after the sale had taken place as a person holding an interest in the property sold to have the sale set aside under O. XXI, r. 89, and the application to pay the decree amount before the sale took place. The District Munsif has not decided that the petitioner is a person not holding any interest in the property either in his previous order or in the present order and, so the previous order cannot operate as res judicata to prevent her making the present application.

DEANAMMAL V. VÉRARAGHAVALU NAIDU.

The District Judge has misconceived the effect of the claim petition. The purpose of a petitioner who makes a claim under O. XXI. r. 58 to a property attached is to have the attachment set aside. Granting that the right was negatived, there is nothing to prevent the same person coming forward and applying unconditionally to have the sale set aside under r. 89 for the reason that he holds an interest in the suit property. The learned Judge went on to observe that the petitioner's only remedy was to set aside the sale by a regular suit. At the time when the application under r. 89 was made, the right to bring a suit under r. 63 had not become barred. That remedy was still open to her. But so also was this other remedy. The effect of the dismissal of the petitioner's claim petition was not to decide finally that the petitioner had no interest to ask that the sale should be set aside on payment of the decree amount plus five per cent. into Court but only to decide that she had no right to have the attachment raised. These are two very different things. The first (that under r. 89) may imply the existence of an interest derived from the same source as the owner's or an interest paramount to the judgment-debtor's; the second (that under rule 58) implies the existence of a right independent from and an antagonistic to the judgment-debtors. It is impossible to conceive how the dismissal of the claim petition could operate as res judicata to prevent the admission of an application to pay the decree amount and get the property released after the sale. As the Courts below have not decided whether the petitioner owns or holds any interest in the property sold by virtue of a title acquired before the sale, that question must now be remitted to the District Munsif for decision upon the merits and for the disposal of the application made to him. The petitioner is entitled to recover costs of this civil revision petition. Costs of the subsequent proceedings will be provided for in the final order.

Venkatasubba Rao, J.—I agree.

I would like to add just a word. It has been argued that the applicant's right is based upon a title paramount to that of the judgment-debtor, and that r. 89 is not, therefore, applicable and in support of the proposition, Dulhin Molkura Koer v. Bansidhar Singh (1) has been cited. With great respect, I am unable to follow that decision. It seems to me that to take this narrow view of r. 89 will in many cases defeat its object. Let me take an example. Supposing B sold a property worth Rs. 10,000 to A, that long subsequent thereto a decree was passed against B for the trifling sum of Rs. 10 and the decree-holder attached the property and brought it to sale, why should A not be entitled to make the deposit and apply under r. 89, if, in his opinion, it would not be worth his while to put himself to the trouble and expense of preferring a claim before sale under r. 58 or establishing after sale his right to the property in other legal proceedings? I am entirely opposed to unduly restricting the scope of the beneficent provision enacted in r. 89 when there are no words indicating that a narrow interpretation should be placed upon it.

KADIRAYA GOUNDAN AND OTHERS—
RESPONDENTS.Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 195—Sanction to prosecute—Order made by Munsif set aside by Sub-Judge—District Judge, jurisdiction of, to interfere—Delay in making application, effect of.

For the purposes of section 195 (7) (a) of the Criminal Procedure Code, appeals from a Subordinate Judge's Court must be regarded as ordinarily lying to the District Court; and a District Judge is competent to revoke or grant a sanction granted or refused by a Sub-Judge in a case in which sanction had originally been refused or granted by a Munsif. [p. 338, col. 2.]

Rapaka Viyyanna v. Parakala Bajamma, 44 Ind. Cas. 120 at p. 121; 19 Cr. L. J. 264, referred to.

Proceedings under section 195 are not appellate proceedings though they may in some respects resemble them. At each stage they are constituted by the grant or revocation of the sanction which some inferior Court has refused or granted and not with direct reference to the setting aside of that inferior authority's order. [p. 338, col. 2.] Where an application for sanction is made after considerable delay, and no satisfactory explanation is offered for the delay, it is a good ground for refusing sanction. [p. 338, col. 2.]

Petition praying that in the circumstances stated therein the High Court will be pleased to set aside the order, dated the 20th October 1921 of the District Court, Madura, in C. M. P. No. 191 of 1921, revoking the sanction that has been granted by the Subordinate Judge, Dindigul, for prosecuting the respondents herein in O. P. No. 10 of 1920 (O. P. No. 38 of 1920 on the file of the Court of the District Munsif, Periakulam.)

FACTS.—This was an application for granting sanction to prosecute the respondents for an offence under section 183, Indian Penal Code, in the following circumstances. The petitioner obtained a decree against the 1st respondent and others for a sum of money, in pursuance of which he applied for execution and obtained an order for the attachment of the judgment debtor's moveables. The amin went to the spot under the orders of the District Munsif, but was there resisted by the respondents and some others by threats of criminal force. The Police Inspector who accompanied the amin applied for sanction to prosecute the respondents under some sections of the Indian Penal Code (not section 183) and obtained it. But he having set on foot no criminal proceedings for more than 6 months, the petitioner applied for sanction about 8 months thereafter to the Deputy Munsif of Periakulam. The District Munsif dismissed the application because the petitioner was not ready with his evidence on the day the case was called. On appeal therefrom the Sub-Court of Dindigul set aside the dismissal and admitting into the evidence, the report of the amin, gave sanction to the petitioner. The respondents applied against that order to the District Judge and the District Judge on the merits held, that the delay of 8 months was not satisfactorily explained by the petitioner and revoked the sanction. On this, the petitioner filed this petition to the High Court under section 195, Criminal Procedure Code.

Mr. D. Ramaswami Ayyangar, for the Petitioner:—The District Judge's order revoking the sanction granted by the Sub-Judge was without jurisdiction. Under section 195 the appeal from the order passed by the Sub-Judge on appeal from the District Munsif, lies only to the High Court. The order passed by the Sub-Judge is of course to be regarded as an original order when we consider the applicability thereof. But then the jurisdiction invoked in, and the jurisdiction exercised by, the Sub-Court in this case is appellate. My contention as to the nature of the jurisdiction is supported by Jamna Das v. Sabapathy Chetti (1), Bapu v. Bapu (2), so that the order is to be regarded as an original order passed in the exercise of the Appellate Jurisdiction. Section 106 of the Civil Procedure Code provides that from such orders the appeal lies only to the High Court.

NARAYANAN CHETTIAR, A. R. R. M. N. V. KADIRAYA GOUNDAN.

I submit Rapaka Viyyanna v. Parakala Bajamma (3) was not correctly decided. Without denying that the order is not an original order, the form is decided by section 106, Civil Procedure Code. Their Lordships' attention does not seem to have been drawn to section 106 but only to 100. There being nothing in section 195, Criminal Procedure Code, to preclude the above interpretation, I submit the appeal to the District Court was without jurisdiction.

On the merits, the delay should not be looked into except as evidence of the bona fides of the applicant. Here the offence being of serious public importance and the finding being that it was not with personal motives the application was made, the sanction ought to be granted. In any case I have no objection to the sanction being accorded in the name of the Public Prosecutor of the District.

Messrs. K. S. Jayarama Ayyar, K. Rajah Aiyar and V. Ramaswami Ayyar, for the Respondents:—The order of the District Judge is in no sense appellate in character. The sanction proceedings do not really contemplate an appeal at all. In each case it is independent original jurisdiction. From the Sub-Judge's orders, appeals will lie both to the High Court and the District Court, the latter being of inferior jurisdiction will be the proper forum to apply to for revoking the Sub-Judge's sanction.

The decision in Rapaka Viyyanna v. Parakala Bajamma (3) in point.

On the merits, the delay in applying for sanction has not been properly explained. The District Judge's discretion should not be interfered with, in a matter like this.

ORDER.—This is an application for the grant of a sanction, which was originally granted by the Subordinate Judge, but was revoked by the District Judge.

The first question raised is whether the District Judge had jurisdiction to pass his order of revocation. That question must be answered with reference to the terms of section 195 (7) (a) of the Criminal Procedure Code. It is argued that this provision is not applicable or, if it is applicable, that the only Court competent to revoke the Sub-Judge's sanction was the High Court.

That argument is based on the consideration that the Subordinate Judge's sanction was itself given in the exercise of his Appellate Jurisdiction, because the matter had arisen in proceedings before the District Munsif, who had in the first instance refused sanction. We cannot see how with reference to the terms of section 195 (7) (a) the nature of the sanction proceedings is material, the only question under that provision being of the Court, to which appeals generally lie. It is then immaterial that appeals against appellate orders would lie from the Sub-Court to the High Court, and this is consistent with Rapaka Viyyanna v. Parakala Bajamma (3). It is a further objection to this argument that proceedings under section 195 are not appellate proceedings, though they may in some respects resemble them. For at each stage they are described as constituted by the grant or revocation of the sanction which some inferior authority has refused or has granted, not with direct reference to the setting aside of that inferior authority's order. We have no doubt that appeals from a Sub-Court must be regarded as ordinarily lying to the District Court and not to the High Court, because with reference to section 195 (7) (a) appeals actually lie from the Sub-Court to both those Courts and of the two the District Court is the Court of inferior jurisdiction. In these circumstances we hold that the District Judge's order was passed with jurisdiction.

Turning to the merits, we find that the sanction is asked for in respect of an occurrence on 23rd December 1919. No doubt that occurrence, as it is alleged, constituted a grave obstruction to the execution of a legal process. But we find that no application was made for sanction by the present petitioner for over 8 months after it. His explanation is that for six months of that period he did nothing, because the Police Sub-Inspector who was also concerned, had obtained sanction and he expected him to prosecute. We do not think that a sufficient explanation. For the petitioner could easily have ascertained whether the Sub-Inspector was going to prosecute and could have himself applied to the Court. For the remaining two months' delay, no particular explanation has been offered; and the Subordinate Judge in granting sanction observed with regard to it only that such delays were usual. We do not think that indulgence was justified on that ground. In these circumstances, no reason for dissent from the lower Court's order has been shown, and the petition must be dismissed.

CRIMINAL MISCELLANEOUS CASE. NO. 95
OF 1921.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 526
—Conviction of accused—Remand to same Magistrate, whether desirable—Magistrate having tried similar case between parties previously—Subsequent case, transfer of.

Where a Magistrate has already convicted an accused person of an offence and the latter, for some reason or other, has to be re-tried, that Magistrate is competent to try the case over again. But, where it is possible, it is desirable that such a re-trial should not be taken by an officer who has already expressed his final opinion upon the matter.

The mere fact, that a Magistrate has tried some other case involving somewhat similar facts possibly between the same parties, does not by itself necessarily constitute any ground why a case should not be tried by that Magistrate.

Criminal application.

Messrs. Manuk, Yunus and P. C. Roy, for the Petitioners.

Mr. Bankim Charan De, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application for the transfer of a case from the file of William Raha, Magistrate of Dhanbad, with second class powers, to the cognizance of some other competent Magistrate in the same place under the following circumstances.

The petitioners here were tried before Mr. Raha for offences under sections 323 and 448 of the Indian Penal Code and were sentenced to various penalties. There was, however, an appeal against this decision, made to the Deputy Commissioner of Dhanbad who, finding that the proper legal procedure, particularly with reference to section 342 of the Criminal Procedure Code, had not been complied with by Mr. Raha, remanded the case to him for re-trial from the point from which proceedings had begun to be irregular. I may also mention incidentally that another case (which is here described as the counter-case between these parties or some of them) had also been tried and disposed of by Mr. Raha in the early half of this year (that is to say, in April 1921) while his present judgment was dated the 18th of July last. I have read the judgment which Mr. Raha gave in July, and no doubt he has expressed a very strong opinion upon the guilt of the accused persons. The application is now made to me that it is desirable and fair in the interests of the accused persons that the matter should go back for a re-trial to some officer other than Mr. Raha who has already convicted and sentenced these applicants and had as well dealt with another case between the parties.

It is pointed out to me, by the learned Vakil for the respondents here, that there is ample authority for saying that because a Magistrate has tried some other case involving somewhat similar facts possibly between the same parties, that in itself does not constitute necessarily any ground why a case should not be remanded to the same Magistrate for re-trial by him. Similarly, too, I am far from saying that because a Magistrate has already convicted a person of an offence and the accused, for some reason or other, has to be re-tried, that Magistrate is incompetent to try the case over again. On the other hand, I think that, where it is possible, it is highly desirable that such a re-trial should not be taken by the officer who has already expressed his final opinion upon the matter. It is quite true that an endeavour may be made (and no doubt is made) to keep the mind entirely free from bias, and to eject from it any preconceived ideas which may have been formed in general by what has taken place at the earlier trial. But those are after all counsels of perfection, and, I am bound to say, that if I was in the position of having been convicted and sentenced of an offence by an individual; I should feel the greatest apprehension if my case was remanded to the same person for a re-trial.

I am satisfied that in this case the fairest and the most proper thing for all concerned will be to allow the application and to have the case re-tried by some other competent Magistrate in the Dhanbad Sub-Division, and I order accordingly.

Application allowed.

ORIGINAL SIDE APPEAL NO. 25 OF 1922.
May 5, 1922.

Chief Justice, Mr. Justice Oldfield and Mr. Justice Coutts-Trotter.

K. V. MUNUSWAMY MUDALIAR—
PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT

versus

RAJARATNAM PILLAI AND OTHERS—
DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 195—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 193, 465, 467—Sanction to prosecute—Duty of Trial Court—Discretion, exercise of—Appellate Court, duty of—"Produced or given in evidence" in s. 195 (1) (c), meaning of.

The expression "produced or given in evidence" in section 195 (1) (c) of the Criminal Procedure Code means tendered or admitted in the antecedent judicial proceeding. The mere fact that a document is mentioned in the affidavit of documents filed by a party and is filed in the office of the Court Translator for purposes of translation does not amount to its being "produced or given in evidence" within the meaning of the section. [p. 341, col. 2.]

Per Oldfield, J.—The duty of a Court granting sanction is discharged if it exercises a judicial discretion, and, similarly, the duty of the Appellate Court if it satisfies itself that such a discretion has been exercised. The former Court must, therefore, be required, whatever the extent to which the investigation undertaken for its own satisfaction has been carried, to put on record sufficient to demonstrate to the latter that its exercise of discretion has been judicial; and it is undesirable in fairness to the accused that it should do more. In case it does less the Appellate Court will have no choice but to ascertain the necessary facts for itself and base its conclusions on them. [p. 342, col. 2.]

The Court granting a sanction cannot be regarded as having exercised a judicial discretion when it has satisfied itself only that a prima facie case has been made out, it by that is meant only that formal evidence of the ingredients of the offence is available, without reference to defects which may deprive that evidence wholly or to a material extent of value. [p. 342, col. 2.]

The procedure laid down in section 195 of the Criminal Procedure Code is necessary in order to avoid the risk of frivolous or vexatious charges designed, not to vindicate justice, but to harass and annoy the persons against whom they are directed. Unless this has been borne in mind, the Court's use of its discretion cannot be regarded as judicial. The remoter the prospect of any public purpose being served the greater is the degree to which the Court should insist on ordinary evidence in support of the charge. [p. 343, col. 1.]

Per Coutts Trotter, J.—A Court in sanctioning a prosecution arising out of facts which have come before it during the trial of a civil case should not be supposed to be discharging that which is the task of the Committing Magistrate at a later stage and usurping his functions by explicitly or tacitly pronouncing that there is a prima facie case. [p. 344, col. 1.]

A Court which allows sanction does no more than say that, on the materials before it, it is not apparent that a prosecution would be against the public interests or a mere indulgence of private spite. On the other hand, a Court which refuses sanction does no more than express the opinion that public interest would not be served by such a prosecution and it is not debarred from acting upon that view even where there is a strong prima facie case. [p. 344, cols. 1 & 2.]

A Court before whom an application for the grant of a sanction is made is invested with a very wide discretion with the exercise of which an Appellate Court should be extremely slow to interfere. [p. 344, col. 2.]

It is not a necessary ingredient of an offence under section 193 of the Penal Code that the evidence alleged to be fabricated should actually have been produced in the antecedent judicial proceeding; but in considering the advisability of sanctioning a prosecution, its production or non-production in the Court is a circumstance to which the Court might attach very considerable importance, in deciding whether it is against the public interest to allow Criminal proceedings to be instituted. [p. 344, col. 2; p. 345, col. 1.]

A Court to whom an application for the grant of a sanction is made has no jurisdiction to direct the respondent to produce a document for the sole purpose of considering whether or not a prosecution should be launched upon it. [p. 345, col. 1.]

Per Schwabe, C. J.—If a Court is clearly of opinion, on the evidence before it, that no reasonable Jury would convict on it, it is its duty to refuse sanction. But the mere fact that a Court sanctions a prosecution is no intimation to the Magistrate who is to enquire into the case that it thinks that there is a case to go to a Jury or that he thereby is in any way relieved from his duty of considering whether the accused ought to be committed for trial or not. [p. 341, col. 1.]

MUNUSWAMY MUDALIAR K. V. P. RAJARATNAM PILLAY.

Appeal from the order and judgment of Mr. Justice Phillips, dated 21st December 1921, granting sanction to prosecute the appellant (plaintiff) in the exercise of the Ordinary Original Civil Jurisdiction of this Court in Civil Suit No. 522 of 1920.

Messrs. Nugent Grant and M. P. Sundara-raja Aiyar, for the Appellant.

The Advocate-General (Mr. C. P. Ramaswami Aiyar) and Mr. N. Swaminatha Aiyar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

Schwabe, C. J.—I have had the opportunity of reading the judgments of my learned brothers who are more familiar with the practice of this Court than I am and with those judgments in general I agree. I have little to add.

I think it should be made clear that the fact that this Court sanctions a prosecution is no intimation to the Magistrate that this Court thinks that there is a case to go to a Jury or that he thereby is in any way relieved from his duty of considering whether the accused ought to be committed for trial or not. This view is not at all inconsistent with the duty of this Court to refuse sanction, if it is clearly of opinion, on the evidence before it, that no reasonable Jury should convict.

There is one matter in the judgment of my brother Coutts-Trotter, J., on which I wish to reserve the expression of my view until the matter directly arises, namely, whether the learned Judge was justified in ordering the document in question to be brought into Court on the application for sanction, and I must not be taken as expressing assent of the view that, in so doing, he was acting without jurisdiction.

On the question of costs, this case might involve the consideration of the vexed question whether it is a criminal or civil matter and whether there is power to grant costs. Under all the circumstances of this case, we think that it is not necessary to consider that question as, in our view, it is a case in which each party should bear his own costs.

Oldfield, J.—This application is for the revocation of a sanction granted by Phillips, J., under section 195, Criminal Procedure Code for the prosecution of the petitioner for offences punishable under sections 193, 465, 467, 474 and 109, Indian Penal Code.

Petitioner occupied shops as respondents' tenant. They gave him notice to quit and moved for his ejectment under section 41, Presidency Small Cause Courts Act. He sued for damages under section 47 obtaining stay of the ejectment proceedings, and in his suit set up an agreement to lease to him for a term of five years in consideration of a payment of Rs. 1,000, pleading that certain sums aggregating Rs. 265 were actually paid to respondents through 6th respondent towards this amount. In his affidavit of documents he mentioned an account-book on one page of which payments to 6th defendant are shown consistently with the statement in his plaint; and, after his suit had been withdrawn before the trial began, his prosecution was sanctioned as stated above, on respondents' application with reference to this book.

The provision under which sanction was granted in respect of the offence under sections 465, 467 and 474, Indian Penal Code, is section 195 (1), (c), Criminal Procedure Code and it is urged, first, that this provision is inapplicable, because the book was neither "produced" nor "given in evidence," as it requires. It is not contended that the book was given in evidence, but only that it was produced, because it was mentioned in petitioners' affidavit or in the alternative because it was filed in the Court Translator's Office for translation in accordance with the rules. But the affidavit, which is in the ordinary form, merely discloses the documents in petitioner's possession relating to the matters in issue; and neither it nor the filing in the Translator's Office amounts to what is required, i.e., actual production in Court. In fact, the learned Judge relied on neither, as constituting production. What he relied on, as the reference in the last sentence of his order to "the account-book which has now been filed" shows, was that petitioner filed it, not in the suit, but after its termination, on being required to do so by the Court on the application of respondents dated 9th December 1921, in the course of the proceedings, in which the sanction was given. With all respect, the proceeding, in which the sanction was asked for, was distinct from the suit, the proceeding to which petitioner was a party and in which he was alleged to have committed those offences; and his production of the account book in the former cannot be regarded as the production in the latter, which section 195 (1) (c) requires. The learned Judge, in these circumstances, had no right to give and respondents no duty to obtain sanction in respect of the offence under sections 465, 467 and 474, Indian Penal Code, if indeed sanction need be given in respect of the last mentioned.

This is material, because we have further to deal only with the remaining offence specified in the learned Judge's order, that punishable under section 193; and there is nothing in the order to show that any difference between the considerations arising under section 195 (1) (b), Criminal Procedure Code, and those under section 195 (1) (c), was present to the learned Judge's mind or influenced the judicial use of his discretion. That the relevant considerations are different is clear. For under the former provision the offence may be alleged as committed, not only in, but more remotely, "in relation to" a proceeding, whilst under the latter it must be committed "in respect of a document produced or given in evidence;" that is, in connection with a trial, which has begun and, therefore, in direct and public prejudice to the reputation of the Court and its administration of justice. Here and in other cases under section 195 (1) (b), when no question of such prejudice can arise the exercise of the Court's discretion will be judicial, only if it considers whether with reference to the evidence available and the other circumstances a prosecution is desirable in the public interest, and not, if it merely satisfies itself, as the learned Judge statedly did in the order before us, that "a prima facie case has been made out."

The latter is the view of the Court's duty and of the test to be applied by the Appellate Court advocated on behalf of respondents; and the judgment of Napier, J., in Krishnamma Chittur v. Chinna Perajai (1) and that of the High Court of Calcutta in Hume, Public Prosecutor v. Poresh Chunder Ghose [An Attorney, In re] (2) are relied on as generally in accordance with it. But it is difficult to deduce from them or other authorities cited, Palaniappa Chettiar v. Ramaswami Chettiar (3) and Hajee Mohamed Habibulla. Badsha Sahib, In the matter of (4), any such rigid general rule as respondents contend for; and, necessarily so, since such decisions are naturally worded with reference to the circumstances of the cases under disposal and give prominence to the considerations which assumed importance in them. I accordingly restrict myself to a statement of what I believe to be the law on the points at present material and in doing so aim rather at a general adherence to the effect of the authorities than a detailed reconciliation of the apparent difference between them.

Firstly, the duty of the Court granting sanction is discharged, if it exercises a judicial discretion; and, similarly, the duty of the Appellate Court, if it satisfies itself whether such a discretion has been exercised. The former Court must, therefore, be required, whatever the extent to which the investigation undertaken for its own satisfaction has been carried, to put on record sufficient to demonstrate to the latter that its exercise of discretion has been judicial; and it is undesirable in fairness to the accused that it should do more. In case it does less the Appellate Court will have no choice but to follow the course indicated in the judgment of Ayling, J., in Palaniappa Chettiar v. Ramaswami Chettiar (3), with which I am in general agreement, and to ascertain the necessary facts for itself and base its conclusions on them.

In the next place, it may be said at least that the Court cannot be regarded as having exercised a judicial discretion in granting sanction, when it has satisfied itself only that a prima facie case has been made out, if by that is meant only that formal evidence of the ingredients of the offence is available, without reference to defects which may deprive that evidence wholly or to a material extent of value. Further, apart from the considerations to be referred to and the interest of the accused, it will promote the mischief deprecated by Coutts-Trotter, J., in Hajee Mohamed Habibulla Badsha Sahib, in the matter of (4). "The frivolous abuse of the powers of the Criminal Court" to authorise a prosecution, which has not, in the words of Ayling, J., in the case already referred to, even "a fair chance of success."

There remains the more difficult class of cases, of which on the assumption most favourable to respondents the case before us is one and in which there is some evidence deserving consideration at a trial; and of course the requisites for the case of a judicial discretion in connection with them can be indicated only in the most general terms. But it is here that the prospects of further proceedings serving any public purpose, on which all the authorities insist, becomes material. It is so, with all deference to the opinion of Seshagiri Aiyar, J., in Palaniappa Chettiar v. Ramaswami Chettiar (3), not wholly or principally out of respect for the rights of the accused or the liberty of the subject. For if that were the justification for the sanction procedure, there would be no reason for applying it only to cases, in which the offence is alleged in relation to legal proceedings, and for maintaining the ordinary rights of the complainant in connection with those offences, when they are not alleged as so related. The procedure is necessary, as Ayling, J., observed, in order "to avoid the risk of frivolous or vexatious charges designed, not to vindicate justice, but to harass and annoy the person against whom they are directed," since "without some such safeguard the Criminal Courts in this country would be flooded with useless prosecutions." Unless this has been borne in mind, the Court's use of its discretion cannot be regarded as judicial; and it follows that the remoter the prospect of any public purpose being served the greater the degree to which the Court should insist on ordinary evidence in support of the charge.

In the present case it is sufficient that, whilst the evidence against petitioner, with which the order before us is exclusively concerned, is at least of no special strength, no prospect of a prosecution serving any public purpose whatever is disclosed by the record. In fact, the petitioner's conduct, if respondent's case is accepted, secured him no advantage, since his suit was withdrawn, before his alleged forged document could be used. It appears from the latter's affidavit, to which the learned Judge has not referred, that petitioner gave evidence in respondents' family quarrel as we were told by their learned Counsel, three years back with the result that two of them were imprisoned, and that they still intend to dispute the new title under which he now claims the property for which he sued. In these circumstances, the prosecution contemplated by respondents can only be regarded as vindictive and coercive; and the evidence is too weak to justify the grant of sanction for it.

I would allow the appeal and revoke the sanction.

Coutts Trotter, J.—The plaintiff brought a suit in which he alleged that he had an option to an extension of his lease of the suit premises for five years on payment of an advance of Rs. 1,000; and in paragraph 5 of his plaint he set out certain sums which he alleged he had paid towards the Rs. 1,000 ranging in date from the 12th of April to the 22nd of July 1920. In this affidavit of documents he included a rough chitta book which was said to contain an entry recording the payment of these sums, in all Rs. 265, which entry was alleged to be signed by the 6th defendant. He did not produce the rough chitta book for inspection by the opposite party for a considerable time and only did so in the end under an order of the Court. When the suit came on for trial, it was withdrawn, the plaintiff having meanwhile got what he wanted by attornment to the persons who he was satisfied could give him a better title than the defendants. After the withdrawal of the suit, an order was made upon the plaintiff by the learned Judge, to produce this chitta book in connection with an application for sanction to prosecute him, under various sections of the Indian Penal Code, the allegation being that the material entries in the rough chitta book were fabricated for the purposes of manufacturing false evidence and only came into existence after the signature of the 6th defendant had been obtained.

I do not wish to go into the facts in detail, for they are really not material to the point which we have to decide. It is sufficient to say that, in my opinion, this is a case in which no Jury would be likely to convict on the materials which were before the learned Judge, although it is clear that there was some evidence which, if put before the Jury and accepted by them, would justify a conviction; in other words, there appears to be what is called a prima facie case. The questions which I consider to be important in this case relate to the general position, first of a Court whose sanction is sought for a prosecution and, secondly, of an Appellate Tribunal on an appeal from the order granting or refusing sanction passed by the Court below.

MUNUSWAMY MUDALIAR, K. V. & RAJARATNAM PILLAI.

In my opinion, entirely different considerations arise when a Court grants a sanction and when it refuses it. In Hajee Mohamed Habibulla Badsha Sahib, In the matter of (4) I expressed an opinion, to which I adhere, as to the considerations proper to guide a Court in granting a sanction and the inference proper to be drawn from the granting of such a sanction. The Code provides for the granting of sanction as a preliminary not merely to a trial but, in many cases, to the taking of the case before a Magistrate who has jurisdiction either to commit for trial to a higher Tribunal or to refuse to do so. It is, to my mind, vital that it should be recognised that a Court, in sanctioning a prosecution arising out of facts which have come before it during the trial of a civil case, should not be supposed to be discharging that which is the task of the Committing Magistrate at a later stage and usurping his functions by explicitly or tacitly pronouncing that there is a prima facie case. I adhere to the view that such a conception of the functions of the sanctioning Judge would turn what is intended to be an additional safeguard to accused persons into a weapon prejudicial to their interests. I do not think that a Court which allows sanction does more than say that, on the materials before it, it is not apparent that a prosecution would be against the public interests or a mere indulgence of private spite. On the other hand, a Court which refuses sanction, to my mind, does no more than express the opinion that the public interest would not be served by such a prosecution and it is not, as I conceive the matter, debarred from acting upon that view even where there is a strong prima facie case. It is apparent that if this be the true conception of the functions of a Court on an application made for sanction they are of such a nature as necessarily to invest that Court with a very wide discretion, and one with the exercise of which an Appellate Court should be extremely slow to interfere. The Trial Judge is vested with the functions for granting or refusing sanction precisely because he has had the parties and witnesses before him and has the best opportunity of judging whether such a prosecution would serve any useful purpose or not.

The sanction granted in this case was for a prosecution for offences punishable under three substantive sections of the Penal Code, sections 193, 467 and 474, the other two sections cited being ancillary. Section 474 has been given up because it is clear that no sanction is required for that and where no sanction is required it is obviously proper that none should be sought or granted. Section 467, forgery of a document purporting to be a receipt, does require sanction under section 195 (1) (c) of the Criminal Procedure Code when such offence has been committed by a party to any proceeding in any Court in respect of a document "produced or given in evidence in such proceedings." In this case the document was not produced or given in evidence, on the construction of those words, that I think to be the right one, in the civil suit at all. Inspection of it was given to the opposite side but it was not before the Court until after the civil proceedings had terminated and the plaintiff had withdrawn his suit. "Produced or given in evidence," to my mind, can only mean "tendered or admitted" in the course of the civil proceedings which ended with their withdrawal. I confine the expression "civil proceedings," for my present purpose to the actual trial of the suit up to the point when it was withdrawn without expressing any opinion on the debated question whether the subsequent sanction proceedings are in their nature civil or criminal. But the offence under section 193 stands on a different footing, for, the offence defined by that section is that of fabricating false evidence for the purpose of being used in a stage of a judicial proceeding, and actual production or tender of the document to the Court is not a necessary ingredient of the offence. This, therefore, falls under section 195 (1) (b) of the Code of Criminal Procedure and is not obnoxious to the objection formulated to the other charges. I must, therefore, consider whether there is any good ground for refusing the sanction which the learned Judge in his discretion has granted. I think that there are two such grounds: The first is that, in my opinion, the whole proceedings were vitiated by the learned Judge ordering the plaintiff to produce the document for the sole purpose of considering whether or no a prosecution should be launched upon it. That was an order which I consider that the learned Judge had no jurisdiction to make and one which is absolutely repugnant to all those fundamental notions of fairness to a person accused or about to be accused of a criminal offence, which lie at the root of the criminal law of England and of India alike. He was never warned as to his position, nor was it intimated to him what the consequences of producing the document might be. In my opinion the plaintiff could have disobeyed that order with impunity and the fact that, from ignorance of his rights, he did not disobey it does not affect its irregularity. But there is an even more serious objection which appears on the face of the learned Judge's order. As I have pointed out, it is no necessary ingredient of an offence under section 193 of the Penal Code, that the evidence alleged to be fabricated should actually be produced in the antecedent judicial proceedings; but no one can doubt that, in considering the advisability of sanctioning a prosecution, its production or non-production in Court is a circumstance to which the learned Judge might attach very considerable importance, in weighing that which I have held to be the sole question proper before him, namely, whether it was against the public interest to allow criminal proceedings to be instituted. It is clear that, at the time he passed this order, the learned Judge was under the impression that the impugned document had been filed in the course of the civil proceedings, and entirely overlooked the consideration, that the document was only produced on his own order after the civil proceedings in the strict sense had terminated. To my mind, that misapprehension must have vitiated the learned Judge's exercise of the discretion he undoubtedly possessed and leaves us free, on a knowledge of the true facts to differ from his view. Where it is shown that the learned Judge exercised his discretion on a mistaken view of the facts, it appears to me that he may be treated as not having exercised a judicial discretion at all, and that the Appellate Tribunal may be considered as thereby invested with an unfettered discretion to act on the true facts. Viewing the case in that light, it appears to me that no useful purpose would be served by allowing this prosecution; not only because I think that no Jury would convict on the materials before us, but also because I think it is clear that this prosecution was one which was projected not to satisfy the requirements of public justice, but to find an outlet for the anger of the defendants at being thwarted in their desire to get possession of this property.

I think that the appeal should be allowed.

*Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 145
(3)—Omission to serve notice—Grave irregularity—Prejudice to parties—High Court, interference by—Procedure.*

BASAWAN PANDEY v. TILAK GOPE.

When a proceeding is drawn up under section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code, the omission to serve it upon the parties or their Pleaders or affix it on some place in the locality, amounts to grave irregularity and in case of failure of justice or prejudice to any party vitiates the order under section 145 of the Code. [p. 347, col. 2.]

A High Court has jurisdiction to set aside the order of a Magistrate when the provisions of section 145 (3) of the Criminal Procedure Code have not been complied with and the parties are prejudiced thereby. [p. 347, col. 2.]

The procedure laid down in section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code is indeed summary, but should not be cut too short. [p. 348, col. 1.]

Criminal Revision from an order of the Magistrate, Samastipur, dated the 14th December 1921.

Messrs. Manohar Lal and S. N. Rai, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Janak Kishore, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application against an order of the Magistrate of Samastipur, dated the 14th December 1921, under section 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

In the proceeding Tilak Gope, Chhedi Gope and Musammat Bhikuni, wife of Chhedi Gope, figure as the 1st party and Basawan Pandey as the 2nd party. The dispute relates to three bhigas odd kathas of land which was sold in execution of a rent decree, and was purchased on the 8th of April 1919, by the 2nd party. He obtained delivery of possession from the Civil Court on the 9th of June, 1921 (corresponding to the 19th of Jaith 1328). Upon an information lodged by the chawkidar on the 9th of October, the Junior Sub-Inspector of Police submitted a report, dated the 23rd of October 1921, holding that the land was in possession of the 2nd party and asking for a notice under section 144 of the Code of Criminal Procedure against the members of the 1st party, and also for taking action under section 107 of the Code. The Senior Sub-Inspector also enquired into the matter and submitted his report on the 31st of October 1921, pending that of the Junior Sub-Inspector. In that report also the Police found that the 2nd party was in possession of the property in dispute and the 1st party "seemed to be aggressive" and were trying to dispossess the 2nd party by force. He, therefore, asked for a notice under section 144 to be issued against the 1st party, and a proceeding under section 145 to be instituted "to clear off the future disturbance."

On the 10th of November, the Magistrate called upon 1st party to show cause, why a proceeding under section 107 of the Code should not be drawn up against that party. Cause was shown by the members of the 1st party on the 1st of December separately. Tilak Gope filed one petition and Chhedi and his wife filed another petition. Tilak in his petition alleged that he had taken settlement of the land from Basawan Pandey, the 2nd party, some three years ago, namely, one bhiga six kathas, at an annual rental of Rs. 5, and since then he has been in possession of the property. He objected to the proceeding under section 107 on the ground that the dispute was concerning land, and consequently a proceeding under section 145 should be instituted. Before that, another petition by Tilak was filed on the 29th of October to the same effect. We are not concerned with the petition filed by Chhedi Gope and his wife in the present case.

On the 2nd of December the Magistrate heard the parties, and Chhedi's wife was directed to produce copies of certain sudbharna deeds by the 8th of December. On the 8th of December the case was adjourned to the 13th of December. On the 13th of December the Magistrate passed the following order: "Heard parties. Draw up a proceeding under section 145 and put up to-morrow." The next day, that is, on the 14th December the Magistrate passed the following order: "Orders passed." In the order in question, he has upheld the Civil Court dakhaldhami in favour of the 2nd party Basawan Pandey, and against Chhedi Gope and his wife Musammat Bhikuni members of the 1st party. Chhedi Gope was the judgment-debtor in the Civil Court decree. Neither he nor his wife now dispute the order of the Magistrate. The order must, therefore, stand so far as they are concerned.

The 2nd party challenges the order with respect to, 1 bhiga 6 kathas claimed by Tilak in respect of which the Magistrate has declared the possession of Tilak under section 145 of the Code. The Magistrate has shown no cause. Tilak has appeared in this case and has opposed the application of the 2nd party through a Vakil. It is obvious that the order of the Magistrate cannot be sustained for a minute.

BASAWAN PANDEY v. TILAK GOPH.

On the 13th of December, the Magistrate directed proceedings to be drawn up and the case to be put up the next day. The order-sheet does not show for what purpose the case was to be put up and what was to be done the next day. There appears to be a proceeding drawn up in the record purporting to be under section 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. This proceeding was not served upon the parties or their Pleaders, nor was it served upon the locality as is required by section 145, clause (3) of the Code. No written statement was filed by the parties, nor any evidence, oral or documentary, seems to have been adduced by them. It is contended on behalf of Tilak, one of the members of the 1st party, that the parties were present on the 13th of December, and the order to draw up a proceeding under section 145 was passed in their presence, and consequently there was no necessity of a copy of the proceeding to be served upon them under clause (3) of section 145 of the Code. He cannot advance a similar argument in favour of dispensing with service of notice on the spot. His argument with respect to the non-compliance of the aforesaid clause of section 145 is that, at best, it is only an irregularity and does not vitiate the trial or affect the jurisdiction of the Court which passed the order under section 145. The clause in question (3 of section 145) was newly added in the present Code of Criminal Procedure (1898), in order to give the parties full opportunity of putting in their claims, and also to any other person who may be interested in the subject-matter in dispute. The first is intended to be achieved by directing the service of notice upon the parties, and the second by service of the proceeding upon a conspicuous place at or near the subject-matter of dispute. The Legislature has not added this provision in vain, and the reason of this addition has been fully discussed by me in the case of Ram Sahai Chowdhury v. Deonandan Prasad (1) (Criminal Revision No. 341 of 1917). I have also in that case discussed the history of this change in the law, its effect and the authorities bearing upon it whatever difference there may be as to whether the non-compliance with the requirement of clause (3) of the section is an illegality or an irregularity. There has been a consensus of view upon the point that the non-compliance of the aforesaid requirement constitutes such a grave irregularity as, when it has caused a failure of justice or a prejudice to any party, the order under section 145 is vitiated and the jurisdiction of the Magistrate is affected. As a result of my investigation into the authorities, I observed in that case that all the Judges agreed that the High Court had jurisdiction to set aside the order, when the provisions in clause (3) of section 145 were not complied with and the parties were prejudiced thereby. Taking the proviso at its lowest there can hardly be any doubt that its non-compliance in the present case has gone to the root of the jurisdiction of the Magistrate. Basawan Pandey, 2nd party-petitioner before us, has had in his favour the Civil Court writ of delivery of possession of such a recent date as the 9th of June 1921. Tilak claims through Basawan on the basis of an alleged Permanent Settlement 3 or 4 years ago. The Police reported that he has no document in his favour, no receipt of payment of rent and no evidence of possession. His settlement was not admitted. It lay upon Tilak, who claims possession of the land as against the Civil Court dakhaldhani, to prove that he took a valid settlement of the land from Basawan and that he actually cultivated and grew the crop in question. No evidence was given by him in this case. The learned Magistrate talks of having heard the parties and considered their evidence. I wonder what that evidence is. Surely, it cannot be any evidence oral or documentary under the Evidence Act. The Magistrate does not particularise that evidence in his judgment. The only reason why he thinks that Tilak, a member of the 1st party, is in possession of the land, as stated by the Magistrate to be, is that the possession was delivered by the Civil Court on the 9th of June 1921 and it was too late for the 2nd party to cultivate the land and grow makai and marwa. This is not evidence but a surmise. The real issue before him was as to who cultivated and grew the crops upon the land in question. Unless it was admitted by Basawan, the 2nd party, petitioner; the Magistrate was not in a position to hold that the 1st party must have necessarily cultivated it, without any evidence of witnesses to prove it. He does not also refer to any document, if any, which would conclusively show the crops on the land were grown by the 1st party. The 2nd party has, therefore, been seriously prejudiced by the order in question, and the order must be set aside. The Magistrate has not even considered the effect of a Permanent Settlement set up by the 1st party. Such a settlement is not admissible without a registered document; whereas Basawan who was not the decree-holder purchased the property at an auction-sale only recently. His right to settlement would arise after his purchase and dakhaldchani.

(1) 43 Ind. Cas. 103; 4 P. L. W. 183; 19 Cr. L. J. 71.

To draw up a proceeding on the 13th of December and to pass a final order on the 14th December is an extraordinary feat that could be performed only by the Magistrate in question. He is capable of doing so is obvious from a similar procedure adopted by him in Criminal Revision No. 17 of 1922. A reasonable expedition in the performance of one's work is no doubt commendable, but an attempt to cut too short the procedure prescribed by law would amount to an inexcusable haste and perfunctoriness. The Magistrate has not, it seems to me, properly apprehended the procedure laid down in section 145 of the Code. It is summary but it cannot be cut too short. I have, therefore, no hesitation in setting aside this order of the Magistrate. The Rule is made absolute.

I do not think the Civil Court dakhaldchani which the Magistrate has upheld in this case, so far as Chhedi and his wife, two members of the 1st party are concerned, can be so lightly treated as the Magistrate has done so far as Tilak is concerned. The Police reports upon which the action was taken by the Magistrate and which were the only documents before him at that stage clearly showed that the Civil Court dakhaldchani was given effect to and that the 2nd party was in possession of the land, and Tilak was only creating troubles.

In case of future dispute, I have no doubt the Magistrate will take proper action to prevent a breach of the peace.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 403—Marriage negotiations, break down of—Bona fide intention to marry—Refusal to return presents—Criminal misappropriation.

Where there is a bona fide intention on the part of an accused to give his girl in marriage and certain presents are delivered to him as a preliminary, if the negotiations break down on account of certain unfortunate disagreements, and the accused refuses to return the presents, he is not guilty of criminal misappropriation. In such a case, a Civil Court is the proper tribunal for the parties to seek a settlement of their dispute.

It cannot be laid down as a general proposition that whenever marriage negotiations break down, the relatives of the girl have a right to retain the presents made with a view to marriage. But before any action can be taken against them, it is necessary to prove dishonesty on their part.

Messrs. Aga Zaker Ali and Biswanatha Bose, for the Petitioner.

Messrs. Manmatha Nath Mukherjee and Satindra Nath Mukherjee, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.

Walmsley, J.—The petitioner has been convicted under section 403, Indian Penal Code and sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 125.

The case for the prosecution is that an arrangement had been made for the accused to give his two daughters in marriage, one to the complainant's son and the other to his brother-in-law, and that complainant accordingly went to the accused's house with sweets, ornaments and clothing to perform the betrothal ceremony, and that the accused, pretending that the gifts were not as good as they should be, broke off the negotiations, and that afterwards the accused instead of returning the presents kept putting off the complainant with evasive answers and finally refused altogether to return the articles.

The accused tells a different story: He says that the negotiations broke down because the parties could not agree about the dower, and he appears to think that, because, according to him, the fault lay at the door of the complainant, he has a right to retain the articles brought by the complainant.

We may leave the perishables out of consideration and deal only with the ornaments and clothes. There is no doubt that they were delivered to the accused as a preliminary to the marriages and that they have been retained by him.

There are two explanations of the reason for this retention. If the complainant's story is correct the accused committed cheating, but it seems very doubtful whether that story is correct, and the learned Magistrate does not seem to have been prepared to accept it in its entirety. For my part I am disposed to regard the accused's explanation as the more probable, that is to hold that there was a bona fide intention on the part of the accused to give the girls in marriage, and that this intention was frustrated by an unfortunate disagreement as to the terms of the dower.

In these circumstances, I feel grave doubt as to whether the accused committed criminal misappropriation in refusing to return the presents. It must be remembered that a serious affront was put on him when the complainant withdrew with the bridegroom's party, and that the accused must have incurred expenditure, which complainant's conduct caused to be fruitless. I do not wish to justify the action of the accused or to lay down a general proposition that whenever marriage negotiations break down, the relatives of the lady have a right to retain the presents made with a view to the marriage, but, in the circumstances of this case, I think it is reasonable to hold that the element of dishonesty on the part of the accused has not been proved beyond doubt and that the Civil Court is the proper tribunal for the parties to seek a settlement of their dispute.

Accordingly, the Rule is made absolute, the conviction and sentence of the petitioner are set aside and the fine, if paid, will be refunded.

Companies Act (VII of 1913), ss. 76, 77, 131—Failure to hold general meeting under s. 76—Directors, liability of—Extraordinary meeting held on request of share-holders—Section, whether complied with.

A Company, registered in Bombay, held its statutory meeting under section 77 of the Companies Act on 30th March 1921, and also a general meeting on the same day. Under section 76 of the Act the Company had to hold a general meeting before 30th June 1922; no such meeting was held, but on a requisition of certain share-holders an extraordinary meeting was held on 29th June 1922. On the complaint of a share-holder the Directors of the Company were prosecuted for failing to comply with sections 76 and 131 of the Act, and it was argued on their behalf that the holding of the meeting on 29th June 1922, was a compliance with the provisions of section 76; they were, however, convicted. On appeal:

Held, that the conviction was right, as the meeting held on the requisition of the share-holders on 29th June 1922 was not a general meeting within the meaning of the term in section 76 of the Companies Act. [p. 359, col. 1.]

Appeal from the conviction and sentence passed by the Third Presidency Magistrate, Bombay.

JUDGMENT.—The first accused, the Standard Aluminium & Brass Works, Ltd., and accused Nos. 2 to 6 as Directors of the said Company were charged before the Third Presidency Magistrate with having committed offences under sections 76 and 131 of the Indian Companies Act, VII of 1913. The facts are not in dispute. The Company was registered on February 27, 1920, obtained a certificate from the Registrar on November 3, 1920, and commenced business on January 3, 1921. The statutory meeting under section 77 was held on March 30, 1921. A general meeting was held on the same day. Then under section 76 the Company had to hold a general meeting within fifteen months of that date, that is to say, before June 30, 1922. It must be admitted that no general meeting within the meaning of that term under the Articles of Association was held before June 30, 1922, nor was any balance-sheet, audited by the auditors of the Company, prepared and read before the Company in a general meeting. It appears then that there can be no doubt that the Company and its officers had committed a default under sections 76 and 131 of the Indian Companies Act. But reliance was placed by the accused on the fact that certain share-holders of the Company sent in a requisition to the Directors for the holding of an extraordinary meeting, and according to that requisition an extraordinary meeting was held on June 29. It was very strenuously argued before the Magistrate that the holding of that meeting was a compliance with the provisions of section 76.

Art. 60 provides for the statutory meeting required by section 77 of the Indian Companies Act. Then under Art. 61 other general meetings shall be held once in the year 1921, and in every subsequent year at such time and place as may be prescribed by the Company in general meeting, and if no other time or place is prescribed at such time and place as may be determined by the Directors. The first of such general meetings may be held on the same day as the statutory meeting. Under Art. 62 the general meetings referred to in the last preceding clause shall be called ordinary meetings; all other meetings of the Company shall be called extraordinary meetings.

It seems to us it is quite impossible for us to hold that extraordinary meetings such as the one which was held on the requisition of the share-holders on June 29, was a general meeting within the meaning of that term in section 76. Reference was made before the Magistrate to certain English cases, but we do not think there is any need to refer to cases decided under the English Act, as we have before us the Indian Companies Act and the Articles of Association of the Company, and we need only consider what is prescribed by that Act read with the Articles.

The convictions were, therefore, right unless any of the accused could prove that they were not Directors at the time the default was committed. But that has not been proved. Only in the case of accused No. 2 it was argued that he could not knowingly be a party to the default, as he had sent in his resignation to the Company on March 24 and under Art. 97 he ceased ipso facto to be a Director at the time when the notice was sent in. Although afterwards he did attend meetings of the Board and actually presided at the meetings as Chairman, his contention now seems to be that he presided as a private individual. When we asked what meetings he had attended after he had sent in his resignation, we were told he presided at meetings on June 24 and June 28, and as it was quite impossible for the Company to hold a general meeting before June 30, in the absence of any notices having been sent out under Art. 64 he could not be liable for the default. We doubt very much whether that argument would be successful. But there is no need to consider it because on reference to the Minute Book the attendances of accused No. 2 at the Board-meetings can be seen. He presided at the meeting of March 9. He was absent from the meeting held on May 16. The first minute of that meeting is as follows:—"Mr. Hajibhoy A. Thaver was appointed Chairman in the absence of Mr. Nasurbhai A. Lalji (that is to say, the second accused) from Bombay." It is curious to note that we can find no reference to the letter of accused No. 2 resigning his office as Director in the minutes of that meeting, although there is a reference to a letter received from Dadabhoy S. Madan resigning his office of Director which was by a resolution accepted. At the time of the meeting of June 13, the second accused had returned to Bombay and presided as Chairman. Again, he presided at meetings of June 19, June 22, June 24 and June 28. Then, in accordance with the provisions of the Articles of Association, he resigned his office as Director on June 30. There is no substance, therefore, in the defence which has been urged before us on behalf of the second accused, which, as a matter of fact, was not urged before the learned Magistrate. We can only consider that the statement of the second accused which he made to the effect that after his resignation was sent, the Board for reasons best known to them did not choose to accept it, and in ignorance of the law on the subject he did attend some meetings, does him very little credit.

Then, accused Nos. 3 and 5 have not improved their case by alleging as an excuse for not complying with the provisions of section 131 that the auditor had conspired with some of the share-holders to delay in bringing out his report on the Company's accounts. The auditor in his evidence said he had asked to see the securities for the Rs. 2,47,000 drawn by the agents and had not seen them up to that day. Further comment on these allegations of this accused is unnecessary. In any event, even if such a conspiracy had been proved, that would not prevent a default on the part of the accused being committed.

Accused No. 4 complained that the Magistrate had unjustifiably fined him Rs. 50 more than accused Nos. 2, 3, and 5. The Magistrate says:—

"From the attitude taken up by the accused No. 4, Vaikunth Ambalal Desai, I have had reason to think that he had been misguiding the other accused in wrongly interpreting the law to them."

We can safely rely on the Magistrate's appreciation of the attitude of this accused. This case took a very long time before the Magistrate and he remarked at the end of his judgment:—

"In conclusion, it only remains for me to say that I was obliged to write a somewhat lengthy judgment after a regular trial by reason of the legal defences set up in the case. If that was not so, I should have disposed of the case in summary trial under section 278 of the Act."

The Magistrate was obviously right. None of these defences set up by the accused at very great length had any substance whatever, but the Magistrate was obliged to deal with them also at very great length in a very able judgment. If the accused had been better advised with regard to the attitude that ought to have been taken up before the Magistrate, they would have admitted the default, and pleaded extenuating circumstances. If that had been the case, we have no doubt the matter would have terminated in a way more satisfactory to the accused than it did. The appeal will be dismissed.

Proceedings instituted in a Court which has no jurisdiction in respect of them cannot be regarded as legally instituted at all, and the High Court has no power to transfer them to any other Court. The High Court can, however, in such a case, in the exercise of its inherent powers of superintendence, direct the Court not to proceed further in the matter. [p. 352, col. 2.]

CRIMINAL MISCELLANEOUS PETITION NO. 384
OF 1922.

Petition praying that, in the circumstances stated in the affidavit filed in Criminal Miscellaneous Petition No. 383 of 1922, on the file of the High Court, the High Court will be pleased to issue an order that the proceedings in C. C. No. 2 of 1921, on the file of the Court of the Village Magistrate of Keeripatti, be transferred from his file to the file of some other Magistrate and to stay further proceedings therein pending disposal of the Criminal Miscellaneous Petition.

Mr. V. N. Venkatavaradachariar, for the Petitioners.

Mr. J. C. Adam, Public Prosecutor, for the Crown.

ORDER.—There is before us, first, an application for the transfer of C. C. No. 2 of 1921, from the file of the Village Magistrate of Keeripatti to any other Village Magistrate and, next, an application for quashing the Village Magistrate's proceedings in that case. The relief asked for in the latter application is described somewhat inaccurately. For it does not appear that there are any proceedings by the Village Magistrate, which can be quashed or set aside. What has happened is that the Village Magistrate received an oral complaint against the petitioners and issued process to them thereon. They did not comply with that process on the ground that the occurrence in question did not take place within the Magistrate's jurisdiction and he had no power to issue process in respect of it. On that default the Village Magistrate filed a complaint against them, which was heard, of an offence punishable under section 174, Indian Penal Code. In dismissing that complaint, the Sub-Magistrate accepted the petitioners contention that the Village Magistrate had no jurisdiction. Afterwards, however, the Village Magistrate took a sworn statement from the complainant, in which it was alleged that the occurrence was within his jurisdiction, and now proposes to proceed with the trial. It is not disputed that the offence referred to in the sworn statement just mentioned was identical with the offence which was the subject of the oral complaint.

The fact that the complainant in the sworn statement alleged that the occurrence took place within the jurisdiction is, of course, of no avail whatever. We have, however, a judicial decision, no doubt in collateral proceedings, still, one of which, in our opinion, we can in proceedings such as these legitimately take account, that the occurrence was outside the Village Magistrate's jurisdiction; and we accept that decision as the basis for our conclusion. So accepting it, we clearly cannot transfer this case, which is at present in a Court without jurisdiction and, therefore, has never been legally instituted [See Ledgard v. Bull (1)] to any other Court.

To turn then to the petition to quash the proceedings, for the reasons given we cannot comply with it literally. In the circumstance, however, we think we are justified with reference to our inherent powers of superintendence in directing the Village Magistrate of Keeripatti not to proceed further with the complaint of Muthuswami Goundan at present pending before him. It will be for Muthuswami Goundan, if he is so minded, to file a new complaint in any competent Court.

GOVERNMENT PLEADER V. G. K. TATKE.*BOMBAY HIGH COURT.

CIVIL APPLICATION NO. 574 OF 1922.

December 18, 1922.

Present.—Sir Norman Macleod, Kt.,
Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice Crump.
THE GOVERNMENT PLEADER

*versusG. K. TATKE—OPPONENT.

Legal practitioner—Misconduct—Letter imputing improper motives to Magistrate—Instructions from client—Justification—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 80, scope of.

A Magistrate passed certain strictures against a defence witness in his judgment in a criminal case. Thereupon a Pleader acting under instructions from that witness sent a letter to the Magistrate which contained the following clause: "The tenor, tone and mould of your judgment clearly shows that you had a grudge and personal enmity against my client who is Brahmin by caste, and you thought that as the best opportunity to attack the character of my client under the garb of a judicial officer. My client still sincerely and honestly believes that you had no material to make objectionable remarks against him in your judgment. Before proceeding to take any action against you, my client thinks it his humble duty to draw your attention to the judgment and objectionable remarks therein and to give you sufficient opportunity to withdraw them."

Held, (1) that the letter contained merely vulgar abuse of the Magistrate and that under no circumstances was it proper for a Pleader to write to a Magistrate in such terms;

(2) that the fact that the letter was written under instructions from the client was no justification for it and that its writing amounted to misconduct.

It is perfectly open to a Pleader, on instructions from his client to send a Magistrate notice under section 80 of the Civil Procedure Code, but whatever his instructions, it is his duty as a Pleader to send the notice strictly in accordance with the terms of that section.

Mr. S. S. Patkar, Government Pleader, in person.

Mr. H. C. Coyajee, with him Messrs. S. R. Bakhale and P. S. Bakhale, for the Opponent.

JUDGMENT.—One Janai filed a complaint in the Court of the Second Class Magistrate of the Patan Taluka against two persons accusing them of having committed the offence of wrongful confinement. On August 31, 1921, the Magistrate delivered judgment acquitting the accused. The papers were sent up to the District Judge by the Magistrate in consequence of the view which the Magistrate had formed of the evidence given before him on behalf of the accused. The District Judge called for a report from the Subordinate Judge and passed orders on March 6, 1922. He said in conclusion:

"I do not agree with the Magistrate's view of the evidence and consider that his strictures are unwarranted. His remark that the Sub-Judge's order is a fraud, presumably means that it was obtained by a fraud, but I have already said that there was absolutely no reason for any one connected with the Court to approach the complainant except for the purpose of serving the process upon her. It is, therefore, unnecessary to take any departmental action and the papers are returned."

Mr. Bhatye was the Pleader concerning whom the Magistrate in his judgment had passed certain strictures on August 31, 1921. After Mr. Baker's order, Mr. Tatke, the present respondent, wrote a letter on behalf of Mr. Bhatye to the Magistrate, which is the subject-matter of the present complaint by the Government Pleader. The letter begins.—

"Please take notice of the following: My client Mr. P. G. Bhatye was examined as a witness for the defence before you in your Court in Criminal Case No. 40 of 1921 of the file of the Second Class Magistrate, Patan, on 30th July 1921. In the judgment of the said case, while you acquitted all the accused you have made certain remarks against my client, and my client being a Municipal Councillor, a landholder and a Pleader of status and position, is lowered in estimation and reputation in the eyes of the public and thereby is likely to suffer in his profession. You had also sent a copy of the said judgment to the District Judge, Satara, with your report for inquiry and action. You knew that my client as a Pleader was an officer of the Court and liable to be punished by the District Judge under the Disciplinary Jurisdiction and Legal Practitioners Act. The tenor, tone and mould of your judgment clearly shows that you had a grudge and personal enmity against my client who is Brahmin by caste, and you thought that as the best opportunity to attack the character of my client under the garb of a judicial officer. My client still sincerely and honestly believes that you had no material to make objectionable remarks against him in your judgment. Before proceeding to take any action against you, my client thinks it his humble duty to draw your attention to the judgment and objectionable remarks therein and to give you sufficient opportunity to withdraw them."

The objectionable passages were then set out and the letter contained a general demand for an apology. A copy was sent to the Collector of Satara for his information. It is not suggested that this was a notice to the Magistrate under section 80 of the Civil Procedure Code. The Magistrate complained to the District Judge about this letter. The District Judge, who was then Mr. Percival, held an inquiry into the conduct of the opponent, and made a report to this Court on August 16, 1922. Exhibit 13 is the answer of the opponent dated August 12, 1922. He said there:

"By writing the words charged against him the opponent begs to state that he did not give or intend to give any insult or threat to anybody: nor was there any idea of extorting any alteration in the judgment or extorting any apology. Whatever was said, was said under clear instructions from the client of the opponent. The object of the client was simply to get a redress for the wrong done to him. The opponent was not actuated by any personal motives in the matter. If the language in the letter is considered too strong I have no hesitation in expressing regret for the same. The notice was given no publicity whatever. The notice was given in the form of a letter to Mr. Daduskar who was the party concerned and to the Collector who is the superior of Mr. Daduskar. The opponent honestly believes that there was no excess of privilege in the matter at all."

Now, it is perfectly clear that that letter was a most improper letter for any Pleader to write to a Magistrate with regard to the disposal of a particular case by that Magistrate; and if this explanation of Mr. Tatke was really expressive of what he believed to be the right course to take, then it is obvious that he has no knowledge whatever of what are the duties of a Pleader with regard to Magistrates and Judges in this Presidency. It was perfectly open to him on instructions from his client to send a notice under section 80 of the Civil Procedure Code. But whatever his instructions were it would have been his duty as a Pleader to send that notice strictly in accordance with the terms of that section. But this letter, which is now before us, merely contains vulgar abuse of the Magistrate, and a demand for an apology, apparently followed by a threat of further proceedings. Instructions from a client are no excuse whatever for a Pleader exceeding what is his duty towards the Courts; and as it is presumed that a Pleader knows what his responsibilities are in addressing Magistrates and Judges, it is difficult to believe that the respondent did not know that the language in this letter was far too strong, judged by the ordinary standards with which he should have been acquainted. Indeed, there are too many cases in these Courts where notices have been issued against Pleaders for misconduct, in which we have been told that if we think that the line which divides proper and improper conduct has been crossed then an apology would be tendered. The point I wish to make clear is, that in most cases it is not for us to say whether the line is crossed or not, because it is absolutely plain on the record that the line has been crossed, certainly in this case it is too obvious, and a conditional apology of this character is valueless. If the Magistrate was of opinion on hearing the evidence that there had been an attempt to get up a case which was false in order to save the accused from being convicted, then he was certainly entitled to say so, and an aggrieved party had a remedy if he considered that the conclusions arrived at by the Magistrate were wrong. But in no circumstances would it be proper for a Pleader after judgment to write to the Magistrate in the terms which are contained in this letter. We think that there was absolutely no justification for that letter; and that the writing of that letter amounts to misconduct. The only question before us then is whether we should content ourselves with administering a reprimand or whether we should deal with the respondent's Sanad. We content ourselves with a reprimand, hoping that the remarks that have fallen from the Bench will be carefully considered by the respondent with regard to the future.

When parties to a criminal case who are nearly related to one another succeed in patching up their quarrels, the Magistrate should not refuse to do what he can to restore peace and good will if the case is not compoundable without his approval.

Criminal revision against the order of the Additional District Magistrate, Chittagong, dated the 8th December 1921, affirming that of the Sub-Deputy Magistrate, Chittagong, dated the 4th November 1921.

Babu Ramdayal De, for the Petitioners.JUDGMENT.

Walmsley, J.—The petitioners have been convicted under section 147 of the Indian Penal Code, and sentenced to fifteen days' rigorous imprisonment each. In addition, two of them, Nur Ahmed and Aminulla, have been convicted under section 323, Indian Penal Code, and sentenced to fifteen days' rigorous imprisonment and Faizulla under section 324, Indian Penal Code, and sentenced to one month's rigorous imprisonment. The Rule was issued on three grounds. The first relates to the conviction under section 147, Indian Penal Code. The learned Magistrate drew up a charge in which the common object of the unlawful assembly was stated to be to assault Akiruddin and Mokheswar Rahaman. In his judgment he finds that three of the accused persons did assault Akiruddin and Mokheswar Rahman. As to the other three, that is, Munirullah, Mohabat Ali and Kasim Ali, he says "there is no positive evidence on the record that they took any serious part in the mar pit or caused injury to any person, although I am perfectly satisfied that they went with the other three accused to snatch away the cattle of the complainant in common object with that of the other accused persons." Clearly, there is a difference between the common object mentioned and the common object he finds in the case of these three persons. If the common object of Faizullah, Nur Ahmed and Aminullah was to beat Akiruddin, then there were not five persons that shared in the common object and the ingredient of an offence under section 147, Indian Penal Code, is wanting. It is a great pity that so many Magistrates when dealing with charges under section 147, Indian Penal Code, are careless in setting out the common object and in directing their attention to whether that particular common object is proved or not. On this ground, the conviction under section 147, Indian Penal Code, against all the petitioners must fail.

The learned Magistrate concedes that the additional sentences passed under sections 323 and 324, Indian Penal Code, on three of the petitioners cannot stand with the sentence under section 147, Indian Penal Code. With the conviction and sentence under section 147, Indian Penal Code, removed, it becomes a question whether on the third ground the conviction of hurt should be allowed to stand. I find that the complainant put in a petition on the 5th of August last saying that he did not wish to go on with the case. So far as the charge against Nur Ahmed and Aminullah is concerned, he had an absolute right to compromise the case on the charge of simple hurt. In the case of Faizullah, the complainant had no such absolute right: his power to compound was subject to the Magistrate's approval. But, in this case, the learned Magistrate did not say anything about whether he approved or not. He simply says that he heard the Court Inspector. It is a great pity when parties who are apparently nearly related to one another succeed in patching up their quarrels, that the Magistrate should not do what he can to restore peace and good will. I think the petitioners Nur Ahmed and Aminullah should be acquitted of the charge under section 323, Indian Penal Code, on the ground that the complainant did not wish to proceed any further against them; and, so far as Faizullah is concerned, taking into consideration that he has already undergone some days' rigorous imprisonment and the complainant did not wish to proceed against him either, I think in his case, too, the conviction and sentence under section 324, VENKATASUBBIER, In re. SUPDT. & REMB. OF LEGAL AFFAIRS, BENGAL, v. TROILOKHYA NATH.

Indian Penal Code, should be set aside. The result is, that the Rule is made absolute and the convictions and sentences passed on the petitioners are set aside.

Suhrawardy, J.—I agree.

there may be in bringing the action of the accused within the definition of force it is clear they used violence which is sufficient under section 146 of the Indian Penal Code, to make their offence rioting. This view is supported by the ruling in Samaruddin v. Emperor (1), where it was held that the word "violence" was not restricted to force used against persons only but extends also to force against inanimate objects. The accused were, therefore, rightly convicted under section 147 of the Indian Penal Code.

The fines, however, seem to me to be excessive in the case of the Pariah accused Nos. 4 to 14. Their fines will be reduced to rupees ten each, in default two weeks' rigorous imprisonment. The sentences of the others are confirmed. Excess fines, if collected, would be refunded.

SUPDT. & REMR. OF LEGAL AFFAIRS, BENGAL V. TROILOKHYA NATH.

JUDGMENT.

Sanderson, C. J.—This is an appeal by the Superintendent and Remembrancer of Legal Affairs, Bengal, against a decision of a Sub-Deputy Magistrate, 3rd Class, of Ghatal, and the matter arises out of a prosecution, in which one Troilokhya Nath Chatterjee was the defendant, under section 273 (2) of the Bengal Municipal Act, which provides that, "whoever, in a Municipality, without a license uses any place for any of the purposes specified in section 261, or section 263; or (uses any place as a kiln in contravention of the provisions of section 262A)" and so on, "shall be liable, for every such offence, to a fine." And the material part of section 261 which is applicable to this case is as follows:—"Within such local limits as may be fixed by the Commissioners at a meeting, no place shall be used without a license from the Commissioners, which shall be renewable annually, for any of the following purposes, namely, as a tannery, slaughter-house, or kiln for making bricks, pottery, tiles or lime."

The allegation in this case was that the defendant had, without a license used a place as a kiln for making bricks. The brick field was said to be about 50,000 square feet and the method of manufacturing bricks was, what is called in this country, in "Panjas" or as it has been said by one of the witnesses "clamps." The description of a "Panja" or clamp is given by the witness, Joy Kumar Sarkar, who was called for the defendant. He says "there is a difference between a kiln and clamp. In a 'clamp' or 'Panja' the fuel and bricks are placed in alternate layers. In a kiln, which means a room or masonry enclosure with or without roof, in which the bricks are stacked without any fuel and burnt from places or flues arranged below the stack, in which the fires are lighted and kept up with the fresh supplies of wood or coal till the bricks are burnt." "Then" he says "we never say Bull's clamp but Bull's kiln and we say 'country clamp' which does not mean a kiln. 'Then' in describing the process adopted by the defendant, he said, 'I would not say that the bricks were burnt there in kilns, but they were burnt in 'clamps' or country 'Panjas.'"

On the other hand, it has been contended that this process of burning bricks by placing the fuel and the bricks in alternate layers so that they reach up to a considerable height and cover a considerable area really, in effect, amounts to the creation of the kiln. The Magistrate decided in favour of the defendant holding that this process was not a kiln and the Legal Remembrancer has appealed. The definition of a kiln in the Oxford Dictionary is as follows:—A furnace or oven for burning, baking, or drying of which various kinds are used in different industrial processes." Then, it gives an instance, "An oven or furnace for baking bricks, tiles or clay vessels, or for melting the vitreous glaze on such vessels."

That definition, in my opinion, points to a structure which is of a permanent nature. Further, I was struck with the account which the learned Vakil read from the Encyclopædia Britannica in Volume IV, at page 520. It runs as follows:—"It is evident that the best method of firing bricks is to place them in permanent kilns, but although such kilns were used by the Romans some 2000 years ago, the older method of firing in 'clamps' is still employed in the smaller brick fields, in every country where bricks are made. These clamps are formed by arranging the unfired bricks in a series of rows or walls, placed fairly closely together so as to form a rectangular stack. A certain number of channels or fire mouths are formed in the bottom of the clamp and fine coal is spread in horizontal layers between the bricks during the building up of the stack. Fires are kindled in the fire mouths and the 'clamp' is allowed to go on burning until the fuel is consumed throughout. The clamp is then allowed to cool, after which it is taken down and the bricks sorted." In that description there is clearly a distinction drawn between that which is a "clamp" and that which is a "kiln", and the process of making bricks by means of "clamps" seems to be older than the kilns which were used by the Romans about 2000 years ago. Giving to the word "kiln" its ordinary meaning, I am inclined to the opinion that the Magistrate was right in his construction. If, however, there is a doubt about it, the words of the section ought not to be strained unduly against the defendant. In my judgment, there is force in the argument which the learned Vakil presented, upon the construction of this part of the section. The words are "using a place as a kiln for making bricks." His argument was that if it had been intended to prohibit the manufacture of bricks not only by means of a kiln but also by means of the older system of "clamp" it would have been sufficient for the Legislature to provide that no place shall be used without a license from the Commissioners for the purpose of making bricks; consequently, we must take it that the words "no place shall be used as a kiln for making bricks," were advisedly used by the Legislature having regard to the ordinary meaning of the word "kiln" as distinguished from "clamps." In a case of this kind, in my judgment, it is not the function of the Court to strain the meaning of the particular section of the Act, because, if the process which is aimed at in this prosecution is really a nuisance and if it is, in the opinion of the authorities, such a process as ought to be brought within the purview of the section, it is open to them to amend the Act.

For these reasons, in my judgment, the appeal must be dismissed.

Panton, J.—I agree.

THE CROWN PROSECUTOR—APPELLANT
versus

A. DURAISWAMI—ACCUSED.

Madras City Police Act (III of 1888), s. 78, rule under—"Ride", meaning of—Person carried on bicycle, whether rides.

The word "ride" in the rule made under the Madras City Police Act as to riding bicycles in any street or public place, does not necessarily imply that the person riding should propel the bicycle himself. A person, therefore, who is carried on a bicycle propelled by another, rides the bicycle.

Appeal under section 417 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, against the acquittal of the aforesaid accused by the Court of the Honorary Presidency Magistrates, Egmore, in C. C. No. 9555 of 1922, on their file.

The Crown Prosecutor, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—The interpretation put by the Honorary Magistrates on the rule referred to by them and published in the Fort Saint George Gazette of 10th February 1922 No. 189* seems to be erroneous. The first part of the rule applies to the person who pedals the bicycle and takes with him another on the same cycle; and the latter part of the rule clearly applies to the person who allows himself to be so carried, for he rides the bicycle but not on the saddle. The word "ride" does not necessarily imply that the person riding should propel the bicycle himself. It may be that the rule as worded covers the case of a single person riding a bicycle without being seated on the saddle, but it certainly covers also the case of a person riding a bicycle in the manner the second accused did. He pleaded guilty and, therefore, he should have been convicted, but as the Crown Prosecutor does not ask for a sentence it is not necessary to inflict one now. But his acquittal is set aside.

Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice Crump.In re PARSHOTAMDAS M. SHAH.Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss.
439, 476—Direction to prosecute—Revision.

The High Court will not in revision interfere with a direction to prosecute under section 476 of the Criminal Procedure Code unless it is satisfied that the direction was given on merely fanciful grounds, or on grounds so empty and so obviously wrong that the Court giving the direction could not be said to have formed a serious judicial opinion.

Criminal application from an order passed by the District Magistrate, Panch Mahals.

Mr. G. N. Thakor, (with Mr. M. H. Mehta), for Shah.

Mr. H. C. Coyajee, (with Mr. Ratanlal Ranchhoddas), for Munshi.

Mr. N. M. Desai for Sukhdeo.

JUDGMENT.—We are asked to interfere in revision with an order passed by the District Magistrate under section 476, Criminal Procedure Code, on October 25, 1922, in which, after finding that there was a prima facie case against certain persons, he directed that the case should be sent for inquiry to the First Class Magistrate. The principles which the High Court should follow in dealing with an application in revision in such a case were considered in In the matter of the petition of Alamdar Husain (1). The Chief Justice said (page 251):

“Now it has been held by this Court that the High Court has power in revision to set aside an order passed by a Civil, Criminal or Revenue Court under section 476 of the Code; and I assume that this view is correct. Still, one must have regard to the nature of the revisional jurisdiction, and must not, in a case arising under section 476, any more than in any other case, allow what would virtually be an appeal from the order of the Court below. It is necessary, as in all other cases, to see whether there has been any error of law, any irregularity, any abuse of, or failure to exercise judicial discretion, such as would justify interference in revision. Now, let us see whether there is any fault of that kind to be found in the Collector's proceedings. The condition of his acting under section 476 is his forming the opinion that there was ground for inquiring into any offence referred to in section 195. The test is his opinion, and not the opinion of any superior Court; and if he has formed a real opinion to the effect stated, he has power to act under the section, and he commits no error or irregularity in doing so, even though another Court may think the opinion erroneous. I say, if he forms a real opinion, because, no doubt, if a case arose in which the Court acted on merely fanciful grounds, on grounds so empty, so obviously wrong that it could not be said to have formed a serious judicial opinion at all, then this Court would probably hold in revision that there had been no such action as section 476 contemplates.”

With respect, we entirely agree with the learned Chief Justice. On a consideration of all the arguments addressed to us, we cannot say that any grounds have been put forward on which we can possibly interfere with the direction given by the District Magistrate. It cannot be said that he gave those directions on grounds merely fanciful, grounds so empty and so obviously wrong that he cannot be said to have formed a serious judicial opinion. We discharge the rules in these three applications. The only amendment we make in the order is that we set aside the amendment made by the District Magistrate himself on October 30, 1922, adding “195” after “193” in the original order.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 149—"Offence," if includes offence under special Act.The definition of "offence" in section 149, Penal Code, does not include offences under special Acts.

Appeal against an order of the Court of Special Judge, Malabar, Calicut, in Case No. 5 of the Calendar for 1922 (S. T. Case No. 101 of 1921).

Mr. P. Govinda Menon, for Appellants.Mr. J. C. Adam, Public Prosecutor, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—We see no reason for interference with the lower Court's findings of fact. The evidence against the second and eighth accused, appellants before us was, no doubt, given against the former only by first and third prosecution witnesses and against the latter only by first, third and fourth prosecution witnesses. We do not think that any sufficient reason of the nature of enmity or the like has been made out for rejecting this evidence. There was some delay in the giving of information to the authorities but that is an almost invariable feature of these cases and was probably inevitable in view of the state of the country. The defence evidence did not assist the accused.

Accepting the finding of facts, there is no reason for interference with the conviction of an offence punishable under section 143, Indian Penal Code. The objection at the conviction under section 126, Indian Railways Act, is that there is no evidence in the case of either of these accused of his having himself done or taken any immediate part in any act specified by the section. It is not possible to apply section 149, Indian Penal Code, because the definition of "offence" in section 149 does not for the present purpose include offences under Special Acts. The learned Public Prosecutor has suggested the application of section 34, BHANGI DUBEY V. EMPEROR.

Indian Penal Code, but the evidence does not, in our opinion, justify the conclusion that the criminal action question, the removal of rails, sleepers, etc., was done by several persons, including these accused. The part these accused played is, in fact, unspecified, and we think that, in order to justify the application of the section, evidence of some distinct act by the accused which can be regarded as part of the criminal act in question must be required.

Taking this view, we allow this appeal to the extent that we set aside the conviction of an offence punishable under section 126 of the Indian Railways Act and the sentence of seven years' rigorous imprisonment. The accused must, therefore, be released when they have served their sentence of six months' rigorous imprisonment for the offence punishable under section 143, Indian Penal Code, and any sentence in default of payment of the fines which may be necessary.

Revision from a decision of the Magistrate, Shahabad.

JUDGMENT.

Coutts, J.—The petitioner in this case, Bhangi Dubey, has been convicted under section 325 of the Indian Penal Code and has been sentenced to one year's rigorous imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 100.

The case for the prosecution was that on the evening of the 24th of February 1922, as Shah Ghulam Makhdum was on his way home he was assaulted by the petitioner and others, and Bhangi Dubey struck him with a danda on his left eye with the result that the sight of his eye was destroyed. The whole prosecution evidence in regard to the actual occurrence has been disbelieved except the evidence of Shah Ghulam Makhdum himself, and it is on his uncorroborated statement that the petitioner has been convicted. There is serious enmity between the accused and Shah Ghulam and, in my opinion, it is unsafe to convict the petitioner on the uncorroborated testimony of this witness. I would accordingly set aside the conviction and sentence and acquit the petitioner; the fine if paid must be refunded.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 494

In according or withholding consent to an application for withdrawal of a case by the Public Prosecutor under section 494 (a) of the Criminal Procedure Code the Court acts in a judicial capacity and for its order, as for every order judicially made, the Court must give and record its reasons, so that the High Court may be in a position to say whether the discretion vested in the Court has been properly exercised. An order omitting to give such reasons is liable to be set aside in revision.

Revision of an order of the District Magistrate, Chanda, rejecting the Revision No. 5 of 1922, on the 21st June 1922, against the order passed by the Magistrate, Second Class, Chanda, dated the 21st June 1922, in Criminal Case No. 14 of 1922.

Mr. D. T. Mangalmurti, for the Applicant.

Mr. G. P. Dick, for the Non-Applicant.

ORDER.—The Police, at the instance of the present applicant, Suganchand, filed a case against the non-applicants under section 147, Indian Penal Code. This was on the 13th March 1922. On the 28th idem, after no less than 10 witnesses for the prosecution had been examined, the Prosecuting Inspector put in the following memorandum:—

"As ordered by the Deputy Superintendent Police, I beg to withdraw the case under section 147, Indian Penal Code, against Chunnilal and others, which is fixed for 28th March 1922 in your Court."

The Magistrate wrote in the order-sheet as follows:—

"Prosecuting Inspector puts up an application under the order of Deputy Superintendent Police for withdrawing the case. Prosecution evidence is not yet finished. Case is, therefore, permitted to be withdrawn under section 494, Criminal Procedure Code, and the accused are discharged."

Complainant files this application and it is contended for him that as no reasons are given in the order, for withdrawal of the charge the order is bad. Reliance is placed on Umesh Chandra Roy v. Satis Chandra Roy (1). That case lays down that "in according or withholding consent to an application by the Public Prosecutor for withdrawal under section 494 (a), the Court acts in a judicial capacity and for its order, as for every order judicially made, the Court must give and record its reasons so that the High Court may be in a position to say whether the discretion vested in the Court has been properly exercised." This case has been followed in Rajani Kanta Shaha v. Idris Thakur (2). The view of the Madras High Court as expressed in In re Sadayan (3) is the contrary.

I am inclined to follow the Calcutta view and as no reasons have been given for the discharge I set aside the order of the Magistrate granting consent to the Public Prosecutor's withdrawal from the prosecution in question and the consequent order of discharge. The accused will now be replaced upon their trial and the case against them heard and disposed of in accordance with law. There is nothing to prevent the Public Prosecutor again applying for a withdrawal of the prosecution or to prevent the Magistrate from granting it if good reasons exist for his doing so.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 498, scope of—Special leave to appeal to Privy Council—Bail, grant of, during pendency of application—High Court, jurisdiction of.

After a High Court has dealt with the case of an accused in revision it is functus officio and has no jurisdiction under section 498, Criminal Procedure Code, to grant bail in order that a petition for leave to appeal may be made to His Majesty in Council or until the petition for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council is disposed of. [p. 365, col. 2.]

Diwan Chand v. Emperor, 8 Cr. L. J. 89 19 P. W. R. 1908 Cr.; 15 P. R. 1908 Cr. (F. B.), followed.

Mr. S. C. Chowdhury (with him Babu Phanindranath Dass), for the Petitioner:—Section 498 of the Code of Criminal Procedure gives the High Court jurisdiction to grant bail in such a case. The High Court can defer the execution of a sentence even if no appeal has been filed in any Court. In the case of Queen-Empress v. Subrahmaniam Ayyar (1) the Judicial Committee laid down that the bail application was to be made to the High Court. The petitioner was placed on her trial on a charge under section 380, Indian Penal Code, but she was convicted under section 54A of the Calcutta Police Act and sentenced to undergo rigorous imprisonment for three months. No charge under section 54A was framed and she was seriously prejudiced.

[SANDERSON, C. J.—What is the section about receiving the stolen property?]

Section 411, Indian Penal Code. The charge might have been added, but instead of that a procedure has been followed which is not warranted.

[SANDERSON, C. J.—What is the difference between section 411, Indian Penal Code, and section 54A of the Calcutta Police Act?]

The gold was found in a molten condition not in the house of the petitioner but in that of a goldsmith to whom it is said she had given it.

[SANDERSON, C. J.—Section 54A says "conveys."]

The petitioner could have been charged under section 411, Indian Penal Code, but not under section 54A of the Police Act. The case of Manhari Chowdhury v. Emperor (2) relied on by the learned Judges in support of this conviction has no bearing on the point in support of which it has been cited. The facts of that case were quite different.

The real grievance is that she has been estopped from giving the evidence which she would have given if she had known that there was the charge under section 54A of the Police Act against her. There has been an error in procedure by which she has been prejudiced.

TULSI TELINI v. EMPEROR.

[SANDERSON, C. J.—The Privy Council have held that they will not interfere unless there has been grave injustice. In the present case the petitioner might have been charged under section 411, Indian Penal Code, and in case of conviction she might have been liable to three years' rigorous imprisonment.]

But she has been shut out from giving evidence. She has been prejudiced.

[SANDERSON, C. J.—We cannot go behind the findings of the learned Judges who say that there has been no prejudice.]

I am not asking your Lordships to go behind those findings. I am simply asking you to defer the execution of the sentence for a short time.]

[SANDERSON, C. J.—You must satisfy us in what respect there has been miscarriage of justice.]

Even if the findings are correct a subject has a right to approach the Crown and the Privy Council will ultimately deliver whether the judgment is right or wrong.

[SANDERSON, C. J.—If it is assumed that the accused has not been prejudiced what ground is there to be urged before the Privy Council?]

My point before the Privy Council will be that there has been grave injustice on account of error in procedure. The latest date for filing the appeal before the Privy Council is the 28th March and I only ask for a postponement of the execution of the sentence for a time not very long.

[RICHARDSON, J.—Has the High Court jurisdiction to grant bail at the present stage?]

[SANDERSON, C. J.—Should this Court grant bail before special leave to appeal has been obtained from the Privy Council? Is there any case in which bail has been granted by the High Court before that?]

Even if there is no such case it is clear your Lordships have jurisdiction under section 498, Criminal Procedure Code. The question of jurisdiction has been settled by the Madras case Queen-Empress v. Subrahmantha Aiyar (1).

The Advocate-General (Mr. S. R. Das), for the Crown:—The Crown does not oppose the granting of bail till the special leave is obtained from the Privy Council. In the Madras case it was held that the High Court had jurisdiction but there special leave had been granted by the Privy Council. If it is under section 498, Criminal Procedure Code, that the High Court has jurisdiction it makes no difference whether special leave has been granted or not. The Punjab Chief Court in a case reported as Diwan Chand v. Emperor (3) held that in such a case the High Court had no jurisdiction to grant bail. This was after the Madras decision. They say that the High Court is functus officio and section 498, Criminal Procedure Code, does not give jurisdiction. The Code of Criminal Procedure does not apply to appeals to the Privy Council.

If the decision in the case of Queen-Empress v. Subrahmantha Aiyar (1) is correct, it makes no difference whether appeal has been admitted or not because the jurisdiction, exercised will be under section 498, Criminal Procedure Code.

[SANDERSON, C. J.—Even if we have jurisdiction, it is our duty to see what there is on the merits. It has been laid down in In re Abraham Mallory Dillet (4) that His Majesty will not revise the order in a criminal case except on the ground of grave injustice.]

The sentence in the case is only three months and the Crown, therefore, does not oppose this application for bail. The plea in affidavit which has been filed shows that he had evidence to show that the property was the accused's and this evidence was shut out.

[SANDERSON, C. J.—The learned Judges say that the petitioner has not been prejudiced.]

It is just on that point that they are going up to the Privy Council.

[RICHARDSON, J.—The question of jurisdiction under section 498, Criminal Procedure Code, is very doubtful.]

Apart from what is in the Madras case, there does seem to be doubt as to the jurisdiction under section 498, Criminal Procedure Code. The section refers to "any case," that is, any case at which the Court can be in seisin.

[SANDERSON, C. J.—Any case of which the Court is or may in future be in seisin.]

[SANDERSON, C. J.—Clause 41 of the Letters Patent contains a special provision for cases tried in the original jurisdiction of the High Court. That explains the whole thing. The Madras case was a case tried in the original jurisdiction of the Court.]

JUDGMENT.

Sanderson, C. J.—This is an application by the petitioner, one Tulsi Telini, praying that this Court, under section 498 of the Criminal Procedure Code, will stay execution of the sentence of imprisonment passed against her, until the petition which she alleges she is about to present to His Majesty in Council is disposed of. The application is really that the petitioner may be admitted to bail pending the application to the Privy Council.

It appears that the petitioner was charged under section 380 of the Indian Penal Code, in the Court of the Fourth Presidency Magistrate of Calcutta. The Magistrate came to the conclusion that he could not convict her on the charge of theft or of receiving stolen property. He then proceeded to say: "But at the same time I have good reasons to suspect that the money and the ornaments, especially the ornaments, were stolen property. And as the accused has not given satisfactory explanation of her possession of the same, I find her guilty under section 54A of the Calcutta Police Act of being in possession of property reasonably suspected to be stolen, and he sentenced her to three months imprisonment.

The petitioner obtained a Rule from this Court which was heard by my learned brothers Mr. Justice Newbould and Mr. Justice Suhrawardy.

The first ground upon which the Rule was granted was, that the conviction under section 54A of the Calcutta Police Act was illegal having regard to the facts that the only charge framed against the petitioner was one under section 380 of the Indian Penal Code, and the other ground was with regard to the legality of the conviction upon the facts of the case. The learned Judges discharged the Rule, and the petitioner proposes to apply to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council, on the ground that substantial and grave injustice has been done to her: and it has been stated in the petition, that the petitioner has already sent instructions to a firm of Solicitors in London to file a petition of appeal to His Majesty in Council forthwith.

The petitioner has now applied to this Court to grant her bail until that petition is disposed of and the learned Counsel has argued that this Court has jurisdiction to grant bail, and that, having regard to the facts of the case, bail ought to be granted in the discretion of the Court.

On the other hand, the learned Advocate-General on behalf of the Crown argued that this Court, under the circumstances of this case, had no jurisdiction, but he stated that if the Court had jurisdiction to grant bail the Crown would not oppose bail being granted having regard to the fact that he considered the point which was involved an important one.

The first point, therefore, to be considered is whether this Court has jurisdiction.

The learned Counsel for the petitioner has based his argument upon section 498 of the Code of Criminal Procedure which runs as follows: "The amount of every bond executed under this Chapter shall be fixed with due regard to the circumstances of the case, and shall not be excessive: and the High Court or Court of Session may, in any case, whether there be an appeal on conviction or not, direct that any person be admitted to bail, or that the bail required by a Police Officer or Magistrate be reduced" and he called in aid of his argument the case of Queen-Empress v. Subrahmania Ayyar (1) which is reported in I. L. R. 24 Madras 161. In my judgment, that case is no authority for the learned Counsel's argument. That was a case where the petitioner had been tried at the Criminal Sessions in the Madras High Court and found guilty on certain counts in the indictment. A certificate had then been granted by the Advocate-General under clause 26 of the Letters Patent for the Madras High Court. Thereupon, the High Court reviewed the case and determined that the conviction in respect of certain of the counts ought not to be upheld, but a majority of the Judges of the High

TULSI TELINI v. EMPEROR.

Court upheld the conviction on one of the counts, and imposed a sentence of imprisonment and fine. The petitioner then obtained special leave from Her Majesty in Council to appeal against the sentence: and having obtained leave to appeal, the petitioner applied for bail to the Judicial Committee, and the Judicial Committee expressed an opinion that the matter should be decided by the Madras High Court. Thereupon, the petitioner applied to the Madras High Court for bail; the learned Advocate, who appeared for the petitioner relied upon section 498 of the Criminal Procedure Code, and the Crown Prosecutor in opposing the application argued that section 498 could not be construed without regard to the other sections of the Code, the principle underlying which was that only the Court to which an appeal was preferred could admit to bail. The judgment of the High Court was short. They dealt with the question of jurisdiction in one sentence, viz., "In our judgment this Court has jurisdiction to make an order in this case releasing the accused on bail, pending the decision of the Privy Council." They then proceeded to discuss the question whether the petitioner ought to be admitted to bail. It seems to me that that case is no authority in favour of the petitioner in this case for two reasons. In the first place, the learned Judges of the Madras High Court did not state in their judgment whether it was by reason of the provisions of the Criminal Procedure Code or by reason of the provisions of the Letters Patent, that they had jurisdiction. It may be, as was pointed out in the case of Diwan Chand v. Emperor (3), that the decision may have been based upon the Charter.

Secondly, it is material to note that in a case, such as that with which the Madras High Court was concerned, this Court would have power to grant leave to appeal to the Privy Council if it thought that the case was a fit one for such appeal. I refer to clause 41 of the Letters Patent of this Court which provides: "We do further ordain, that from any judgment, order, or sentence of the said High Court of judicature at Fort William in Bengal, made in the exercise of original criminal jurisdiction, or in any criminal case, where any point or points of law have been reserved for the opinion of the said High Court in manner hereinbefore provided, by any Court which has exercised original jurisdiction it shall be lawful for the person aggrieved by such judgment, order, or sentence to appeal to Us Our heirs or successors, in Council; provided the said High Court shall declare that the case is a fit one for such appeal, and under such conditions as the said High Court may establish or require, subject always to such rules and orders as we may, with the advice of Our Privy Council, hereafter make in that behalf." In such a case it may be that this Court has jurisdiction to grant bail, especially when the High Court has declared the case to be a fit one for appeal or when the Privy Council has granted special leave, as in the Madras case. Nothing I say to-day must be taken as throwing any doubt upon the jurisdiction of this Court to grant bail in a case which comes within clause 41 of the Letters Patent. But the present case does not come within clause 41 of the Letters Patent. The petitioner in this case has no right to appeal to the Privy Council. In this case, this Court has no power to give leave to appeal to the Privy Council, and therein this case differs entirely from the case which the Madras High Court was considering in Queen-Empress v. Subrahmania Ayyar (1). Consequently, in this case the petitioner must rely upon section 498 of the Criminal Procedure Code and upon that section only, and the question is, whether this Court, under the circumstances of this case, has jurisdiction to grant bail.

In my judgment it has not. On the true construction of the provisions of section 498 it seems to me that this Court having dealt with the application of the petitioner by way of revision, i.e., having granted a Rule and having heard the Rule and discharged it, this Court is junctus officio, and it has no jurisdiction under the provision of section 498 to grant bail, in order that a petition for leave to appeal may be made to His Majesty in Council or until the petition for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council is disposed of.

The result is that, in my judgment, this petition must be refused on the ground that this Court has no jurisdiction to deal with it.

I express no opinion upon the facts of the case, nor do I express any opinion upon the questions of law which were argued on the hearing of the Rule.

The learned Counsel for the petitioner invited this Court to express an opinion upon the merits of the application, in order that our opinion might be placed before the Governor-General in Council or the Local Government. In my judgment, we ought not to express any opinion in that respect. By section 401 (1) of the Criminal Procedure Code it is provided that, "when any person has been sentenced to punishment for an offence, the Governor-General in Council or the Local Government may at any time, without conditions or upon any conditions which the person sentenced accepts, suspend the execution of his sentence or remit the whole or any part of the punishment to which he has been sentenced." The learned Advocate-General at our request appeared in this case to assist the Court. He is fully cognizant of the facts of the case and of the points of law which were raised before my learned brothers on the hearing of the Rule and, if the Governor-General in Council or the Local Government desire any assistance in this respect from the learned Advocate-General I have no doubt such assistance will be forthcoming. In any event, in my judgment it is not for us to express any opinion upon the point.

Richardson, J.—I agree.

The present case differs in two respects from the case of Queen-Empress v. Subrahmaniam Ayyar (1), on which the learned Counsel for the applicant has relied.

Firstly, in that case the prisoner before applying to the High Court for bail had already been granted leave to appeal by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee. In the case before us no leave to appeal has yet been obtained from their Lordships. We are told that the applicant proposes to apply for such leave.

In the second place, it appears that in the case cited, application for leave to appeal to the Privy Council might have been made to the Madras High Court under the same clause 41 of the Letters Patent of the Court [see Reg. v. Pestanji Dinsha (5).] The same clause 41 of the Letters Patent of this Court could have no application at all to the present case in any of its stages.

I mention these circumstances because there seems reason to suppose that they affected the decision of the learned Judges in Madras. It is true that section 498 of the Criminal Procedure Code was referred to in the argument before the learned Judges, but they made no express reference to that section in their judgment. They merely said that in their judgment they had jurisdiction to make the order for bail in that case, that is in the case then before them.

An express decision on the construction of section 498—a decision adverse to the present applicant—will be found in the case before the Punjab Chief Court of Diwan Chand v. Emperor (3). I do not regard the decision of the learned Judges of the Madras High Court as necessarily extending to such a case as that now before us and on the construction of section 498 I have come to the conclusion with respect that the view of the learned Judges of the Punjab Chief Court is the right one. In the present case, in my opinion, section 498 does not confer jurisdiction upon this Court to grant bail to the applicant pending the result of an application to be made by her to the Privy Council for leave to appeal.

So far as the present case is concerned, this Court is functus officio: it has no seisin of the case in any way: the case cannot again be brought before this Court for the purpose of leave being given to appeal to the Privy Council or for any other purpose. It will be observed that by the terms of section 498, if the power contended for is conferred on the High Court it is also conferred on the Court of Session. Some limitation, therefore, must be put on the words "in any case." They cannot include a case in which the Court has reached finality and has no further jurisdiction to exercise.

If the construction of section 498 which I adopt is correct, I fail to understand on what principle it can be suggested that this Court, in the absence of any statutory power, is competent, or has an inherent jurisdiction to liberate the applicant on bail. The learned Counsel has produced no authority which, in my opinion, would justify us in concluding that such a jurisdiction exists.

If any indulgence is to be sought for it is open to the applicant, if so advised, to move the Local Government to suspend the sentence under section 401 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

Without expressing any opinion on the merits of the case, I agree with my Lord that the application must be refused.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 107, proceedings under—Proceedings by Subordinate Magistrate under order of District Magistrate, propriety of.

A District Magistrate should not direct a Subordinate Magistrate to draw up proceedings under section 107 of the Criminal Procedure Code. If he considers it necessary in order to prevent a breach of the peace to take proceedings under that section, he should himself draw up such proceedings, and may transfer the case to a Subordinate Magistrate for hearing. Proceedings drawn up by a Subordinate Magistrate merely because the District Magistrate has ordered him to do so are improper and will be set aside by the High Court.

Babu Dinesh Chandra Roy, for the Petitioners.

Babu Probodh Chandra Chatterjee, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—The form of the order made by the District Magistrate in this case is improper. If he thought that it was necessary, in order to prevent a breach of the peace, to take proceedings under section 107, Criminal Procedure Code, against the petitioners he should have himself drawn up such proceedings and he might then have transferred the case to a Subordinate Magistrate for hearing. But he should not, as he has done, direct proceedings to be drawn up by a Subordinate Magistrate, nor should the Subordinate Magistrate draw up proceedings merely because the District Magistrate has ordered him to do so. He has full power under section 107, Criminal Procedure Code, to take action under that section when he thinks it is necessary to do so to prevent a breach of the peace. But in deciding as to the necessity for action he must come to a conclusion of his own accord on the materials before him and act accordingly.

We accordingly set aside the order of the District Magistrate passed on the 3rd of December 1922, directing proceedings under section 107, Criminal Procedure Code to be drawn up by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate against the petitioners. This order will be no bar to either the District Magistrate or the Sub-Divisional Magistrate drawing up proceedings against the petitioners should they think it necessary to do so in order to prevent a breach of the peace.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 488—Maintenance of child—Buddhist monk—Able-bodied men—Means of subsistence—Presumption.

Under the Criminal Procedure Code a father cannot get rid of his statutory obligation to support his child, on the plea that he is a Buddhist monk.

The Criminal Procedure Code overrides the personal law where it conflicts with it.

The presumption is that an able-bodied man has sufficient means to support his child as well as himself and it is for him to prove the contrary.

Me Tha v. Nga San E, 13 Ind. Cas. 914, 1 U. B. R. (1911) 90; 13 Cr. L. J. 162, relied on.

Mr. N. M. Mukerjee, for the Applicant.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application to revise the order of the Head-quarters Magistrate of Monywa directing the applicant to pay the respondent Rs. 2 a month for the maintenance of his illegitimate child.

The applicant is a Buddhist monk and an enquiry into this matter was held by the Buddhist Ecclesiastical Authorities. The board of enquiry consisted of a Gainggyok, two Gaingoks, and two Gaingdauks. One of the Gaingoks declined to express any opinion. The other and the Gainggyok found that the applicant had had sexual intercourse with the respondent. The two Gaingdauks considered that this was not proved. Apparently nothing further was done and the applicant continues to wear the yellow robe. Of course, the Magistrate was not in any way bound by the result of this enquiry and on the evidence taken before him he found it proved that the applicant had had sexual intercourse with the respondent and was the father of her child. One of the grounds on which revision is sought is that it was not legally established that the applicant was the father of the respondent's child. It is not necessary for me to go into the evidence in detail, it suffices to say that no reasonable man after reading the evidence would come to any other conclusion than that the applicant had had sexual intercourse with the respondent a great many times. There is nothing whatever to suggest that the respondent ever had sexual intercourse with any other man and the finding that the applicant was the father of the child was justified. The contention put forward by the applicant that the father of the respondent's child was another monk—a contention supported by totally irrelevant dispositions of a prostitute and her souteneur—was contemptible.

Next, it is contended that the applicant is not liable to support the child, even though it be his, because he is a Buddhist monk. He cannot get rid of his statutory obligation in that way; the Criminal Procedure Code must override his personal law, if it conflicts with it. As a matter of fact, his own witness U Wunna says that on a Buddhist monk having sexual intercourse he ipso facto becomes a layman.

Finally, it is contended that the applicant, being a Buddhist monk, himself lives on charity and consequently has not means with which to maintain a child. The amount which the applicant has been ordered to pay is Rs. 2 a month. He admits that he owns a camera worth Rs. 110 and that he is an able-bodied man. It was held in Me Tha v. Nga San E (1) that the presumption was that an able-bodied man had sufficient means to support his child as well as himself and that it was for him to prove the contrary, and the meaning of the word "means" was considered. There is no doubt that the applicant can pay Rs. 2 a month for the maintenance of his child if he chooses to do so. If he cannot do it in any other way, it is his duty to throw off the yellow robe and work.

The application is dismissed.

Petition, under section 439 of the Criminal Procedure Code, for revision of an order of the District Magistrate, Attock, at Campbellpur, dated the 25th April 1922, directing re-trial of the accused, discharged by the Magistrate, Second Class, Attock, at Campbellpur, on 7th November 1921, by the Bench of the Honorary Magistrates at Campbellpur.

Mr. Mukand Lal Puri, for the Petitioners.

Lala Niamat Rai, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is a petition for revision of an order of the District Magistrate, Attock, directing, under section 437, Criminal Procedure Code, a re-trial of the case under sections 323 and 448, Indian Penal Code, in which the petitioners were discharged. There were two cross-complaints under the same sections, the bone of contention being, according to the judgment of the Magistrate, a shop belonging to a joint Hindu family of which the parties are members. The Magistrate, after recording all the evidence produced by both parties, came to the conclusion that the parties had grappled with each other, that they had fallen on to the ground and that the trivial injuries sustained by them were due to the fall. As to the dispute about the shop, he held that undisputed possession was not established by either party and that the dispute might more appropriately be settled by a Civil Court. From this order Mathra Das and Kanshi Ram, the complainants in one case, applied for revision to the District Magistrate. He thought that there was a strong proof that the shop belonged to and was in possession of the complainants because in the schedule filed by Karam Chand in a petition of insolvency he made no mention of having any share in it. He accordingly directed further enquiry but did not expressly set aside the order of discharge. The Magistrate then went to the spot and made some further enquiries and submitted a report to the District Magistrate in which he said he was satisfied that the complainants were in possession of the disputed shop. Upon this the learned District Magistrate recorded an order to the effect that he had made a mistake in simply calling for a report previously. He then directed a re-trial and sent the case to the Bench of Honorary Magistrates, Campbellpur, for hearing. From this order the accused persons have come up to this Court on revision.

It was held by a Full Bench of the Chief Court in the case reported as Emperor v. Kiru (1) that when a Magistrate has passed an order discharging an accused person generally speaking further enquiry should not be directed unless the order of discharge is manifestly perverse or foolish or is based upon a record of evidence which is obviously incomplete. Now, in the present case, the record shows that at the original trial the parties produced all their evidence. The record of evidence was, therefore, not an incomplete one, and I do not see how it can be said that the order of discharge is manifestly perverse or foolish. The mere fact that Karam Chand in the schedule filed by him in the insolvency petition did not mention that he had any share in the shop in dispute is not in itself conclusive proof that he owned no such share. As pointed out in the report of the Magistrate, Karam Chand omitted certain other properties also in that schedule; and it is notorious that persons who file petitions of insolvency do not always put in a complete schedule of their property. Counsel for the complainant says that after the first order of the District Magistrate dated the 14th January 1922, the petitioners submitted to the jurisdiction of the Trying Magistrate and on the 4th March 1922 made an application to the District Magistrate that the case should not be transferred from the Tahsildar's Court. The Tahsildar, however, was not re-trying the case, he was merely making a local enquiry with a view to reporting the result to the District Magistrate. The order of which revision is now sought is one of a date subsequent to the 4th March 1922. I do not think that Karam Chand, by reason of his application of the 4th March 1922, can be debarred from questioning the District Magistrate's order of the 25th April. The dispute is as to the possession of property which is, or previously was, the property of a joint Hindu family of which both the parties are members. Prima facie, the dispute is of a civil nature. The case has been going on for a long time now, and after a full enquiry the Trying Magistrate discharged the accused in both the cross-cases. I do not think it is right that the petitioners should be put to such a lot of trouble in the Criminal Courts when the case is really one of a civil nature, and, having regard to the Full Bench decision above referred to, I do not think that the order of discharge should have been set aside.

I, therefore, allow the petition and set aside the order of the District Magistrate directing a re-trial.

Petition allowed.

A Magistrate having once issued process against a witness for the defence is bound to enforce his attendance and grant an adjournment of the trial for that purpose.

Babus Monmotha Nath Mukherjee and Satindra Nath Mukherjee, for the Petitioners.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the petitioner, who was accused of an offence under the Excise Act, cited certain defence witnesses who were summoned. On the date fixed for hearing one of these witnesses did not attend and the accused informed the Court that the witness was ill and asked for a postponement in order to enable him to produce the witness. The application was refused on the ground that the petitioner had not produced a medical certificate to show that the witness was actually ill. We hold that the Magistrate, having once issued process against the defence witness, was bound to enforce his attendance. If he did not believe the story of the accused that the witness was ill he should have issued a warrant to enforce his attendance. The accused having obtained summons from the Court against this witness was entitled to have his attendance enforced. Had he come to Court and said the witness was not present and given no reason for his absence the Court would have no ground for refusing an adjournment to enforce the attendance of the witness. We see no reason why the petitioner should be in a worse position because he informed the Court of the fact of the witness being ill. We accordingly set aside the conviction and sentence passed on the petitioner and direct that the case be re-tried from the point it had reached when the application for adjournment for the production of this witness was refused.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 256
 —Provision, whether imperative—Failure to comply with section—Illegality.

The provisions of section 256 of the Criminal Procedure Code are imperative and the failure to ask an accused person, after a charge has been framed against him, whether he desires to re-call any of the prosecution witnesses for cross-examination, involves a re-trial of the case from the point of drawing up of the charge. [p. 372, col. 1.]

Munian Chetty v. Emperor, 26 Ind. Cas. 309; 16 Cr. L. J. 5, not followed.

Case reported by the Sessions Judge, Hoshiarpur, with his No. 267 dated the 23rd February 1922.

FACTS.—Accused No. 1 is the own brother of the complainant Taloka while accused No. 2 Musammatt Shabdo is the aunt of the complainant and accused No. 1. The allegation is that accused No. 1 being on visiting terms with his aunt Musammatt Shabdo has been excommunicated by the brotherhood and that the complainant has maliciously been imputed as having illicit connection with one Musammatt Mainan a weaver by caste in consequence of which he has also been excommunicated by the brotherhood since 25th March 1921.

GROUND.—A law point has been taken before me by petitioner's Counsel in which there is certainly force. This was in connection with section 256 of the Criminal Procedure Code and was to the effect that the petitioners were not asked by the Honorary Magistrate whether they wished to cross-examine prosecution witnesses whose evidence had been taken. The Honorary Magistrate's record shows that the petitioners were given no such opportunity.

Moola v. Emperor (1) and the remarks in the last paragraph of page 34* and at the top of page 35* are clearly to the effect that the provisions of section 256 are imperative and in that case there was a remand to the District Magistrate.

For these reasons I forward the proceedings to the High Court with a recommendation that there should be a remand to the Honorary Magistrate or a re-trial before a different Magistrate.

Mr. T. D. Khanna, for the Petitioners.

ORDER.—This case has been reported by the Sessions Judge of Hoshiarpur. Two persons, Mahan Singh and Musammatt Shabdo, were prosecuted by one Taloka, under section 500, Indian Penal Code. They were tried by an Honorary Magistrate, First Class, who framed charges against them but omitted to ask them at that stage if they wanted to re-call any witnesses for cross-examination. They produced their witnesses in defence and were fined Rs. 10 each. They applied to the Sessions Judge on the revision side attacking their convictions. Their grounds for revision were confined to objections to the case for the prosecution on the merits; and the legal ground that the provisions of section 256, Criminal Procedure Code, were not carried out, was not expressly taken by them. It appears, however, that it was argued before the learned Sessions Judge, and he has forwarded the proceedings to this Court with a recommendation that the case should be remanded to the Honorary Magistrate or a re-trial before a different Magistrate ordered.

Mr. Trilochan Das Khanna appears before me to support the petition and relies on Moola v. Emperor (1), where it is laid down that the omission to follow section 256 usually involves remand and re-trial of the case from the point of drawing up of the charge. A different view has been taken by the Madras High Court in a case published as Munian Chetty v. Em- peror (2), which says that the omission to ask the accused whether he wants to cross-examine the prosecution witnesses again or not is a mere irregularity and does not vitiate a conviction.

But I am inclined, on the whole, to agree with the learned Sessions Judge that the provisions of section 256, Criminal Procedure Code, are imperative, and the petitioners have a right to be given an opportunity of further cross-examining the prosecution witnesses, if they so desire.

I, therefore, remand this case to the Honorary Magistrate concerned, with the direction that he should re-try it from the stage at which the charges were framed, and dispose of it according to law, after giving the petitioners a chance of re-calling the prosecution witnesses and further cross-examining them.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 237, 236—Charge under s. 380, Penal Code—Conviction under s. 54A, Calcutta Police Act, legality of.

An accused person can be tried under the provisions of section 236 of the Code of Criminal Procedure on charges of offences punishable under section 380 of the Penal Code and section 54A of the Calcutta Police Act, and under section 237 of the Criminal Procedure Code he can be convicted of the offence punishable under the latter section, although no charge under that section was framed against him. [p. 375, col. 1.]

Manhari Chowdhury v. Emperor, 43 Ind. Cas. 614; 22 C. W. N. 199; 19 Cr. L. J. 198; 27 C. L. J. 434; 45 C. 727, followed.

Mr. Dasarath Sanyal, for the Crown:—It was not necessary to frame a charge under section 54A of the Police Act. On the charge under section 380, Indian Penal Code, the accused could have been convicted under section 411 by reason of section 237, Criminal Procedure Code. The illustration makes it clear. An offence means an offence under any law for the time being in force—section 4, Criminal Procedure Code. An offence under section 54A is an offence under a special law and it should be taken to be a minor offence within the meaning of section 238, Criminal Procedure Code. So by the double operation of sections 237, 238 the accused could be convicted under section 54A of the Police Act even if no charge was framed.

It is to be noted that an offence under section 54A is triable as a summons-case and it is not necessary to frame a charge.

[SUHRAWARDY, J.—You argue that an offence under section 54A of the Police Act is minor to an offence under section 411, Indian Penal Code, and a conviction could be had under section 411, Indian Penal Code, by the operation of sections 237, 238, Criminal Procedure Code, and, therefore, a conviction could be had also under section 54A of the Police Act although an offence under section 54A is not minor to an offence under section 380, Indian Penal Code.]

Yes.

On a comparison of section 411, Indian Penal Code, with section 54A of the Calcutta Police Act it appears that the former section contains ingredients in addition to those contained in the latter. "Minor offence" has not been defined in the Code but it has been explained in Queen-Empress v. Sitanath Mandal (1). See also Reg. v. Ramajirav Jivbajirav (2). The point has been set at rest by a recent decision in Manhari Chowdhury v. Emperor (3) which holds that section 54A of the Calcutta Police Act is minor to section 411, Indian Penal Code, and also that a conviction under section 54A is proper without a charge being framed.

TULSI TOLINI v. EMPEROR.

The conviction in this case was by a Presidency Magistrate who has submitted an explanation. Additional facts may be stated by Presidency Magistrates in explanations which the High Court is bound to consider—Section 441, Criminal Procedure Code.

Mr. Manmatha Nath Mukerjee (with him Mr. Satindra Nath Mukherjee), for the Petitioner:—The Magistrate was bound to frame a charge under section 54A of the Police Act if at the end of the trial under section 380, Indian Penal Code, he thought that the case should end in a conviction under section 54A. The argument on the other side is based on a fallacy. Sections 236, 237, 238 are the only sections to be considered. In considering section 236 you will have to remember the point of time when a charge is framed. If at that time there is any doubt as to the offences then the provision of the section is to be followed. Section 237 refers to cases covered by section 236. Section 238 relates to minor offences. It is a mistake to say that section 54A of the Police Act is minor to section 411, Indian Penal Code. The combination of circumstances which made up section 54A do not at all form a part of section 411, Indian Penal Code. Queen-Empress v. Sitanath Mandal (1) does not stand in my way. There the question was whether section 365, Indian Penal Code is minor to section 366, Indian Penal Code. That is quite clear.

[NEWBOULD, J.—Section 365, Indian Penal Code, is kidnapping with one intention and section 366, Indian Penal Code, is kidnapping with another intention.]

It is kidnapping all the same.

The argument on the other side is that section 54A of the Police Act is minor to section 411, Indian Penal Code, which is cognate to section 380, Indian Penal Code, but that section 54A is minor to section 380, Indian Penal Code. By establishing a relationship between the offences the difficulty cannot be got over. Manhari Chowdhury v. Emperor (3) is not an authority for the proposition which it is claimed to lay down. In this case there was an alternative charge under section 411, Indian Penal Code, besides a charge under section 380, Indian Penal Code. The facts of that case were also peculiar.

[NEWBOULD, J.—If the accused could be charged under section 236, Criminal Procedure Code, for an offence under section 54A could she not be convicted under section 237 for that offence without a charge being framed?]

Not necessarily.

[SUHRAWARDY, J.—Your argument seems to be that if there was a charge under section 411, Indian Penal Code, she could be convicted under section 54A of the Police Act but that cannot be done where the charge framed was only under section 380, Indian Penal Code.]

That is so.

The facts in Manhari Chowdhury v. Emperor (3) were peculiar and the decision in that case cannot be applied to the facts of this case. A case is only an authority for the proposition which it decides and every judgment must be read as applicable to the facts of that case. Quinn v. Leathem (4).

[SUHRAWARDY, J.—The ratio decidendi of that case was that the same evidence was to be adduced in both trials. Is not that the case here?]

That is not so.

Section 236 of the Code has no application whatever to the facts of this case and that being so the whole argument on the other side fails.

JUDGMENT.—The petitioner, Tulsi Tolini, has been convicted of an offence punishable under section 54A of Act IV of 1866 Calcutta Police Act. That section runs as follows: "Whoever has in his possession, or conveys in any manner, or offers for sale or pawn, anything which there is reason to believe to have been stolen or fraudulently obtained, shall, if he fails to account for such possession or act to the satisfaction of the Magistrate be liable to fine, etc." At the trial the only charge framed against her was that she committed theft in respect of gold and silver ornaments, cloths and cash Rs. 13,410 in G. C. notes, sovereigns and coins valued in all about Rs. 18,000 from the room of one Khelwan Ahir and thereby committed an offence punishable under section 380, Indian Penal Code. This rule has been granted on two grounds. The first relates to the legality of the conviction under section 54A of the Calcutta Police Act, on the charge framed, the other, to the legality of the conviction under this section on the facts found.

As regards the first ground, it is contended on behalf of the Crown that sections 237 and 238, Criminal Procedure Code, render the conviction legal. We are of opinion the provisions of section 237, Criminal Procedure Code, alone are sufficient and it is, therefore, unnecessary to consider whether the offence punishable under section 54A of the Calcutta Police Act is a minor offence to that of retaining stolen property, punishable under section 411, Indian Penal Code. Nor need we consider whether the double operation of sections 237 and 238 can be invoked to support the contention that, since section 237 would render an accused liable to conviction under section 411 on a charge of theft, he could also on such a charge be convicted of an offence that is minor to one punishable under section 411, Indian Penal Code.

Clause (1), section 237, Criminal Procedure Code, runs as follows:—"If in the case mentioned in section 236, the accused is charged with one offence, and it appears in evidence that he committed a different offence for which he might have been charged under the provisions of that section, he may be convicted of the offence which he is shown to have committed, although he was not charged with it." The illustration to this section is, "A is charged with theft. It appears that he committed the offence of criminal breach of trust, or that of receiving stolen goods. He may be convicted of, criminal breach of trust, or of receiving stolen goods (as the case may be) though he was not charged with such offence." It thus appears that the legality of a conviction for an offence not charged depends, when reliance is placed on section 237, on whether the different offence of which the accused has been convicted is one for which he might have been charged under the provisions of section 236, Criminal Procedure Code, which is in the following terms. "If a single act or series of acts is of such a nature that it is doubtful which of several offences the facts which can be proved will constitute, the accused may be charged with having committed all or any of such offences and any number of such charges may be tried at once, or he may be charged in the alternative with having committed some one of the said offences." In the present case the prosecution, based their case on a series of acts of a suspicious nature and asked the Court to draw an inference from those acts that the accused had herself committed theft of the articles mentioned in the charge from the room of Khelwan Ahir. But if from the facts proved in support of this charge of theft it was doubtful whether the Court could draw this inference and the Court might draw the inference that an offence punishable under section 54A of the Calcutta Police Act had been committed, the accused might have been charged at the trial with both those offences under section 236 and this conviction would be in accordance with the provisions of section 237, Criminal Procedure Code.

In addition to the evidence of the theft, evidence of suspicious acts is set out at length in the judgment of the Trying Magistrate and classified under four heads; stated shortly, the first is evidence of the complainant's daughter-in-law that the accused obtained possession of the key and padlock of the door which separated her rooms from the room of the complainant in which the theft was committed. The second is evidence of large payments by the accused to the creditors about the time of the theft. The third is evidence of the accused pledging ornaments and attempting to change notes for Rs. 1,000. The fourth is evidence that the accused gave a goldsmith old ornaments to be melted down under suspicious circumstances. The evidence as to the first and third series of these suspicious acts has been disbelieved and that as to the second and fourth believed by the Magistrate. This being the case for the prosecution, we hold that section 236 was clearly applicable. In the words of that section, the series of acts was of such a nature that it was doubtful which of several offences the facts which could be proved would constitute. If all the acts alleged had been proved facts, the Court might have convicted the accused of theft or might even in that case have refused to draw the inference that the accused was the actual thief. That a charge under section 54A of the Calcutta Police Act might have been joined with a charge of theft under the provisions of section 236, Criminal Procedure Code, was held by this Court in the case of Manhari Chowdhury v. Emperor (3). It is true, as contended on behalf of the petitioner, that in that case the point decided was the applicability of section 403, Criminal Procedure Code, and that the facts are distinguishable in one important particular. But, regarded as an obiter dictum, this judgment read as a whole shows that another Divisional Bench of this Court interpreted sections 236 and 237, Criminal Procedure Code, in the same way that we do. For the above reasons we hold that the accused could have been tried under the provisions of section 236 on charges of offences punishable under section 380, Indian Penal Code, and section 54A of the Calcutta Police Act and that, therefore, under section 237 she could be convicted of the offences punishable under the latter section though she was not charged with it.

It is also contended that the power of the Magistrate to apply section 237, Criminal Procedure Code, is discretionary and that it should not have been applied in the present case since the result has been to prejudice the accused in her defence. We hold that she has not been prejudiced. On the charge framed she was required to account for the possession of the ornaments which she gave to the goldsmith to be melted. Whether these were stolen property and whether she could account for their possession were as important issues on the charge framed as they are on the charge of which she has been convicted. We, therefore, hold that the first ground on which this Rule was granted has not been established.

The Rule was granted on the second ground to enable us to examine whether the conviction was in accordance with the principle laid down in Queen-Empress v. Dhanjibhai Edulji (5) Sukhu Kalwar v.

Emperor (6) and Bai Das v. Ali Bux Khan (7) that there must be reason to believe that the property found in the accused's possession was stolen as a preliminary condition before the accused can be called on to account for that possession. In the present case the accused's conduct in making over the 67½ tolas of gold ornaments to be melted is sufficient to give reason to believe that she was in possession of stolen property. This preliminary condition was, therefore, fulfilled in the present case and, with the Magistrate's finding that she has not given a satisfactory explanation of the possession of these ornaments, is sufficient to support the conviction.

We, therefore, discharge this Rule. The petitioner must surrender to her bail and undergo the unexpired portion of her sentence.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 54, 202—Complaint filed before Magistrate—Police, power of, to investigate.

The Criminal Procedure Code draws a clear distinction between jurisdiction to try and jurisdiction to investigate a case, and it is possible to conceive of cases where, although a Magistrate may distrust a complaint or delay in passing orders, the Police would be failing in their duty, if they did not arrest an offender against whom a cognizable offence had been made out. Much more so would this be the case where the Magistrate after recording the complaint finds that a regular Police investigation would be more suitable and intentionally keeps the complaint pending in order that the Police may exercise their powers of investigation and arrest independently of the Magistrate. [p. 377, col. 1.]

In practice, the Police will not ordinarily take independent action in respect of a complaint which has already been distrusted by a Magistrate, but it is neither correct nor expedient to lay down the general proposition that an order made by a Magistrate under section 202 of the Criminal Procedure Code, debars the Police from exercising their power of arrest and investigation. [p. 377, col. 2.]

Appeal from a decision of the Sessions Judge, Purnea, dated the 8th September 1922, reversing an order of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Arraria, dated the 25th July 1922.

The Government Advocate, for the Appellants.

Mr. G. C. Pal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

Mullick, J.—This is an appeal by the Local Government against an order of acquittal passed by the Sessions Judge of Purnea in Criminal Appeal No. 6 of 1922. The material facts are as follows:—

On the 30th January 1922 one Ali Beg lodged a complaint before the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Arraria stating that three persons, Bhola Bhagat, Abdul and Jan Mohammad had forcibly snatched away a bottle of liquor and robbed him of a purse containing Rs. 10. The Sub-Divisional Magistrate recorded the complaint and passed the following order upon it. "Police to take cognizance under section 379, Indian Penal Code, make a quick enquiry and report by 8th February 1922."

That order reached the Sub-Inspector of Arraria Thana on the 4th February and as he was ill he deputed the officer next in seniority to him to proceed to the place of occurrence and to hold an inquiry. The writer Head Constable Mahesh Narain accordingly arrived at Joki Hat on the 5th February and, after making some investigation, he arrested Bhola, Abdul and Jan Mohammad. It is alleged that, while he was bringing these three persons to the Police Station a mob of 2,000 persons forcibly rescued the prisoners and assaulted two Constables who attempted to resist.

Thereafter Bhola, Abdul and Jan Mohammad were placed upon their trial for the offences enumerated in Ali Beg's complaint and were convicted under sections 352, 426 and 379, Indian Penal Code, and sentenced as follows:—Bhola to rigorous imprisonment for one month under section 379, Indian Penal Code, and one month under section 426, Indian Penal Code; Abdul and Jan Mohammad to rigorous imprisonment for one month under section 426, Indian Penal Code. Against that order there was a reference to the High Court and on the 22nd May 1922 Mr. Justice Adami set aside the convictions and directed a re-trial. That re-trial has not yet been concluded.

Meanwhile, the Police had instituted an inquiry against the persons who had been engaged in the rescue of the prisoners, and in regard to that occurrence, they, on the 5th February, sent up 20 persons for trial to the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Arraria. The result was that nine out of these 20 were acquitted and the remaining eleven, who are respondents in the present appeal, were convicted and sentenced as follows: Bhola, Abdul and Jan Mohammad to one month's rigorous imprisonment and to a fine of Rs. 20 each under section 224, Indian Penal Code; Ramchariter, Rajkumar, Rashid Mian, Makhru Sahu, Bunsu Chamari, Phul Mohammad, Kutubuddin and Mohammad Irfan to one month's rigorous imprisonment and to a fine of Rs. 20 each under section 225, Indian Penal Code; all the eleven accused to six months' rigorous imprisonment each under sections 147, 225 and 332, Indian Penal Code. The sentences of imprisonment in all cases to run concurrently.

An appeal was then preferred to the Sessions Judge of Purnea and he, on the 8th September 1922, reversed the conviction holding that the arrest of the 3 prisoners was illegal, and that the appellants had committed no offence.

The present appeal has been preferred by the Local Government against that order of acquittal and the 11 appellants before the Sessions Judge are now respondents before us.

Mr. Gour Chandra Pal on behalf of the respondents contends that the learned Magistrate distrusted the truth of Ali Beg's complaint and, acting under section 202, Criminal Procedure Code, sent it to the Police for enquiry and report, that the Police had no jurisdiction to do anything more than to hold a local inquiry and to send their report to the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, and that they were incompetent to exercise any of the powers which they may have possessed under the general provisions of the Criminal Procedure Code, either under section 54, Criminal Procedure Code or under the Chapter relating to the investigations of cognizable cases. In other words, it is contended that the arrest of the 5th February was not an act done in excess of jurisdiction but with complete absence of jurisdiction.

It is necessary, therefore, to see what was the meaning of the order of the 30th January. Reading that order it is impossible to say that it was an order made under section 202, Criminal Procedure Code. In my opinion it was an order directing the Police to exercise the independent powers conferred upon them by the law. The learned Deputy Magistrate nowhere says that he is proceeding under section 202, Criminal Procedure Code, or that he distrusts the truth of the complaint; and, in these circumstances, the question is whether the Police were entitled to proceed with the investigation independently of the Magistrate, even though a complaint was pending before the Magistrate in regard to the same matter. In my opinion there was nothing in the law to prevent such a course.

The Criminal Procedure Code draws a clear difference between jurisdiction to try and jurisdiction to investigate and it is possible to conceive of cases where, although the Magistrate may distrust a complaint or delay in passing orders, the Police would be failing in their duty, if they did not arrest an offender against whom a cognizable offence has been made out. Much more so would this be the case where the Magistrate after recording the complaint finds that a regular Police investigation would be more suitable and intentionally keeps the complaint pending in order that the Police may exercise their powers of investigation and arrest independently of the Magistrate. In my opinion this is what he did in the present case.

But even if the order of the Magistrate was an order under section 202, Criminal Procedure Code, I cannot see why the jurisdiction of the Police to arrest and to send up a charge-sheet was ousted. In practice, of course, the Police would not ordinarily take independent action in respect of a complaint which had already been distrusted by the Magistrate, but to lay down the general proposition that a Magistrate's order under section 202, Criminal Procedure Code, debars the Police from exercising their powers of arrest and investigation, would, in my opinion, be neither expedient nor correct.

Therefore, from any point of view, the Police had in this case jurisdiction to take cognizance of the information which was given to them.

Mr. Pal next contends that in fact there was no information upon which the Police could act. The reply to this is that the Police had the complaint which had been recorded by the Magistrate. His reply to that again is that if he was not acting under section 202, Criminal Procedure Code, then the Magistrate had no authority under the Code to send the complaint at all to the Police. Assuming that this was so, and assuming that the Magistrate acted extra-judicially, the fact remains that the Police got information upon which they could proceed. At its lowest, the communication was a request from a private person that investigation should be made and I fail to see how the Police were precluded from taking cognizance of the subject-matter of that communication. But, in my opinion, the Magistrate's order stands on a higher footing. As the executive head of the Police he had power to send that complaint to the Police and to direct them to investigate, in either case the jurisdiction of the Police could not have been ousted.

The next question is whether the Writer Head Constable had authority to make the investigation. Now, section 4, clause (p), of the Criminal Procedure Code, clearly shows that the Writer Head Constable in this case was qualified to do so. The Sub-Inspector in charge was ill and although the Writer Head Constable admits that he has not been generally empowered to investigate cognizable cases, he being the officer in charge of the Police Station on that day, it was his duty to make the investigation.

EMPEROR V. BHOLA BHAGAT.

The only question that remains is, whether the arrest which followed on the 5th February was lawful. Now section 54 of the Criminal Procedure Code is clear and the first clause of that section says that if a Police Officer finds that reasonable complaint has been made or credible information has been given or a reasonable suspicion exists he is competent to arrest the accused person. It is contended by Mr. Pal that in this case there was no reasonable complaint or credible information or reasonable suspicion. To this the reply is that there was, first of all, the complaint which had been recorded by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate. It is, however, urged that in the complaint before the Magistrate was a charge of a cognizable offence against Bhola only, and that against Abdul and Jan Mohammad there was only a charge of assault and mischief. Now, although the vernacular complaint states that Bhola was the person who snatched away the purse in the English statement recorded by the Magistrate there is no qualification or discrimination and all the three men are charged with the robbery. Again, when the Writer Head Constable arrived at Joki Hat Ali Beg repeated the accusation, and in these circumstances it seems impossible to say that the Writer Head Constable had not credible information against all the three accused. In my opinion it was his duty to arrest all three and to leave it to the Court to decide which, if any, were guilty.

It is, however, contended that, inasmuch as the Magistrate himself had not thought it necessary to issue process in the first instance, the Police Officer was put upon his guard and that he did not in fact believe that there was any cognizable case against the three men. In my opinion, this was not the position. There was nothing before the Writer Head Constable to indicate that the Magistrate did not believe the charge, and, as I have said before, even if he had known that the Magistrate was doubtful, his jurisdiction would not have been ousted.

In these circumstances, the view taken by the learned Judge seems to be wrong. The arrest was lawful, there was no absence of jurisdiction and, therefore, any assembly which had for its object the rescue of the prisoners or the commission of an assault upon the Police while engaged in the lawful exercise of their duties, was an unlawful assembly within the meaning of the Indian Penal Code.

Our attention has been drawn to "In the matter of Charu Chandra Majumdar" (1) in which a learned Judge of the Calcutta High Court held that, a letter, written by the Criminal Investigation Department in Bombay to the Police Commissioner in Calcutta asking for the arrest of a certain person, was not sufficient information to justify resort to the provisions of section 54 of the Criminal Procedure Code. That case, however, is of no real assistance, for it must surely be a question of pure fact whether or not in the present case the materials before the Police Officer were sufficient to set section 54 in motion. If he should be so unfortunate as to be unable to establish those facts, the arrest must of course be pronounced illegal. In my opinion he has discharged the onus and his proceedings were perfectly legal.

In this view of the case, it is unnecessary to examine the arguments addressed to us as to the scope of section 99, Indian Penal Code. There are observations in Queen-Empress v. Dalip (2) in Nowrangti Singh v. Queen-Empress (3) and in Queen-Empress v. Pukot Kotu (4) which may lead to the inference that, even though the arrest is illegal, resistance is unlawful if the Police acted in good faith and under colour of their office. Mr. Pal asks us to distinguish these cases and hold that they cover irregularities and not illegalities. I agree that it is often said that section 99 extends not to cases where there is complete absence of jurisdiction but only to cases where there is jurisdiction and something has been done in excess of jurisdiction. It is unnecessary for us to examine the authorities dealing with this part of the case because, in my opinion, there was no illegality or irregularity whatsoever in the arrest.

EMPEROR 2. SAFDAR REZA.

The order, therefore, that we shall make is, that the appeal be allowed and that the case be remanded to the Sessions Judge of Purnea for re-hearing. He will decide the questions of fact which arise upon the evidence. We only decide the question whether the arrest was legal.

The District Magistrate, upon receiving this judgment, will call upon the respondents to surrender and will then inform the Sessions Judge of the fact of his having done so in order that he may fix a day for the re-hearing of the appeal. As the respondents were on bail in the Court of the Sessions Judge, the District Magistrate will be competent to release them on adequate bail to appear before the Sessions Judge for the hearing of the appeal.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 366, offence under—Consent of woman, effect of.

In a prosecution under section 366 of the Penal Code the fact that the girl concerned, at the time she was enticed away from her home by the accused, had the intention of having illicit intercourse with him, is no defence to the charge under that section. The intention of the accused (and not that of the girl) is the material matter in the case. [p 380, col. 2.]

Mr. H. S. Suhrawardy, for the Prisoner.

Mr. B. L. Mitter, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the accused Safdar Reza was convicted by the Jury of an offence under section 363 and of an offence under section 366 of the Indian Penal Code by a majority of 7 to 2, which verdict I accepted, and the matter which is now for consideration arises with regard to the offence under section 366. The offence under section 363, in this case, consists of kidnapping from lawful guardianship—no question arises with regard to that matter. But with regard to section 366, the material part which applies to this case, is kidnapping a woman "in order that she may be forced or seduced to illicit intercourse."

In this case there was no suggestion of any force being used by the accused, and I left it to the Jury to say whether the girls Matabia and Bhagbania or either of them, were kidnapped by the accused in order that they or either of them might be seduced to illicit intercourse. The Jury by their verdict found that the accused kidnapped the two girls with that object and intention, and found him guilty under section 366 by a majority of 7 to 2, as well as under section 363.

The evidence was that after the accused had kidnapped the two girls he did in fact have sexual intercourse with both the girls at Goberdanga. It was, however, argued on behalf of the accused that at the time the girls left Doman's house they had the intention of having illicit intercourse with the accused and that, if that were their intention, the accused could not be convicted under section 366.

In order that this question might be argued before me, I directed the Jury to give a special finding upon this question, and they found that the girls intended, at the time they left Doman's house, to have illicit intercourse with the accused.

The question, therefore, arises whether that fact is sufficient to prevent the accused being convicted under section 366.

On the evidence it appears that neither of the girls had been seduced until their illicit intercourse with the accused at Goberdanga, which took place after the kidnapping by him. The material facts in this respect, stated shortly, are that both the girls were under 16 years of age. They lived in Calcutta with Doman, who is the father of Matabia and the uncle of Bhagbania, whose parents were dead, and he was, therefore, the lawful guardian of both girls. They had been married some four years before this occurrence, but it was proved that neither of them had lived with their husbands. They had come back to Calcutta immediately after the marriage ceremony.

The evidence of Matabia on the question of seduction was as follows:—"I had no connection with any one else." With regard to Bhagbania it seems to me that the Doctor's evidence was important: he found that in her case the hymen had not been ruptured: he said that there could be sexual connection without the rupture of the hymen, and especially, having regard to the fact that the hymen in this girl was situated far up in the passage, that it would be possible to allow a certain amount of penetration without injuring the hymen. Bhagbania said that the accused cohabited with her at Goberdanaga. The Doctor's evidence shows this may have been possible; but the Doctor's evidence, in my opinion, is inconsistent with Bhagbania having been in the habit of cohabiting with other men.

It is admitted that with regard to the offence under section 363, that is, kidnapping from lawful guardianship, the girls being under 16 years of age, their consent is immaterial. It is further conceded that the offence dealt with by section 366 is merely an aggravated form of the offence created by section 363; and it would, therefore, seem to follow that when the matter under consideration in relation to section 366, is the seduction to illicit intercourse of a girl under 16 years of age, as in this case, her consent or intention would be just as immaterial as it would be in connection with the offence dealt with under section 363.

One object of the sections under consideration is not only to protect the rights of parents and others having the lawful guardianship of girls under the age of sixteen, but also to protect the girls themselves and to prevent persons taking improper advantage of their youth and inexperience, and it is obvious that, on the facts of this case, however willing the girls may have been, the accused was the cause of their being seduced from the path of virtue and having illicit intercourse with him.

In my judgment, therefore, the fact that the girls, at the time they were enticed away from their home by the accused, had the intention of having illicit intercourse with him, is no defence to the charge under section 366.

On the facts of this case the consent of the girls, who were under the age of sixteen and who had not had any illicit intercourse with any man before the accused, is not inconsistent with their having been seduced to illicit intercourse by him.

In my judgment, the intention of the accused is the material matter, and on the findings of the Jury and the facts of this case, there can be no doubt that he kidnapped the girls in order that they might be seduced to illicit intercourse with him. In my judgment, therefore, on the facts of this case the point which has been raised constitutes no defence to the charge under section 366 of the Indian Penal Code. There is no question as to the propriety of the verdict of the Jury or the liability of the accused to be convicted in respect of the charge under section 363 of the Indian Penal Code. But inasmuch as the greater offence under section 366 includes the lesser offence under section 363, the accused should not be convicted under both. I, therefore, convict him under section 366.

The offence, in my judgment, is a serious one, the conduct of the accused was calculated to ruin the two girls for life; fortunately they were discovered and brought back to their home, and I hope that the damage done to them by the accused may not be irremediable.

The chance which they now have, however, was in no way due to any action or repentance on the part of the accused. He took advantage of the girls, who were in a humble walk of life, kept them in an out of the way village for over two months, and acted in such a way as was calculated to ruin their lives.

I sentence the accused to two years' rigorous imprisonment.

Accused No. 1, a licensee for liquor, brought a certain quantity of liquor to the house of accused No. 2 who was his father. On a purchaser asking for liquor accused No. 2 called to accused No. 1 to bring the liquor. The price for the liquor was handed over to accused No. 2:

Held, that it could not be said, either that accused No. 2 was in joint possession of the liquor with accused No. 1, or that he had joined in the sale of the liquor within the meaning of section 61 (1) (a) and (2) (a) of the Punjab Excise Act.

Mr. Anant Ram, for the Petitioners.

JUDGMENT.—The evidence for the prosecution has been believed by the two lower Courts and I see no sufficient reason for rejecting it in revision. At the same time, I do not think the difference between the cases of Kishen Singh and his son Khushal Singh has been sufficiently considered.

Khushal Singh was a licensee for sale of liquor at Gakhar and he it was, according to Attar Singh witness, who brought the 8 bottles of liquor to Gujranawala. The possession, therefore, was his exclusively and the mere fact that he brought the liquor to Kishen Singh's house does not make the possession joint of himself and Kishen Singh. Further, I do not think it can be held that the latter joined in the sale merely because he called to his son to bring 2 bottles and because the money was handed to him. I, therefore, accept the petition so far as Kishen Singh is concerned, and setting aside his conviction and sentence acquit him. Fine if paid to be refunded. As far as Malabar (Restoration of Order) Ordinance (I of 1922), s. 4 (2) (b)—Special Magistrate—Retired Magistrate, appointment of—Trial by such Magistrate—Illegality—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 12, 26, 41.

Under section 4 (2) (b) of the Malabar (Restoration of Order) Ordinance only a person who is already a Magistrate is eligible for appointment as "Special Magistrate." The powers of a Magistrate terminate on his retirement from service and a retired Magistrate is, therefore, incompetent to be appointed a Special Magistrate under the Ordinance. A conviction on trial by such a Magistrate is illegal and must be set aside.

(Case-law discussed.)

Appeal against the order of the Court of the Special Magistrate, Manjeri, in S. C. No. 6 of 1922.

Mr. B. Pocker, for the Appellants.

The Public Prosecutor, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—We have to deal first with an objection to the competence of the Special Magistrate by whom the appellants Nos. 1 to 6 accused, have been convicted. The only persons who, under Ordinance I of 1922, section 4 (2) (b), can legally be appointed Special Magistrates are "Magistrates who have exercised the powers of a First Class Magistrate for not less than two years." M. R. Ry. Dewan Bahadur C. Gopalan Nayar, the Special Magistrate here in question, was, as the order appointing him, dated 1st July 1922, shows on that date a retired Deputy Collector. It is not disputed by Mr. Pocker for the accused that he had before and up to his retirement exercised first class powers for not less than 2 years. The objection to his appointment is that he was not on 1st July 1922 a Magistrate, because his retirement had determined his Magisterial powers.

The learned Public Prosecutor hardly disputes that only a person who is already a Magistrate is eligible for appointment as Special Magistrate, and that is clearly entailed by the wording of the section. He contends that, as M. R. Ry. C. Gopalan Nayar was a Magistrate on the date of his retirement and was never deprived of his Magisterial powers, he continued to be one, those powers being merely in abeyance in the absence of any local jurisdiction, wherein they could be exercised, and that he was one for the purpose of the section.

The definition of "Magistrate" in the General Clauses Act (X of 1897) section 3 (31) is applicable to the interpretation only of Acts and Regulations, not of an Ordinance, and is statedly not exhaustive, and there is no definition in the Criminal Procedure Code. The only references in that Code to the terminations of the powers of a person, who has been made a Magistrate are in section 26 to the removal of such persons from office, and in section 41 to the withdrawal of the powers conferred on him by the Local Government or the District Magistrate, and it is not alleged that any such action has been taken in the case of M. R. Ry C. Gopalan Nayar. But under section 12 Sub-Divisional Magistrates can be appointed only as Magistrates in a District, their powers, if they are in Government service, being continued under section 40 in the case of transfer to a different local area. This is inconsistent with the view for which the learned Public Prosecutor contends, since it follows from it that the Magisterial powers are recognised by the Code as subsisting only so long as the district or local area in which they can be exercised, although not necessarily that for which they were originally conferred, can be ascertained. The suggestion that, where no such district or area is ascertainable, the powers are in abeyance is not, so far as we have been shown, supported affirmatively by any provision of the Code and it can hardly claim even negative support from the absence of any provision for the lapse of powers, where, except in the events to be referred to, no necessity for such provision will ordinarily arise. As regards one of such events, the temporary absence of a Magistrate on leave, authority is available. For In the matter of Pursooram Boroah (1) the learned Judge who dealt with the point, referred to the possibility that "what really vacated an office was not the going on leave, but the appointment of another person to it," although he held on other grounds that the section of the Code in force, corresponding with the present section 40 was not applicable to the case under decision; and in Bai Harku v. Sitaram Kalian (2) it was held explicitly that a Magistrate's absence on leave made no difference to his right under section 40 to exercise the powers conferred on him in the local areas to which on his return from various periods of leave he was transferred. The latter decision was reached with reference to the fact, also referred to in the former, that an officer on leave under the Civil Service Regulations retains a lien either on his appointment or on one of similar character, and the conclusion suggested in the one case and reached in the other is by this construction reconcilable with the principle, which, sections 12 and 41 entail, that Magisterial powers continue, as long as connection with a district or a local area can be regarded as maintained. Another class of cases, more similar to that under our consideration, consists of those, in which the officer is appointed permanently to the other duties in the Secretariat or elsewhere, dissociated from Magisterial work and retains no sort of connection with a district or local area, in which he can exercise powers, authority regarding the necessity for again conferring powers on him on his return to a district is wanting. But we have ascertained that in each of these classes of cases the practice of Government is in accordance with the principle just referred to. That is to say, powers are not conferred again, where an officer has left a district on leave and returns to the same district or another, whilst they are, if his absence on other duty has entailed his dissociation from the work of a Magistrate and he returns to it, his appointment to that duty involving an implicit withdrawal of his powers. Such an implicit withdrawal is contemplated in Bai Harku v. Sitaram Kalia (2) in the reference to the contingency that the Magistrate there in question had by absence without leave or after the end of leave lost his appointment. And such a withdrawal must follow from the resignation of an appointment or its termination, such as occurred in the case of M. R. Ry. C. Gopalan Nayar, inasmuch as his connection with any district or local area in respect of which his powers could with reference to section 12 be regarded as subsisting, then came to an end. The conclusion must be that M. R. Ry. C. Gopalan Nayar had ceased to be a Magistrate and was not one, when he was appointed a Special Magistrate under the Ordinance. His appointment was, therefore, invalid.

The result is that the appellants have not been tried by a legally constituted Court; that their convictions must be set aside and that they must be re-tried by the Special Magistrate of Malapuram.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 195—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 471—Using forged document—Offence, when complete—Sanction to prosecute—Court empowered to grant sanction.

The offence of using as genuine a forged document is complete once the document is produced or given in evidence. [p. 384, col. 2.]

The words "or of some other Court to which such Court is subordinate" as used in section 195 of the Criminal Procedure Code and read with sub-section (7) of that section do not cover and include the High Court where the case has been tried in any Court other than that of a District and Sessions Judge or an Additional District and Sessions Judge. [p. 384, col. 1.]

Dina Nath Gautam v. Muhammad Abdulla, 61 Ind. Cas. 53; 2 L. 57; 22 Cr. L. J. 325, followed.

Under section 195 (c) of the Criminal Procedure Code it is either the Court of first instance or the Court to which it is immediately subordinate in the sense given in sub-section (7) of that section, that can grant sanction. The High Court is not empowered to grant sanction by virtue merely of having heard the appeal in the case. [p. 384, col. 2.]

ORDER.—Mohammad Fazal Ilahi applies under section 195, Criminal Procedure Code, for the sanction of this Court to the prosecution of the respondents under various sections including sections 471 and 193, Indian Penal Code, these respondents being one Mohan Lal, who was a defendant in an important civil case, and various persons who appeared as witnesses. The respondents take a preliminary objection that sanction cannot be granted by this Court inasmuch as a Senior Sub-Judge tried the case and the Court to which he is immediately subordinate in the sense in which the words are used in section 195, Criminal Procedure Code, is that of the District Judge of Lahore.

Counsel for the petitioner relies on Miran Bakhsh v. Beli Ram (1), Bhadesar Tewari v. Kamta Prasad (2), Gudala Suriah v. Jamal Bee Bee (3), while the respondents rely mainly upon Kompella Anantaramayya v. Chikkatla Tukkadu (4). It is quite clear as explained in Dina Nath Gautam v. Muhammad Abdulla (5), that the words "or of some other Court to which such Court is subordinate" as used in section 195, Criminal Procedure Code, and read with sub-section (7) of that section, do not cover and include the High Court where the case has been tried in any Court other than that of a District and Sessions Judge or Additional District and Sessions Judge. It is contended and the ruling of Banerji, J., in Bhadesar Tewari v. Kamta Prasad (2), supports this view, that the proceedings continue and are the same proceedings from the time of the institution in the First Court until the decision of the final appeal, and that it can be said that an offence committed while a case is being dealt with by the Trial Court on the original side is committed at an earlier stage of the proceedings which are still alive at the time of the hearing of the appeal, and, therefore, the Court which actually hears the appeal, and in this case the High Court, can grant sanction under section 195, Criminal Procedure Code. It is also pointed out that, so far as section 195 (b) is concerned an offence committed during an enquiry held by a Munsif, may form the subject-matter of the sanction by a High Court, provided the enquiry is related to or ancillary to the proceedings which are pending in that High Court [Gudala Suriah v. Jamal Bee Bee (3)] and this it is urged provides a valuable analogy. However this may be, in section 195 (c) the words "or in relation to" do not appear and in the case which is before us there is no question of anything which happened during an enquiry but of an offence alleged to have been committed in the course of the trial of a civil suit and in the Court of the Sub-Judge. Sub-section (c) lays down that when the offence has been committed in any Court, "such Court" or the Court to which it is immediately subordinate can give the sanction. Even if it be conceded that there is one proceeding from first to last in the trial of a civil case and that this includes all the stages of that trial and the hearing of the appeal, the question still remains whether the words "such Court" in sub-section (c) read together with the preceding words "in any Court in respect of, etc." can cover and include any but the actual Court, before which the offence is alleged to have been committed, it being remembered that the offence is complete once the document is produced or given in evidence. It is not quite clear whether the ruling reported as Miran Bakhsh v. Beli Ram (1) dealt with a case which had arisen after the alteration of 1914 had been made in the designation of the Civil Courts in this Province. The point was certainly not raised in that case whether the words "such Court" could include the Appellate Court and it is not clear whether the District Judge whose action was called in question was acting under the first or second clause of section 195 (c). We are of opinion, that the only interpretation which can be placed upon section 195 (c) is that either the Court of first instance or the Court to which it is immediately subordinate in the sense given in paragraph 7 of that section, that is the Court to which appeals ordinarily lie, can give sanction, and that, in virtue merely of having heard the appeal, the High Court is not empowered to do so.

We, therefore, direct the application to be returned to the petitioner to be presented by him to any Court having jurisdiction to dispose of it.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 61—Partnership—Debt paid by one partner—Contribution, suit for—Limitation.

A suit for contribution by a partner of a firm who has paid the whole or more than his share of the amount of a debt due from all the partners is governed by Art. 61 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act.

Sri Raman Lalji Maharaj v. Gopal Lalji Maharaj, 19 A. 244; A. W. N. (1897) 43; 9 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 160, relied upon.

Second appeal from an order of the District Judge, Amritsar, dated the 4th April 1917, reversing that of the Sub-Judge Second Class, Amritsar, dated the 15th May 1916.

Pandit Sheo Narain, R. B., for the Appellants.

Dr. G. C. Narang, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is a second appeal arising out of the following facts. Khairati Mal, defendant No. 1, and Kidar Nath, defendant No. 6, started a firm on the 4th April 1906, under the style of "Khairati Mal-Kidar Nath" in which they had equal shares. This firm was dissolved on the 2nd April 1909 when a deed of release was executed. Kidar Nath then started another firm under the name of Kidar Nath-Durga Dass. This second firm continued up to the 17th of December 1909, when by an agreement between the creditors of the firm and the owners thereof one Raja Ram was appointed a trustee to administer its assets. On the 14th September 1914 Raja Ram sold the outstanding debts of the firm Kidar Nath-Durga Dass to the plaintiffs for Rs. 550, under the deed of release relating to the firm "Khairati Mal-Kidar Nath" the assets of the dissolved firm were handed over to Kidar Nath and he was made liable to pay all the debts with the exception of Rs. 3,000 which was made payable by Khairati Mal. It was provided that Khair-ati Mal was to pay to the creditors of the firm Rs. 3,000 or to Kidar Nath. Liberty was also given to him to either pay to the creditors in cash or adjust the debt by executing in their favour singly or jointly with Kidar Nath a document in favour of the creditors. Khairati Mal neither paid the sum to the creditors nor to Kidar Nath, nor did he compound the debt with the creditors by executing any document. Kidar Nath, therefore, had to meet the claims of the creditors of the firm singly and had to pay off the debts. He paid off the debts in the year 1909. The first payment was made by him on the 11th April 1909, and the last item was paid on the 24th July 1909. At page 5 of the record is to be found a list of these payments which was filed by the plaintiffs in this case as directed by Court. Under ordinary conditions Kidar Nath would be entitled to claim contribution from Khairati Mal in respect of all the debts paid by him, but it appears by arrangement arrived at in the deed of dissolution or release dated the 2nd of April 1909, the liability of Khairati Mal was limited to the payment of Rs. 3,000 only. It further appears that Khairati Mal was indebted to the firm to the extent of Rs. 3,000 and apparently he was made liable to pay the debts of the creditors to the extent of Rs. 3,000 for this very reason. One of the conditions entered in the deed of dissolution was that if Khairati Mal paid Rs. 3,000 within eleven months he would be entitled to realize interest for the period from the 2nd April 1909 at the rate of ten annas per cent. per mensem from Kidar Nath, but if Khairati Mal did not pay this sum within eleven months he would have to pay subsequent interest at the same rate, i.e., ten annas per cent. per mensem. As stated above, Khairati Mal failed to pay this sum to the creditors and Kidar Nath had to clear off all the debts. Thus, Khairati Mal failed to contribute towards the payment of the debts of the firm even to the limited extent provided in the deed. Kidar Nath, therefore, became entitled to recover this amount from him. It is an admitted fact that this sum was entered in the account-books of the firm of Kidar Nath-Durga Dass as being due to Kidar Nath from Khairati Mal. While administering the affairs of this latter firm the trustee along with other outstanding debts due to Kidar Nath and Durga Dass transferred this item of Rs. 3,000 also to the plaintiffs. The present suit was instituted by the plaintiffs on the 1st April 1915. After giving a summary of the facts as above stated, the plaintiffs claimed Rs. 4,143-12 from the defendants on account of principal and interest and put their cause of action in the plaint thus: "Kidar Nath's business failed, and Raja Ram was appointed a trustee to settle his debts, etc., Raja Ram sold the outstanding debts, including the claim in suit, to the plaintiffs who are entitled to realize Rs. 3,000 principal and Rs. 1,143 interest, viz., Rs. 4,143-12 in all, from defendants Nos. 1 to 5 who are members of a joint Hindu family, of which Khairati Mal was the manager."

The suit was resisted by defendants Nos. 1 to 5 upon various grounds which are summarised in the judgment of the Trial Court. It was pleaded (i) that the suit was barred by time; (ii) that Khairati Mal was not liable to pay Rs. 3,000 to Kidar Nath but to the creditors of the firm and that Khairati Mal had never authorised Kidar Nath to pay to the creditors on his behalf; (iii) that the plaintiffs, being the purchasers of the outstanding debts of the firm of Kidar Nath-Durga Dass only, had no locus standi to make the present claim which relates to the dealings of the firm "Khairati Mal-Kidar Nath"; (iv) that Khairati Mal had discharged his liability, if any, by paying off debts for more than Rs. 3,000.

On the question of locus standi of the plaintiffs to maintain the suit the Trial Court found in favour of the plaintiffs. The question of limitation was left undetermined. On the merits, however, the Court found against the plaintiffs and dismissed their suit.

An appeal was preferred to the lower Appellate Court with the result that their claim was partially allowed and a decree for Rs. 2,504-2-9 with proportionate costs was passed in their favour against the defendants Nos. 1 to 5.

These defendants have accordingly preferred this second appeal. The principal question to be decided in this appeal is as to the nature of the claim. Upon this will depend the decision of the question of limitation and as well as that of the locus standi of the plaintiffs to maintain the suit. The lower Appellate Court has treated the suit as one for money payable for money lent and has applied Art. 57 of the Limitation Act, and has expressed an opinion that the debt became due by Khairati Mal to Kidar Nath when the partnership between them was dissolved. The suit being within six years from that date the Court held that it was within time having regard to the provisions of the Punjab Limitation Act. We are not inclined to agree with the learned Judge of the Court below as to the applicability of Art. 57. This was not a claim for money payable for money lent. The money was borrowed by Khairati Mal from the firm of Khairati Mal-Kidar Nath. The suit has not been brought by the plaintiffs as the assignees of the debt due from Khairati Mal. Khairati Mal has been sued as a partner of the dissolved firm for contribution on the ground that his partner Kidar Nath had paid off all the debts. It is merely a coincidence that he is not liable to contribute to the whole extent of the debts discharged by Kidar Nath, and this is due to the circumstance that by mutual agreement his liability to pay the debts had been limited to Rs. 3,000 only, but nonetheless the claim of Kidar Nath to recover the sum from Khairati Mal was based on his right to demand contribution. The plaintiff's suit, therefore, as the assignees of the claim of Kidar Nath must be treated as a suit for contribution. Various Articles of the Limitation Act have been suggested at the argument as being applicable to the suit. Pandit Sheo Narain has contended that either this is a suit upon a contract to indemnify and is governed by Art. 83 or it is one for compensation for the breach of a contract not in writing registered and comes under Art. 115. He has also suggested Art. 99 which is applicable to a suit for contribution. The two first mentioned Articles cannot apply, because the suit is neither based upon a contract to indemnify, nor is it a suit for compensation for the breach of a contract. The last mentioned Article cannot apply, because it is not a suit by a party who has paid the whole or more than his share of the amount due under a joint decree, or by a sharer in a joint estate who has paid the whole or more than his share of the amount of revenue due from himself and his co-sharers. No Article has been pointed out which may be specifically applicable to a suit for contribution by a partner of a firm who has paid the whole or more than his share of the amount due from all the partners. In our opinion Art. 61 would apply to a suit for contribution between co-debtors and must be applied to this case. See Sri Raman Lalji Maharaj v. Gopal Lalji Maharaj (1). This Article is among those in respect of which the period of limitation has been extended to six years under the Punjab Limitation Act. All the payments made by Kidar Nath being within six years, the suit is clearly within time.

The argument relating to the question of the plaintiff's locus standi to maintain the suit put forward on behalf of the appellants is that the plaintiffs, having purchased the outstanding debts of the firm "Kidar Nath-Durga Dass," are not entitled to claim the amount of Rs. 3,000 together with interest, because the claim related to the dissolved firm "Khairati Mal-Kidar Nath," but we have already indicated above that this sum had been brought into the account books of the firm "Kidar Nath-Durga Dass", and had been entered as being due from Khairati Mal to Kidar Nath. The plaintiffs being the assignees of the outstanding debts due to Kidar Nath were entitled to claim the amount. It was further contended in the alternative that the plaintiffs' claim cannot succeed, because Khairati Mal had discharged his liability by paying off certain debts, the aggregate amount of which is more than the amount claimed. In support of this argument it has been pointed out that the firm "Daulat Ram-Kishore Chand" had a claim of Rs. 4,541-1-6 against the firm of "Khairati Mal-Kidar Nath" in the settlement of which Khairati Mal had taken part and that he was, therefore, entitled to receive credit for half of that amount. It has, however, been found that the claim of Daulat Ram and Kishore Chand was settled by a compromise under which Khairati Mal and Kidar Nath had to pay Rs. 1,000 each. Thus, it is clear that the only amount contributed by Khairati Mal in respect of this debt was Rs. 1,000 and he has been allowed credit for this sum. Khairati Mal claimed credit for another sum of Rs. 1,300 which he claimed to have paid for the redemption of certain pawned ornaments belonging both to Kidar Nath and to himself. On this account he has been held to be entitled to be credited with Rs. 608-6-0 and in this finding both the Courts below have concurred. There is no force in the appeal, and it must be dismissed.

The plaintiffs-respondents have filed certain cross-objections, objecting to the deductions allowed in favour of the defendants. In the first place, it has been contended on their behalf that the claim of Daulat Ram and Kishore Chand was not on account of any debt due from the firm of "Khairati Mal-Kidar Nath," and that, therefore, the sum of Rs. 1,000 paid by Khairati Mal on account of this independent debt ought not to have been deducted from the amount claimed. It has, however, been found as a fact by the lower Appellate Court that the claim was brought by Daulat Ram and Kishore Chand for a debt due by the firm and this finding cannot be questioned in second appeal.

The second contention put forward on behalf of the respondents was that the debt of Rs. 1,300 had been liquidated by the sale of the ornaments and that Khairati Mal had not paid anything out of his own pocket for the redemption thereof, and that, therefore, he was not entitled to be credited with the sum of Rs. 608-6. It was, however, admitted by the plaintiffs in the Court below that Khairati Mal was entitled to be credited with Rs. 589-14 on this account and the only dispute was as to interest to which Khairati Mal was clearly entitled, as Kidar Nath had failed to redeem the ornaments which, under the terms of the deed of dissolution, he had undertaken to do. The cross-objections also, therefore, have no force.

The result is that both the appeal and the cross-objections fail and are dismissed with costs.

Where a person is required under a decree to make a payment in favour of another, a payment into Court is a valid compliance with the decree.

Wana Raji v. Natu Murha, 7 Ind. Cas. 992; 35 B. 35; 12 Bom. L. R. 818, followed.

The law does not compel a man to do that which he cannot possibly perform and the closing of a Court cannot prejudice a man in doing an act required to be done in Court.

A decree for joint possession was passed subject to the payment of a fixed sum by one decree-holder to the other by a certain date. The period expired while the Court was closed and the money was deposited into Court on the day it re-opened. The question was whether the payment was good:

Held, (1) that the payment under the decree could validly be made into Court;

(2) that the Court being closed on the last day of payment, the payment was in time, on the general principle that the law does not compel a man to do that which he cannot possibly perform;

(3) that the fact that the payment could be made out of Court would not affect the case;

Appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Saugore, in Civil Appeal No. 83 of 1921, decided on the 20th September 1921.

Mr. G. L. Subhedar, for the Appellant.

Dr. H. S. Gour, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The following are the facts of the case: The parties are co-sharers. The appellant-plaintiff sued the respondents-defendants for joint possession of a plot of land acquired by the defendants. On the 29th November 1920 a decree of joint possession was passed in the plaintiff's favour subject to his paying one hundred rupees as contribution within six months from the date of the decree. The period of six months expired in the vacation when the Courts were closed, and the appellant deposited his money in Court on the day that the Court re-opened. Both the lower Courts have held that the appellant deposited the money too late and that the decree could not be executed. The learned District Judge observed that section 4 of the Limitation Act does not apply when the time for payment is fixed by a decree and not by the Limitation Act. He also says that the appellant must have known that the six months would expire when the Courts would be closed and that it was open to him to have sent the money to the respondents by money order before that date.

It is agreed on behalf of both parties in this Court that the Limitation Act does not apply, but for the appellant it is argued that section 10 of the General Clauses Act, 1897, does apply and that the section does not mean that the time must be prescribed by an Act, but includes time prescribed by an order passed under an Act, that is by a decree. It is also argued that under r. 1 of O. XXI of the First Schedule of the Civil Procedure Code money payable under a decree may be paid into the Court, even though the decree directs that the money should be paid to the decree-holder, so that the appellant had the option of paying the money in Court.

In Wana Raji v. Natu Murha (1) the facts were precisely analogous to those of the present case. The learned Judges held that even where the decree directs payment to the decree-holder, payment into Court is a valid compliance with the decree unless perhaps the Court directed that payment should be to the decree-holder and not otherwise. They also considered that section 10 of the General Clauses Act, 1897, came into play and that, therefore, the payment into Court on the day it re-opened was as good a payment as if the payment had been made on the last day allowed by the decree if the Court had been open on that day. With the first part of this decision I am in entire agreement, but I venture to doubt the correctness of the view that section 10 of the General Clauses Act applies, and the correct view appears to be, as accepted in Hirdey Narain

(1) 7 Ind. Cas. 992; 35 B. 35; 12 Bom. L. R. 818.

UDHE RAM V. NARAIN SINGH.

v. Alam Singh (2), that section 10 of that Act only applies to the cases in which a period of limitation has been prescribed as mentioned in the section, and not to a condition prescribed in the decree.

In Balkrishna v. Tima (3) Drake-Brockman, J. C., held that the period of two years allowed by section 31 (1) of the Indian Limitation Act, 1908, for the institution of certain suits was not affected by section 10 of the General Clauses Act. He, nevertheless, held that the law does not compel a man to do that which he cannot possibly perform and that the closing of the Court cannot prejudice a man in doing an act required to be done in Court. He also held that the fact that these principles are embodied in section 4 of the Limitation Act and section 10 of the General Clauses Act did not prevent their application to the case before him. For the respondents it is pointed out that a different view was taken in Sheodas Daulatram v. Narayan Asaji (4), but I prefer to follow the ruling of Drake-Brockman, J. C.

For the respondents, it is further argued that while a suit can be filed only in a Court, the appellant had the option of payment to the respondents, so that the ruling of Drake-Brockman, J. C., is inapplicable. But, as I have already said, I agree that a payment into Court is a valid compliance with the decree, and I am of opinion that the Court could not by being closed shorten the time allowed by the decree.

For these reasons I hold that the hundred rupees were paid in time, I set aside the order of the lower Courts, and direct the Executing Court to proceed with the execution proceedings. Costs will be costs in the proceedings.

*versus*NARAIN SINGH—DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT.Jurisdiction—Redemption suit—Valuation—

Forum of appeal—Punjab Courts Act (VI of 1918), s. 39 (1) (a).

The question of jurisdiction to hear an appeal in a redemption suit has to be determined with reference to the claim made and not to the decision on the claim.

Muhammad Khan v. Ashak Muhammad Khan, 106 P. R. 1895 (F. B.) and Chuni Lal v. Beli Ram, 20 Ind. Cas. 473; 229 P. L. R. 1913; 196 P. W. R. 1913, followed.

Kishan Chand v. Taj-ud-din, 1 Ind. Cas. 870; 23 P. R. 1909; 37 P. W. R. 1909 and Dyal Singh v. Ram Rakha, 14 Ind. Cas. 78; 54 P. R. 1912; 122 P. W. R. 1912, distinguished.

Plaintiff sued to redeem a bungalow on payment of Rs. 3,550. The defendant claimed Rs. 20,894. The suit was decreed on payment of Rs. 13,419. Plaintiff appealed to the High Court:

Held, that under section 39 (1) (a) of the Punjab Courts Act the appeal lay to the District Judge.

First appeal from the decree of the Subordinate Judge, 1st Class, Multan, dated the 28th November 1921.

Mr. Mukand Lal Puri, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the plaintiff sued for redemption on payment of Rs. 3,550, the defendant pleaded that the amount due to him was Rs. 20,894-15-6, and the finding of the Subordinate Judge is that the amount due is Rs. 13,419-3-0. The plaintiff has filed his appeal in this Court, whilst the defendant filed his in the District Court. The District Judge has referred the question of jurisdiction to this Court. In Muhammad Khan v. Ashak Muhammad Khan (1) it was held by a Full Bench that the question of jurisdiction had to be determined with reference to the claim made and not to the decision on the claim, and that ruling was followed in Chuni Lal v. Beli Ram (2). Mr. Mukand Lal Puri, who appears for the plaintiff relies on Kishan Chand v. Taj-ud-din (3) and Dyal Singh v. Ram Rakha (4), but the points which arose for determination in those cases were different. Following the Full Bench ruling of 1895 we hold that the appeals lie to the District Judge. Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, rr. 69, 89, O. XXXIV, rr. 7, 8 (4)—Decree, preliminary, for redemption—Mortgage-money not paid within time allowed—Decree absolute for sale—Deposit of money before sale, effect of.

A mortgagor who fails to deposit the mortgage-money within the time allowed by the decree for redemption in his favour is entitled to pay off the money and redeem the property even after the mortgagee has obtained a decree absolute for sale under O. XXXIV, r. 8, cl. (4) of the Civil Procedure Code and the sale has been ordered in pursuance thereof. Nor can this right of the mortgagor be deferred till the mortgagee chooses to take action and bring the property to sale.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of the second appeal are as follows: A usufructuary mortgage was effected by Asil Din and Musammat Chandar Dei to Haji Badullah on 28th June, 1894. The mortgagors obtained a preliminary decree for redemption under O. XXXIV, r. 7 on 21st of August 1917, and the date fixed for payment was 21st February 1918. No payment was made, so, on the application of the mortgagee, a decree absolute for sale under O. XXXIV, r. 8 (4) was passed by the Court on 26th October 1918. No action to get the property sold was continued by the mortgagee.

On 6th August, Nageshwari Prasad, re-presenting the interest of the original mortgagors, deposited in Court the entire amount due for which sale was ordered under the decree absolute. The mortgagee thereupon objected that, after the passing of the decree for sale, the mortgagors had no right to deposit the money and redeem the property. Both the lower Courts disallowed the objection, so the mortgagee, Hayat Muhammad, has come here in second appeal.

The objection of the mortgagee does not appear to be tenable. It was held by a Full Bench of the Madras High Court in Vallabha Valiya Rajah v. Vedapuratti (1) that a mortgagor, who had made default in payment of the mortgage-money within the time limited by the decree in a suit for redemption, was not entitled to apply for execution of the decree after the time limited. This ruling had reference to the provisions of sections 92 and 93 of the Transfer of Property Act which are now replaced by rr. 7 and 8 of O. XXXIV of the Code of Civil Procedure. In section 93 there was a provision that, on the passing of an order under that section, that is, an order for sale on non-deposit of the money by the mortgagor, the plaintiff's right to redeem and the security shall, as regards the property affected by the order, both be extinguished. There is no corresponding provision of that nature in r. 8 of O. XXXIV. When the provisions relating to procedure in the Transfer of Property Act are included in the general Code of Civil Procedure, the intention appears to be, that the provisions of O. XXI will govern execution proceedings in sale, subsequent to the passing of the final decree for sale. The decree for execution at present before the Court is, that the property be sold for a certain sum to satisfy the claim of the mortgagee. That is a decree in favour of the mortgagee and the mortgagor is entitled to satisfy it within the period of limitation. It is difficult to understand how the mortgagor can be prevented from satisfying the decree passed against him, In Jai Kishori v. Mohammad Ali Moham- mad Khan (2), a learned Judge of this Court observed: "It is now generally agreed that the provisions of O. XXI would also apply to sales ordered under O. XXXIV of the Code" (page 629* of the report). It was conceded by the appellant's learned Counsel here, that if the property in suit were actually put up to auction, the respondent could pay the money and save the sale under r. 69, and that even after sale, he could get the sale set aside on deposit of the purchase-money under r. 89 of O. XXI. His contention was that, until the mortgagee chose to take action and bring the property to sale, the mortgagor judgment-debtor of the decree absolute had no right to move in the matter. If this were true, the procedure would be devoid of any reason. Rules of procedure are to be liberally construed in order to do justice between judgment-creditor and judgment-debtor. The intention of r. 8 is that an end should be put to the mortgage once a suit for redemption is brought, and such an intention would be defeated if the mortgagee after obtaining the decree absolute for sale is permitted not to proceed with the sale, and to prevent the mortgagor from satisfying the decree. I think, that in this case what the mortgagor proposes to do is to pay off the decree passed against him, and, in my opinion, he is entitled to do so.

For these reasons, I dismiss this appeal with costs.

Transfer of Property Act (I V of 1882), s. 72 (b)
—Mortgage with possession—Rent of mortgaged land to be paid by mortgagee—Covenant to pay rent along with principal—Redemption, suit for—Mortgagee, right of.

Apart from any express contract, it is incumbent on a mortgagee in possession to pay arrears of rent in respect of the mortgaged property, in default of payment of which the property is liable to be sold. When he has made such payment he has a statutory right, in the absence of any contract to the contrary, to add it to the principal.

In a mortgage-deed the property was stated to be hypothecated for the principal sum but the mortgagee was authorised to pay arrears of rent and the mortgagor covenanted to pay any such amount paid by the mortgagee along with the principal at the time of redemption. It was urged that the stipulation as to the repayment of rent was a separate contract independent of the mortgage security and that if it was an integral part of the agreement, it was a clog on redemption:

Held, (1) that it was the statutory right of the mortgagee to add the amount of the arrears of rent paid by him to the principal, and the mortgagor was bound to pay the same at the time of redemption;

(2) that there was nothing in the contract to take the case out of the Statute; it merely acknowledged the statutory right and gave effect to it.

Appeal from a decision of the Subordinate Judge, Muzaffarpur, dated the 9th June 1920, affirming a decision of the Munsif of Hajipur, dated the 31st July, 1919.

Mr. S. N. Bose, for the Appellant.

Mr. Janak Kishore, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—On the 14th of November 1896, 17 kathas and 8 dhurs of land were mortgaged by defendant third party to defendants second party in the name of defendants first party in consideration of an advance of Rs. 61. On the 26th of May 1916 the defendants third party sold the premises to the plaintiff who brought this suit for redemption. The defence was that, besides the principal sum advanced, the plaintiff was liable to pay rent from 1304 to 1325 with interest thereon which had been paid by defendants second party while in possession of the mortgaged property. The only question in this appeal is as to the liability of the plaintiff to pay the rent when redeeming the property. Both the Courts below have held that he is liable and he appeals against that decision. The question is one of the construction and effect of that portion of the Sudbharna deed which relates to the payment of rent. That passage has been translated as follows: "The payment of Zemindari rent shall rest with the Bharnadar. I, the executant, neither have nor shall have any concern therewith. The Bharnadar shall himself obtain receipt on my behalf. At the time of payment of the said principal amount, I shall pay the rent with interest at Rs. 2 per cent. per mensem." Mr. S. N. Bose in an interesting argument contended that the land was hypothecated for the principal sum only. The words in the deed are "As security for the said amount of debt I hypothecate the mortgaged property." It is argued that the stipulation as to the repayment of the rent is a separate contract independent of the mortgage security; that it contains only a personal covenant by the mortgagor which will not run with the land so as to affect it in the hands of a purchaser from the mortgagor; and that if it is an integral part of the agreement it is a clog on the equity of redemption and, therefore, the Court will not give effect to it. Now, even apart from the express contract, it would have been incumbent on the mortgagee in possession to pay arrears of rent in default of payment of which the property might have been sold. When he makes such payment he has a statutory right, in the absence of any contract to the contrary, to add it to the principal. The question, therefore, is whether the contract expressed in the deed is a contract which takes away this statutory right. It does not do so in express words. Does it do so by necessary implication? On reading the deed I cannot so hold. On the contrary, it seems clear from the undertaking to repay the rent with interest at the time of paying the principal, that the statutory right was acknowledged and given effect to. It is true that the property was hypothecated for the principal sum, but the Statute increases that principal sum by the amount of rent paid to save the property, unless it is contracted out of, and I can find nothing in the words here used to take the case out of the Statute. The words may not add anything to the rights of the mortgagee but they certainly take nothing away from them. The appeal, therefore, fails and must be dismissed with costs.

Mr. D. C. Ralli, for the Appellant.

Lala Jagan Nath for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The following facts will disclose the nature of the question which is to be decided in this appeal:—

BALLA MALL V. JAGAN NATH.

In 1908 one Balla Mall sued Nasir-ud-Din for the recovery of Rs. 1,22,000 odd. A decree was granted in his favour on the 31st July 1911. There were subsequent proceedings in appeal which need not be mentioned. Jagan Nath and Nasir-ud-Din in consequence of a claim, real or unreal made a reference to arbitration on the 2nd July 1913. An award was given on the 6th July 1913 and in terms of the award a decree was passed by a Ferozepore Court in favour of Jagan Nath on the 11th July 1913 for the sum of Rs. 56,208 with future interest at six per cent. The decree in favour of Balla Mall had been passed by a Court at Amritsar. Balla Mall applied for the execution of his decree at Amritsar and attached certain properties belonging to the judgment-debtor and situate in the District of Amritsar. Jagan Nath applied for execution of his decree to the Court at Ferozepore and asked for a certificate transferring the decree to be executed at Amritsar. When the decree had been transferred for execution at Amritsar Jagan Nath applied under section 73, Civil Procedure Code, for a rateable distribution of the assets. Balla Mall objected to the application of Jagan Nath, alleging that he was not entitled to a pro rata share in the assets, as the decree on the award had been obtained fraudulently and without consideration in order to deprive him of the assets obtained in execution of his decree. Those objections were disallowed.

Thereupon the present suit was instituted by Balla Mall for the following relief:—

“That a decree with costs may be passed in his favour against defendants to the effect that the decree in favour of defendant No. 1 against Nasir-ud-Din dated the 11th July 1913 for Rs. 56,208 passed by the Court of the District Judge, Ferozepore, according to the award is fictitious without consideration and collusive and it has no value against plaintiff's decree and is not liable for execution, neither any property of Nasir-ud-Din is liable to be attached and sold in that decree nor any application for pro rata share by defendant No. 1 could lie against plaintiff.”

One of the pleas raised in defence was that the suit being for the cancellation of a decree passed by the Ferozepore

Court was not cognizable by the Court at Amritsar. This plea found favour with the learned Judge of the Court below and the plaint was returned for presentation to the Court competent to try it.

Balla Mall has come up in appeal to this Court and it has been contended on his behalf by Mr. Ralli that, inasmuch as a material portion of the cause of action had taken place at Amritsar, the plaintiff was entitled to institute his suit either at Amritsar or at Ferozepur. In support of his contention the learned Counsel has relied on the following cases which fully support his argument:—

Banke Behari Lal v. Pokhe Ram (1), Jawahir v. Neki Ram (2), Khushali Ram v. Gokul Chand (3) and Ram Lal-Ishar Das v. Salig Ram (4).

The learned Judge of the Court below has held that inasmuch as the decree sought to be set aside was obtained in Ferozepur that was the cause of action for this case. In my opinion this view is incorrect. Balla Mall was not a party to the suit of Jagan Nath and the decree in no way affected him. He, therefore, had no cause of action to sue for the setting aside of that decree on any ground. It was only when the decree was transferred for execution to Amritsar and an application was made for a pro rata share in the assets, that a cause of action arose entitling the plaintiff to prefer the claim. On the facts it is clear that the main cause of action did take place at Amritsar. Mr. Jagan Nath, the learned Vakil for the respondent, has relied on Umrao Singh v. Hardeo (5) and Dau Dial v. Munna Lal (6) and has contended that the passing of the fraudulent decree must be taken to be the cause of action for the suit; but in both these cases the decree had been passed against the plaintiffs in the suits, and, therefore, their only cause of action was the passing of the decree. Those cases are, therefore, clearly distinguishable from the present case.

I accordingly set aside the order of the lower Court and remand the case to that Application against an order of the Assistant Collector of the First Class, Sultanpur, dated the 4th April 1922.

Messrs. Haider Husain and Niamat Ullah, for the Applicants.

Mr. Ishri Prasad, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application in revision under section 115 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The application in the first instance came up for hearing before one of us sitting as a single Judge of this Court but in view of the importance of the question raised in the preliminary objection by the Pleader for the opposite party, the matter was referred to a Bench of two Judges. The application has come before us for decision.

The application arises out of a suit for the recovery of rent brought by the applicants against the defendant, opposite party, in the Court of an Assistant Collector of the First Class of Sultanpur. The defendant filed his written statement in due course and issues were settled on the 19th October, 1921. Afterwards the case was taken up on several dates for hearing in the presence of the parties but was always adjourned for one reason or another till the 4th March 1922 on which date it was disposed of. On the last-mentioned date the defendant failed to appear and in his absence some evidence was produced on behalf of the plaintiffs and finally the Court decreed the suit remarking in the judgment that it was to be an ex parte decree. The defendant thereafter applied to the same Court asking for the said decree to be set aside. The Court accepted the application and passed an order setting aside the decree. This application impugns the validity of that order. A preliminary objection is taken on behalf of the defendant, opposite party, that no revision lies to this Court under section 115 of the Code of Civil Procedure from the order passed by the Assistant Collector in this case. It is argued that the Court of an Assistant Collector exercising jurisdiction under the Oudh Rent Act, is not a "Court subordinate" to this Court within the meaning of section 115 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

It is admitted that the case out of which this application arises falls within the class of cases in which the course of appeal lies to the Court of the District Judge and to this Court under section 119 of the Oudh Rent Act. The chief function of a Court of Appeal is to redress the error of the Court from whose decision it has jurisdiction to entertain an appeal. Prima facie, therefore, the Court of the Assistant Collector, when exercising jurisdiction over the class of cases in which the course of appeal lies to this Court, is a Court subordinate to this Court. Whatever might have been our own opinion on the subject, if the matter were res integra, the precise question now raised was raised and considered so far back as the year 1893. In the case of Maheshur v. Bhikh Chand (1), Dr. Howell, with reference to an earlier decision of two

(1) 68 R. A. R. 1893.

MAGAN MAL v. DARBARILAL CHOWDHARY

Judges of this Court in the case of Babu Udres Singh v. Ram Bharos (2), decided as follows:—"I am of opinion that the revisional jurisdiction of this Court under section 622, Civil Procedure Code, read with section 135 of the Rent Act, is restricted to those cases in which the course of appeal lies to this Court under sections 119 and 119-B of the latter Act, and does not extend to cases in which the course of appeal lies to the Board." The matter was again considered in the case of Indar Parshad v. Babu Fateh Chand (3) by a Bench of two Judges of this Court and the view expressed in Maheshur v. Bhikkh Chand (1) was affirmed. These decisions have consistently been acted upon in this Court as we have ascertained from the office and other instances were also quoted before us. A matter which eventually went in appeal to His Majesty's Privy Council from a decision of this Court was heard by this Court under an application in revision arising out of a suit for recovery of rent decided by an Assistant Collector of the First Class and will be found reported as Debi Bakhsh Singh v. Habib Shah (4). The decision of this Court is reported as Debi Bakhsh Singh v. Habib Shah (5). On these grounds we are not disposed to give effect to the preliminary objection and accordingly reject it.

On the merits of the case, it is argued on behalf of the applicants that the Assistant Collector had no jurisdiction to set aside the ex parte decree because that decree, in the circumstances of the case, could not be deemed to have been passed under the provisions of O. IX, r. 6, of the Code of Civil Procedure. It is true that the proper procedure for the Assistant Collector to have adopted in deciding the suit was one which is provided by r. 3 of O. XVII of the Code, but as the order which he has passed in the case is manifestly a just and sensible order we are not disposed to interfere with it in the exercise of our revisional jurisdiction.

The application is, therefore, dismissed with costs.

MAGANMAL V. DARBARILAL CHOWDHARY.

of the Subordinate Judge. Damoh. The plaintiffs now apply for a certificate granting them leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council.

The suit was based on a mortgage-deed for Rs. 7,000 and the amount claimed was Rs. 9,776 together with interest to the date of the decree and further interest to the date of payment. The plaint was presented on the 11th December 1916, and was returned to be signed by the plaintiffs personally. It was again presented to the Subordinate Judge on the 2nd February 1917. The first hearing was on the 16th January 1917, and the suit was decided on the 17th November 1919, when a preliminary decree for sale was granted. The decree was for Rs. 9,776 and Rs. 3,451-6-3 compound interest at 9 per cent. per annum up to the 17th May 1920, the day fixed for payment, together with interest on the total amount at 6 per cent. per annum up to the date of actual payment. The appeal was filed on the 26th February 1920, and decided on the 21st December 1921.

For the applicants it is contended that as the value of the subject-matter of the decree passed by the Subordinate Judge and of the decree on appeal to His Majesty in Council is upwards of Rs. 10,000 the case as regards amount and nature fulfils the requirements of section 110, Civil Procedure Code. For the non-applicant it is objected that the amount claimed in the suit in the Court of first instance being Rs. 9,776, the case does not fulfil the requirements of the section. The learned Advocate for the applicants points out that in the tenth paragraph of the plaint not only it is stated that the amount due on the date of the suit is Rs. 9,776, but interest up to the date of the decree and further interest to the date of payment is also claimed. The amount by which the amount said to be due on the date of the suit falls short of Rs. 10,000 is Rs. 224, and this amount represents the interest for about three and a half months. It is represented that there was no possibility of a decree being granted within three and a half months, so that the amount for which a decree was asked amounted to Rs. 10,000.

In Dalgleish v. Damodar Narain Chowdhury (1) the plaintiffs were allowed to take into account in this connection mesne profits to be ascertained in execution proceedings. In Surendra Nath Roy v. Dwarka Nath (2) it was held that the point of time to be considered, as to the value of the property, under the second paragraph of section 110 is the date of the judgment under appeal to the Privy Council. In Mahabir Prasad Singh v. Anup Narain Singh (3) the Patna High Court followed the practice of the Calcutta High Court in including mesne profits up to the date of the Appellate Court's decree.

On the other hand, in Subramania Aiyar v. Sellammal (4) mesne profits up to the date of the High Court's decree were not taken into consideration. That case differs from the present in that in the present case on the date of the lower Court's decree the amount decreed had amounted to more than Rs. 10,000. The question before us cannot, we think, be said to have been decided by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Moti Chand v. Ganga Prasad Singh (5) for their Lordships say: "The amount or value of the subject-matter of the suit in the Court of first instance, construing that in the manner most favourable to the proposed appellant, was at the outside the amount for which he recovered his decree which was below Rs. 10,000." The facts in Kesho Prasad Singh v. Shiva Saran Lal (6) are hardly such as to afford any guide in the present case.

On the whole, we are of opinion that the case does satisfy the requirements of section 110 as to amount and nature, since on the date of the decree the amount to be paid on the date fixed already included together with interest an amount exceeding Rs. 10,000 and a decree including interest up to the date of the decree had been asked for in the plaint.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XIII, rr. 11, 2—Admission of documents at late stage—Discretion of Court—Refusal to admit documents—Appeal, second, competency of.

It is matter for the discretion of the Trial Court to admit a document produced at a late stage, but in such matters of procedure the Court should lean to an interpretation which advances justice rather than to a contrary interpretation.

Ranchhod Hirabhai v. Secretary of State for India, 22 B. 173; 11 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 637, referred to.

Where the documents sought to be put in evidence; have an important bearing on the question at issue in the trial and there is no ground for supposing that they have been fabricated the Court should not reject them.

The refusal to admit a document produced at a late stage of the case is a ground for second appeal.

Talewar Singh v. Bhagwan Das, 12 C. W. N. 312; 8 C. L. J. 147, referred to.

Appeal from a decision of the District Judge, Darbhanga, dated the 18th November 1920, confirming a decision of the Munsif, Samastipur, dated the 31st May 1920.

Mr. Jank Kishor, for the Appellants.

Mr. Sd. Md. Tahir, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The only point argued in this appeal is that the Munsif was wrong in refusing to admit in evidence a letter written by Mr. Mackenzie and certain jama- bandis which were tendered late. The District Judge agreed with the Munsif and held that these documents were rightly rejected.

That this is a ground in second appeal has been held in Talewar Singh v. Bhagwan Das (1). It is true that it is a matter for the discretion of the Trial Court; but as was pointed in Ranchhod Hirabhai v. Secretary of State for India (2), in such matters of procedure the Court should lean to an interpretation which advances justice rather than to a contrary interpretation. Now in this case these documents had been exhibited in a case under O. XXI, r. 100 between the parties to the present litigation. There was, therefore, no ground for supposing that they had been fabricated and they evidently had an important bearing on the question at issue in the trial. The Court below, in my opinion, erred in the exercise of its discretion in rejecting these documents. I, therefore, decree this appeal, set aside the decrees of the Courts below and direct that the case be remanded for re-trial by the Munsif after taking in evidence the jama-bandis and the letter written by Mr. Mackenzie. Costs will abide the result.

Held, that though the Executing Court did not, on the prior occasion, expressly hold that the decree was executable, in spite of the absence of a final decree, yet as that objection should have been taken, and as the sale was ordered in execution of the decree as it stood, the effect of the order was to decide in favour of the executability of the decree and that the judgment-debtor was barred by the rule of res judicata from raising the objection that there was no final decree in respect of the items now sought to be sold, and the mere fact that the previous application was for the sale of other items did not make any difference. JUDGMENT.

Spencer, J.—This second appeal arises out of the orders passed in execution of the decree in a suit for redemption of a mortgage of a number of items of property in Malabar. The decree of the Original Court was passed on 24th February 1913, and there was a final decree of that Court on 22nd April 1913. Meanwhile, an appeal was brought against the preliminary decree, and that appeal was decided on 27th December 1913. The present application is one made by the mortgagor to sell items

11 to 120. There was a previous application to sell items 1 to 10, upon which an order for sale was passed on 23rd July 1915. The present application was made on 20th January 1919.

Two questions arise for our decision. The first is, whether the present application is barred by limitation, as more than 3 years have elapsed from the date of the Appellate Court's decree. The second question is, whether the application for sale is valid when no final decree has been passed, since the Appellate Court's decree varied the First Court's preliminary decree by enhancing the amount to be paid to the mortgagee.

On the first point I feel no difficulty in holding that the present is an application in execution, and it is made within three years of previous applications in execution of the same decree under Art. 182 clause 5 of the Limitation Act. It is, therefore, within time.

The second question is one of some difficulty. The order of the Executing Court on 23rd July 1915 was that the items 1 to 10 should be sold as prayed for. At first, the decree-holder asked for the sale of all the items 1 to 120. The petitioner's final prayer was to sell the items 1 to 10, and they were accordingly sold. No objection was then raised by the mortgagee-judgment-debtor that the application was not admissible in the absence of a final decree. On the authority of Govinda Tharagan v. Veeran (1) it was open to a mortgagor to apply for the sale of the mortgaged property and accordingly items 1 to 10 were sold.

It is argued for the respondents that at the time when that order was passed the executability of the decree was in question. The appellant's learned Vakil seeks to distinguish the present application from the previous one on the ground that that was only an application for selling items 1 to 10 and he contends that the order does not operate as res judicata in an application to sell different items. He also points out that the application then made purported to be made under O. XXXIV, r. 8, Civil Procedure Code (1908), as well as under the PALANCHERI GOVINDA V. POOKOTE KUNTI KRISHNA.

Execution Chapter, so that if an objection had then been taken that there was no final decree, the decree-holder might have asked the Court to treat that application as one for a final decree as he was then in time under Art. 181 for applying to the Court to pass a final decree.

In Epoor Ramasamy Reddy v. Kandadai Rangamannar Iyengar (2) a similar objection was raised that an order absolute had not been made before executing a mortgage-decree, and it was held that the objection could not prevail when an order for execution had already been made after notice, and that order had not been set aside. An attempt is made to distinguish that case on the ground that there the property was the same in both the applications for execution, whereas here the items are different. But here, as in that case, the decree was the same, and the objection to the executability of the decree is an objection, which, if raised, would be common to the present application and to the previous one. In Subba Chariar v. Muthuvceram Pillai (3), it was held that, where in the course of a second application for execution of a money-decree an objection was raised that the application was barred by limitation, not being within 3 years of the date of attachment, the judgment-debtor was estopped from contending that the attachment was not subsisting. The items appear to have been partly the same as in the previous petition, and partly fresh items, but the attachment was the same. In Mungul Pershad Ditchit v. Grija Kant Lahiri (4) the Privy Council held that if an order for execution had been made by a Court which had jurisdiction to decide whether the decree was barred by time or not, even though such an order might be erroneous, if it was not reversed, it would operate as res judicata in a subsequent application to execute the same decree. In Raja of Ramnad v. Velusami Tevar (5), a similar objection as to limitation arose. The appellant was the assignee of a decree, and on a previous application to execute the decree, a plea of limitation was raised. Their Lordships observed that it was not necessary to decide whether or not the plea would have succeeded if an appeal had been brought against the order for execution. As the defendants did not appeal from the order then made, it was not competent for the Executing Court in subsequent proceedings to allow the plea to be raised a second time. Applying the reasonings of those decisions, mutatis mutandis, to the present case we may say that, even though the Executing Court did not, on a previous occasion, pronounce in so many words that the decree was executable in spite of their being no final decree passed after the Appellate Court's decree, yet as that objection should have been taken then and as sale was ordered in execution of the decree as it stood, the effect of that order was to decide in favour of the executability of the decree and it is not open now to the appellant to raise the objection that there is no final decree in respect of the items now involved. No doubt, the items are different, but the question that should have been raised on the previous occasion and that is sought to be raised in the present case relates to the executability of the decree as a whole and that is a question common to all the items. I am, therefore, of opinion that the appellant is barred by res judicata from raising this objection in the present case and that the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Both parties agree that, before the final execution is made, a Commissioner should be appointed and there should be a valuation of the improvements effected since the last valuation was made.

I consider it unnecessary to express an opinion whether, as was held by two learned Judges in Nanu Nair v. Kundan Ashtamurthi (6), there should be only one decree in mortgage suits in Malabar.

Venkatasubba Rao, J.—I entirely agree and have nothing to add.

A testator devised certain property to the defendants for the purpose of defraying the expenses of the performance of his sradh ceremony. The defendants being minors, the sradh ceremony of the testator was performed by a volunteer :

Held, that, under the circumstances, the defendants took the property free from the burden and that it could not be said that there was an intestacy with regard to the devised property.

Appeal from a decision of the Subordinate Judge, Patna, dated the 6th October 1920, modifying a decision of the Munsif, First Court, Patna, dated the 28th February 1920.

Mr. Sundar Lall, for the Appellants.

Mr. Janak Kishor, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal raises a question of the construction of the Will of one Kandhai. The plaintiff and defendant No. 4 are the nearest agnates. The defendants Nos. 1 and 2 are the sons of a daughter of a brother of the testator. One of the provisions of the Will related to 1 bigha and 5 kathas of land and it is this property which is the subject-matter of the suit. The plaintiff claimed to be jointly entitled to this property along with defendant No. 4 on the ground that it had not been disposed of by Kandhai in his Will.

The Munsif held that the property had been disposed of in favour of defendants Nos. 1 and 2; but this decision was reversed by the Subordinate Judge. The Will recites that these defendants Nos. 1 and 2 lived with the testator as his own children. After other dispositions of property the testator goes on to say that he has kept the remaining 1 bigha 5 kathas raiyaal kashat for the purpose of performing the sradh ceremony of the executant. After the death of the executant, Moti Lall and Debi Lall, sons of Jaggu Mahto, who are the own maternal grandsons of Hossaini Mahto, the executant's brother, and who are the Chachera grandsons of the executant, will obtain possession over the same and sell it and perform the sradh ceremonies of the executant from the consideration money and the cremation ceremony and sradh of the executant may be performed by one of the two Chachera grandsons only. "And I give to Moti Lall and Debi Lall mentioned above after my death all the properties." In the schedule annexed to the Will there is a further reference to this piece of land as follows: "This land the executant has kept for performing his funeral ceremonies and Moti Lall and Debi Lall are hereby authorised to perform the funeral ceremonies after my death by one of the above-mentioned persons and sell the land as described below and spend the same in my sradh." The two legatees being minors the funeral ceremonies were actually performed by defendant No. 4. The contention of the plaintiff is that the result of this has been that there is an intestacy with regard to 1 bigha and 5 kathas. I am wholly unable to see why this result should follow. The testator willed that this 1 bigha 5 kathas should come to the possession of defendants Nos. 1 and 2 and he directed them to sell it and perform his sradh ceremonies with the proceeds; but, if the sradh ceremonies were validly performed by a volunteer, the plain result was that they took the property free from the burden. I see absolutely no reason why, because a volunteer stepped in and performed the sradh ceremonies, this property which was specifically devised should go off to the agnates as intestate.

The appeal is decreed with costs and the decree of the Subordinate Judge is set aside and the decree of the Munsif is restored.

Procedure—Commissioner's report, appeal against—Application for further directions—Trial Court, jurisdiction of.

While the hearing of exceptions to the report of a Commissioner are pending in an Appellate Court, the Trial Court is not competent to hear any application for further directions on the Commissioner's report, but if it does hear such an application and pass a decree, the plaintiff's remedy is to get rid of the decree by an appeal.

Mr. Bahadurji, for the Plaintiff.

Mr. Kamdar, for the Defendant.

JUDGMENT.—This case has been set down before us in a somewhat informal manner owing to an extraordinary series of errors of procedure which have been committed. Originally, there was a reference to the Commissioner and on that reference to the Commissioner, a report was made. The plaintiff filed exceptions to the Commissioner's report which were heard by Mr. Justice Kajiji. The plaintiff, dissatisfied with the decision of Mr. Justice Kajiji, filed an appeal, and to a certain extent succeeded in this Court, but while the appeal proceedings were pending, it seems that the case was set down before the Judge for directions and costs on the Commissioner's report. That could only properly be done after the exceptions had been dealt with and finally disposed of. While the hearing of the exceptions was pending in this Court, the lower Court was not competent to hear any application for further directions on the Commissioner's report which had not been finally settled. The Court having made an order on further directions a decree was drawn up. Then the decision was given by this Court on the exceptions, but it was incumbent on the plaintiff, as there was a final decree on the record, to appeal from that decree.

The plaintiff, instead of appealing against the decree, made an application to the Commissioner to amend his report in accordance with the decision of the Appeal Court, and the series of errors was completed by the Commissioner amending his report and the defendants filing exceptions to it. The whole of the proceedings in the lower Court while the appeal was pending were incompetent, but as a decree has been passed, the only way that the plaintiff can get rid of it is by an appeal. At present he is out of time, but he can make an application to have the delay excused. The defendant has asked for time and, therefore, we will hear the application next Monday. All costs to be reserved.

Order accordingly.

JUDGMENT.—This is a suit by some of the owners of the shamilat patti of Mouza Repura in which is situated a plot of land

JAG SAH V. SRIKANTA PRASAD.

4 bighas 11 kathas 15 dhurs in area. The plaintiffs claim to redeem this property. They alleged that the land was originally the occupancy holding of one Kunj Behari Das, a Sadhu, who was succeeded by several heirs who are now dead without heirs. In 1852 Kunj Behari Das gave the land in suit in Zarpeshgi lease to the ancestor of the defendants.

The substantive defence was that the land was not the occupancy holding of Kunj Behari Das but a Lakhiraj Brit tenure and that the plaintiffs have no right to redeem. It was also pleaded that they were not all the proprietors and, therefore, could not maintain the suit.

The Munsif held that the land was Lakhiraj Brit and that the plaintiffs as co-sharers in some of the Touzis had no right or interest in the land and consequently no right to redeem. The Subordinate Judge also held that the land was a Lakhiraj Brit tenure and that as a tenure it passed by escheat to the Crown and not to the Maliks of the village and that the plaintiffs, therefore, had no equity of redemption. He also held that there was a defect of parties, but that nevertheless the suit was not liable to dismissal on that ground. He dismissed the appeal.

With regard to the point of defect of parties, it is sufficient to say that the plaintiffs put in a petition on the 23rd of August 1919 to add the other co-sharer landlords as parties to the suit. The defendant objected to this addition and the Munsif refused to allow it. Consequently, the respondents are not entitled to raise this point now.

The principal question in the case is, whether the plaintiffs are entitled to redeem. On this question the respondents relied on Sonet Koor v. Himmat Bahadoor (1) where it was held that lands belonging to Zemindary granted by the Zemindar under an absolute hereditary Mukarrari tenure, do not, on the death of the grantee without heirs, revert to the Zemindar; but the Crown by the general prerogative will take the property by escheat. In that case it was held that the Mukarrari was an absolute interest and that there was no ground for saying that the land had reverted, in the proper sense of the term, to the Zemindar. In Nil Madhab Sikdar v. Narattam Sikdar (2) all that was said was that it seemed doubtful whether, when a landlord grants a permanent and heritable tenure in land, he has any estate left in him, and the decision in Sonet Koor's case (1) was referred to. Whatever may be the result, where the tenure is permanent and heritable, it seems clear that if it is anything less than this there must be a reversion to the proprietor.

Now, the burden of establishing title by escheat is on him who asserts it; Secretary of State for India v. Haibat Rao Hari (3). Consequently, if the defence was to succeed in the present case, it had at least to be shown that the tenure was permanent as well as heritable. All that is found is that the tenure was rent-free and heritable. It is argued that there is nothing to show that it was not for an unlimited period and that the possession of the tenure for several generations shows that it was permanent. It is not suggested that there is any evidence of permanency except this inferential evidence and that, in my opinion, is no evidence at all. The result is that there can be no escheat. The property must revert to the proprietor on the failure of the heir of the grantee, and the plaintiffs are entitled to redeem this mortgage.

The appeal is decreed with costs and the decrees of the Courts below are set aside and there will be a decree for redemption on payment of Rs. 78-14-0 within three months from this date. If the plaintiffs fail to redeem within that period, their right to redeem will be foreclosed. The plaintiffs are entitled to mesne profits from the date of suit. The amount will be ascertained by the Court of first instance. The plaintiffs will get their costs throughout.

Mr. Nanak Chand Pandit and Lala Gobind Ram Khanna, for the Appellants.

Mr. Shamair Chand, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—One Chetan, son of Lakha, appointed as his heir one Nandu, son of Lala. Nandu succeeded to Chetan's estate and on his demise was succeeded by his son Kheta. Kheta left him surviving two widows, Musammât Uman and Mussammât Jiwani, a son Mangla, and two daughters Musammât Ghoti and Mussammât Bhaddo. Mangla died without issue and the two ladies, Musammât Uman and Mussammât Jiwani, gifted the entire property to Har Chand, son of Ganga Ram, a collateral of Chetan. The other collaterals of the said Chetan instituted a suit against the two ladies, Har Chand, and his father Ganga Ram, asking for a declaration that this gift in favour of Har Chand would not affect their reversionary rights on the death of the two ladies. The suit was based on custom and the defence set up was (1) an adoption of Har Chand by the two ladies, and (2) it was pleaded that in the presence of Kheta's two daughters the plaintiffs had no locus standi. The Trial Court dismissed the suit on the ground that the lineal descendants of Nandu being in existence the plaintiffs could not sue. An appeal to the learned District Judge proving abortive the plaintiffs have come up to this Court in second appeal through Mr. Nanak Chand Pandit, while the respondents have been represented by Mr. Shamair Chand.

Mr. Shamair Chand has raised two preliminary points, firstly, that in the absence of a certificate a second appeal was not competent inasmuch as the question involved was one of custom, and, secondly, that the appeal was barred by time. It appears that an application for a certificate was made to the lower Appellate Court but was dismissed on the ground that there was no material on the record on which any decision as to the custom alleged could be arrived at. Mr. Nanak Chand has contended that, as a matter of fact, no question of custom was involved at all and that the appellants were ill advised to try and obtain one. It appears to us, however, that a question of custom is involved in this appeal and that, even if the decision of the learned District Judge on the merits of the case be erroneous, a second appeal is not competent. The plaintiffs sought to obtain a declaration in their favour and based their claim on custom. The defendants contested the suit also setting up a plea of custom. It has been found that Nandu was originally appointed an heir by Chetan and that by custom the collaterals of Chetan have no locus standi, so long as any of Nandu's lineal descendants, male or female, are in existence. Mr. Nanak Chand contended that this question was not strictly before the learned District Judge who has fallen into an error in regarding succession to an appointed heir as being the same as succession to a donee. It may be that the learned District Judge was entirely wrong, but it seems to us that, this case is very similar to that reported as Chintli v. Ishar (1), where it was held that, although the District Judge's view was erroneous, nevertheless, inasmuch as it was a decision on custom no second appeal was competent without the necessary certificate. We are of opinion that, before we can go into the question involved in the present case, a certificate is necessary, and as the certificate has been refused this second appeal is not competent.

In this view of the case, it is not necessary for us to consider the question of limitation. We dismiss the appeal but, in the circumstances, leave the parties to bear their own costs in this Court.

Mortgage, simple—Possession obtained by mortgagee—Right to remain in possession.

Once a simple mortgagee gets into possession of the property mortgaged to him, the property is security for his debt, and he is entitled to remain in possession, until the mortgage money is paid off though, as a matter of fact, if he endeavoured to recover the mortgage-money by suit, he might find himself barred by the Statute of Limitation.

Second appeal from the decision of the District Judge of Poona, in Appeal No. 15 of 1920, confirming the decree passed by the Subordinate Judge at Khed, in Civil Suit No. 232 of 1917.

Mr. P. B. Shingne, for the Appellant.

Mr. K. V. Joshi, for Respondent No. 6.

JUDGMENT.—This is a suit filed by the plaintiff to eject the defendants, and recover possession of the plaint property, the defendants being in possession under a rent-note of June 1, 1904, executed in plaintiff's favour on an annual rent of Rs. 18-12-0. The plaintiff is a mortgagee, the defendant having executed four mortgages with regard to the plaint property. They are set out at page 6 of the print. The first three are simple mortgages and the fourth one was a mortgage with possession; and this is a suit really by a mortgagee in possession against his tenant. The Courts, however, have dealt with the case as if it was a suit filed under section 3 (y) of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act, and have entertained a claim by the defendants to be allowed to redeem. The defendants then claimed that they were entitled to redeem the mortgaged property on paying off the mortgage-money under Exhibit 23 only, and that as the plaintiff-mortgagee could not sue to recover on the simple mortgages, the defendants were entitled to redeem without paying those amounts. The defendants obtained a decree on those terms in the Trial Court, and again in the Appeal Court. But we are of opinion that both those decisions were wrong. Once the mortgagee got into possession of the property mortgaged to him, then the property was security for his debt. He was entitled to remain in possession, though, as a matter of fact, if he endeavoured to recover the mortgage-money by suit he might find himself barred by the Statute of Limitation. If this decision were to stand, it would follow that the mortgagee in possession, though he could not sue for the mortgage-debt, would still be liable to be redeemed without receiving any of the mortgage-money. We think, therefore, that the decree must be set aside, and the case remanded to the Trial Court to take an account of what is due to the plaintiff under the mortgages, Exhibits 21, 22 and 23. As the mortgage, Exhibit 33, refers to other properties, the plaintiff's Pleader does not ask an account to be taken of the money due thereunder. The plaintiff is entitled to his costs throughout.

The High Court has inherent power under section 151 of the Civil Procedure Code to grant a certificate for renewal or refund of the value of stamps used on a memorandum of appeal which has been returned to the appellant on the ground that it is not properly stamped.

Hari Har Guru v. Ananda Mahanty, 20 Ind. Cas. 498; 40 C. 365 and Chaudra Hari Singh v. Tipan Prosad Singh, 46 Ind. Cas. 271; 3 P. L. J. 452; (1918) Pat. 273, followed.

ORDER.—This is an application on behalf of the appellants for the grant of a certificate for renewal or refund of the value of stamps worth Rs. 1,627-8-0 used on a memorandum of appeal which was returned to the appellants by the order of this Court dated 22nd November 1922, because the memorandum of appeal was not properly stamped.

An application was made to the Collector of Patna for renewal or refund of the stamps used on the memorandum of appeal, but he refused the application by his order of the 6th of December 1922.

The appellants then moved the Commissioner, who by his order of the 11th of January 1923 directed the petitioners to obtain a necessary certificate for renewal from the Taxing Officer of this Court. Hence the application to this Court, and the matter has been referred to us by the Taxing Officer.

According to the view of the Stamp Reporter the case is not governed by any rule, and that rule 23 does not apply inasmuch as that rule is applicable only to fees chargeable under section 3 of the Act and the memorandum of appeal in the present case does not come under that section. Even if there be no rule, this Court has inherent power under section 151 of the Code of Civil Procedure to grant the certificate asked for, as was held in the case of Chaudra Hari Singh v. Tipan Prosad Singh (1). That decision was based upon the decision of the Calcutta High Court in the case of Hari Har Guru v. Ananda Mahanty (2). No doubt, a different view has been taken in the Allahabad High Court, but, in our opinion, we should follow the decision of this Court and the Calcutta High Court where the practice seems to have grown up from the earliest time: vide In re Grant (3).

We, therefore, direct that the certificate asked for be granted by the Taxing Officer of this Court.

Punjab Courts Act (VI of 1918), s. 39 (1) (a)— Redemption suit—Forum of appeal—Jurisdiction.
The value of a redemption suit is the amount of the charge on the property.

The value of a redemption suit as stated in the plaint cannot be altered by the plea of the defendant whether it be true or false.

The forum of appeal in a redemption suit must be determined with reference to the claim made and not to the decision upon it.

In a suit to redeem certain property on payment of Rs. 3,000, the Trial Court decreed redemption on payment of Rs. 8,620. Defendant appealed claiming a further sum of Rs. 1,860:

Held, that the appeal lay to the District Judge and not to the High Court.

First appeal from a decree of the Subordinate Judge, First Class, Delhi, dated the 24th April 1922.

Mr. Shamair Chand, for the Appellant.

Lala Sardha Ram, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal was first presented to the District Judge, Delhi, who has returned it for presentation to this Court on the ground that it was beyond his jurisdiction. His decision reposes on certain dicta in Dyal Singh v. Ram Rakha (1).

For the appellant it is contended that the District Judge of Delhi had jurisdiction and we hold this contention to be correct.

The suit was to redeem property on payment of Rs. 3,000 but the Trial Court found that the charge was Rs. 8,620 and decreed redemption on those terms.

The appeal was by defendant who claimed a further sum of Rs. 1,860 and there are cross-objections. The problem for solution is: What was the proper valuation of the suit?

If the proper valuation was Rs. 3,000 the appeal lay to the District Judge, if it exceeded Rs. 5,000 this Court is the forum of appeal.

The value of the original suit was ex facie Rs. 3,000 but the learned District Judge holds that when the Trial Court found that the charge was Rs. 8,620 that figure represented the true value of the suit and he bases his conclusion on a phrase occurring in Dyal Singh v. Ram Rakha (1): "The decision of the First Court was that the charge on the land was Rs. 3,770 and an appeal lay to the Divisional Court."

In that case, however, the point for decision was not identical with that in this case; the contention was that, as the Divisional Court found that the real charge on the mortgaged property exceeded Rs. 5,000, it had no jurisdiction to hear the appeal, and the ruling is authority for no more than the proposition that an Appellate Court has jurisdiction to pass a decree for any amount, if the decree appealed against is within its jurisdiction.

It is not, however, authority for the proposition that the course of appeal is determined by the amount of the charge ascertained by the Trial Court, and the sentence above quoted is a mere obiter dictum.

Muhammad Khan v. Ashaq Muhammad Khan (2) is a Full Bench judgment in a redemption suit and therein three propositions are affirmed; first, that in a redemption suit, the value of the suit is the amount of the charge on the property; second, the value of the suit as stated in the plaint cannot be altered by the plea of the defendant, whether it be true or false; third, that the jurisdiction is to be determined with reference to the claim made, and not to the decision upon it.

These propositions furnish a rule which is clear and easy of observance and we see no reason why it should not be generally followed.

We accordingly hold that the District Judge's Court is the proper forum for this appeal and we accept the appeal and, setting aside the order of the learned Judge, remand the case for a decision on the merits. Costs to be costs in the case.

Easement—Quia timet action—Decree for injunction—Form of decree—Easements Act (V of 1882), s. 33—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), Appendix D, Form 15.

(1) 14 Ind. Cas. 78; 54 P. R. 1912; 122 P. W. R. 1912.

BAI KASHIBAI V. PURSHOTTAM KESHAVJI.

Having regard to section 33 of the Easements Act, Form 15 of Appendix D of the Civil Procedure Code, although the prescribed Form, is not the proper Form for a decree for an injunction in a quia timet action against a building higher than old level. The decree should restrain the defendant from disturbing the easements to which the plaintiff is entitled in respect of his windows and not ask him not to darken, injure or obstruct those windows, for a darkening, injuring, or obstructing of the windows might or might not, according to its intensity, amount to an actionable disturbance of the easement which alone would give a cause of action to the plaintiff under section 33 of the Easements Act.

Appeal from the decision of Mr. Justice Kemp.

Sr Thomas Strangman (with him Messrs. Kanga, Advocate-General, and Petigara), for the Appellant.

Mr. Inverarity (with him Mr. Colman), for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is a quia timet action filed by the plaintiff as owner of a property in Lalwady, Old Hanuman Cross Lane, Kalbadevi, asking for an injunction against the defendant from erecting or maintaining erected any building or erection on her premises mentioned in the plaint so as to cause a disturbance of the plaintiffs' easements of light and air across the defendant's premises enjoyed by the ancient windows referred to in the plaint. The Trial Court granted a decree and declared that the windows in the South walls of the plaintiff's premises mentioned in the plaint and shown in the plan annexed as Exhibit C to the plaint were ancient windows and that the plaintiff was entitled to an easement of light and air for his premises over and across the defendant's premises mentioned in the plaint save so far as the same were obstructed by the defendant's old building also mentioned in the plaint and showed by a white broken line in the said plan. Then an injunction was granted against the defendant from erecting or continuing to erect or maintaining erected upon her premises mentioned in the plaint any house, building or erection of a greater height than the building which formerly stood upon her premises and which had been recently pulled down, so or in such manner as to darken, injure or obstruct the windows of the plaintiff marked 6, 7, 8, 10, 11, 12, 13 and 14 in the said plan save and so far as the same were obstructed by the defendant's old building.

The defendant has appealed against the decision of the learned Judge who found against her on all the issues. It has not been contended before us that the plaintiff's windows were not ancient; it was only suggested that the easement of light and air enjoyed previously by some of the windows might not be materially affected if the defendant built according to the proposed plan. It is not necessary, however, to enter upon such details in this case, for once the plaintiff establishes that his windows are ancient and the defendant by the proposed buildings threatens to disturb his easements, then he is entitled to an injunction with regard to the windows which have been held to be ancient and it will depend upon the future action of the defendant whether the injunction has been disobeyed. The defendant does not mention in the memorandum of appeal that she objects to the form of the decree, but we think there is considerable substance in the objection which has now been raised. It is quite true that Form 15 of Appendix D of the Code of Civil Procedure is the form prescribed for a decree in a quia timet action asking for an injunction against a building higher than the old level. That form is the common form of injunction which has been used in England ever since the case of Yates v. Jack (1), but it is obvious, when reference is made to the Indian Easements Act, that this form is not appropriate as expressing what the Court should direct if the plaintiff succeeds in a quia timet action. Though the plaintiff may have an easement of light and air for all the windows which obtained light over the defendant's old buildings, he has no cause of action against the defendant unless she threatens to disturb his enjoyment of his easement. Therefore, if he succeeds in proving that, he is entitled to an injunction restraining the defendant from disturbing the easement, to the enjoyment of which he has been held to be entitled. By section 32 of this Act the owner of a dominant heritage is entitled to enjoy an easement without disturbance by any other person. What amounts to an actionable disturbance is defined in section 33 of the Act. When the defendant is so enjoined, it will depend upon the future character of his building whether he has disobeyed the injunction in such a way as to give rise to a right of action. In the case of Colls v. Home and Colonial Stores, Limited (2) Lord Macnaghten pointed out that the common form of injunction which had been in use since the case of Yates v. Jack (1) was not altogether free from objection. Their Lordships thought it better that the order when expressed in general terms should restrain the defendant from erecting any building so as to cause a nuisance or illegal obstruction to the plaintiff's ancient windows as the same existed previously to the taking down of the house which formerly stood on the site of the defendant's new buildings. If the decree stood as it has been drawn up, it might follow that if the plaintiff's ancient windows were in the slightest degree darkened, injured or obstructed by the defendant's new buildings, that would constitute a disobedience of the injunction, though it might obviously be no disturbance according to the provisions of the Indian Easements Act. The decree 'will, therefore, be amended by 'perpetually restraining the defendant from disturbing the easements to which the plaintiff is entitled in respect of the windows on the south walls of his premises mentioned in the plaint which were held to be ancient windows save in so far as they were obstructed by the defendant's old building.' There was no necessity to mention particular windows of those found to be ancient. They are all equally entitled to protection.

The appellant must pay the costs of the appeal.

Decree amended.

Where it is found that a plaintiff in a suit for damages for malicious prosecution was convicted in the first instance and was ultimately acquitted on appeal, the presumption is against the absence of reasonable and probable cause for the prosecution unless the original conviction is proved to have proceeded on evidence known by the defendant to be false or on the wilful suppression by him of material information. For this purpose, the plaintiff is entitled to produce evidence, and a dismissal of his suit, without giving him the opportunity to produce such evidence, is liable to be set aside in appeal. JUDGMENT.

Das, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit instituted by the appellant for recovery of Rs. 10,900 as damages for false and malicious prosecution of himself by the defendant.

It appears that the plaintiff was in possession of a certain land by virtue of a yearly settlement from the Canal Authorities. The settlement for 1916 to 1917 expired on the 31st March 1917, and it also appears that the plaintiff made no fresh application for settlement to the Canal Authorities. On the 5th of May 1917, the defendant applied for settlement, and on the 7th of May the land was settled with the defendant. The defendant entered upon possession of the land on the 7th August, and it is the case of the defendant that on the 8th of August the plaintiff came upon the land and ordered the defendant to leave the land and called upon his men to beat him. Thereupon the defendant went and told the Canal Authorities of all that had happened and the Canal Authorities informed the Police of the occurrence of the 8th of August. The Police ultimately recorded the first information of the defendant in which he clearly asserts that he was making a complaint against the plaintiff. The plaintiff was tried under sections 143 and 447 of the Indian Penal Code. He was acquitted of the charge under section 143 but was convicted under section 447, Indian Penal Code, by the Court of first instance. That conviction was upheld on appeal but was set aside in revision by this Court. The plaintiff thereafter commenced the proceedings out of which this appeal arises for recovery of the sum of Rs. 10,900 as damages for false and malicious prosecution of himself.

The learned Subordinate Judge framed four issues, of which the first and second issues were as follows:—

(1) Has the plaintiff any cause of action against the defendant?

(2) Is the suit as framed tenable?

On the date of the hearing, however, that is to say, on the 21st of April 1920, the learned Subordinate Judge made an addition to the second issue and the added portion runs as follows:—"Was the complaint, if any, made by the defendant malicious and without any reasonable and probable cause?"

He tried the first and second issues as preliminary issues, and he says in the order-sheet that the parties did not adduce any oral evidence on the preliminary points. He decided these issues without any oral evidence against the plaintiff and dismissed the plaintiff's suit with costs. In my opinion, it was quite impossible for the learned Subordinate Judge to decide this case without any oral evidence. It is quite true, as has been observed more than once, that the very fact that a Court of competent jurisdiction convicted the plaintiff shows that the defendant had a foundation for the prosecution but as was laid down by Mookerjee, J., in the case of Shama Bibi v. Chairman of Baranagore Municipality (1), the true rule is that if the plaintiff has been convicted in the first instance and ultimately acquitted on appeal, the presumption is against the absence of reasonable and probable cause unless the original conviction is proved to have proceeded on evidence known by the defendant to be false or on the wilful suppression by him of material information. It was, therefore, open to the plaintiff to adduce evidence to establish that the original conviction was based on evidence known by the defendant to be false or on the wilful suppression by him of material information. The learned Subordinate Judge having decided the case on arguments and without any oral evidence, it was plainly impossible for the plaintiff to adduce any oral evidence to establish that there was want of reasonable and probable cause in lodging the information against him.

It has been strenuously contended before us that the plaintiff declined to give any evidence in the case and that it was open to the Subordinate Judge to decide the case in the way in which he has done. The argument does not impress me. The order-sheet is quite clear that the learned Subordinate Judge tried the first and second issues as preliminary issues; but, in my opinion, the second issue, as amended by him, could not be regarded as a preliminary issue. No doubt, issues Nos. 1 and 2 as they stood, before the learned Subordinate Judge made the addition to the second issue, could be regarded as preliminary issues, but the second issue, after the addition made to it by the learned Subordinate Judge, could not, in my opinion, be regarded as a preliminary issue. The plaintiff was obviously misled by the circumstances that the learned Subordinate Judge insisted on dealing with the most important issue on facts as a preliminary issue. I cannot agree that the case has at all been properly tried by the learned Subordinate Judge in the Court below. On the second point, namely, whether there was any cause of action against the defendant, the learned Subordinate Judge has come to the conclusion that the plaintiff has no cause of action as against the defendant. According to him, the Canal Authorities were the real prosecutors in the case, and that the plaintiff should have proceeded against the Canal Authorities. In discussing this point, the learned Subordinate Judge refers to the decision of the Judicial Committee in the case of Gaya Prasad v. Bhagat Singh (2). But in that case the Judicial Committee laid down that the question in all cases must be, who was the prosecutor, and that the answer must depend upon the whole circumstances of the case. It is quite impossible for a Court to say who the real prosecutor is unless there is evidence before the Court to assist it in the investigation of this important question. As I have said, the case has not been properly tried, and I must allow the appeal, set aside the judgment and decree passed by the Court below and remand the case to that Court for a decision according to law.

The costs will abide the result and will be disposed of by the learned Subordinate Judge.

We grant the appellant a certificate under section 13 of the Court-Fees Act, entitling him to a refund of the Court-fees paid by him on the memorandum of appeal.

An order setting aside an ex parte decree cannot be questioned in appeal.

ABDUL SHAKUR v. LIPTON & CO.

An error, made by a Court in setting aside an ex parte decree is not an error affecting the decision of a case within the meaning of section 105 of the Civil Procedure Code, and cannot, therefore, be set forth as a ground of objection in the memorandum of appeal from any decree passed in the case.

Fazal v. Hashmati, 31 Ind. Cas. 914; 40 P. R. 1916; 133 P. W. R. 1916 and Chintamony Dassi v. Raghoonath Sahoo, 22 C. 981; 11 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 651, relied upon.

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Ludhiana, dated the 14th June 1921, affirming that of the Munsif, First Class, Ludhiana, dated the 31st August 1920

Lala Kahan Chand, for the Appellant.

Mr. J. G. Sethi, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—In this appeal Counsel has given up the three first grounds in his memorandum and confines himself entirely to ground 4. This is to the effect that the learned District Judge erred in holding that the Court of first instance had inherent power to set aside the ex parte decree even after the expiry of the period of limitation. Counsel for the respondents raises a preliminary objection that the correctness of an order setting aside an ex parte decree cannot be questioned on appeal, and he relies on Fazal v. Hashmati (1). In this ruling it has been clearly laid down that not only can an order setting aside an ex parte decree not be questioned on appeal but that any error, etc., made by Court in setting aside such an ex parte decree is not an error affecting the decision of the case within the meaning of section 105 of the Code and cannot, therefore, be set forth as a ground of objection in the memorandum of appeal. Counsel for the appellant urges that this ruling was based on an Allahabad ruling which has since been dissented from by a Division Bench of that Court. This is quite immaterial, for the view taken is, in my opinion, absolutely correct and is, moreover, supported by Chintamony Dassi v. Raghoonath Sahoo (2) and the earlier decision of the Allahabad High Court. Finding, therefore, that the only ground of appeal argued by Counsel cannot be taken, I dismiss the appeal with costs.

Malicious prosecution—Reasonable and probable cause, absence of—Malice, what is—Burden of proof—Test.

In order to succeed in an action for damages for malicious prosecution the plaintiff must allege and establish both absence of reasonable and probable cause and malice and must fail altogether if he fails to establish both. [p. 415, col. 1.]

Reasonable and probable cause means an honest belief in the guilt of the accused based upon a full conviction, founded upon reasonable grounds, of the existence of a state of circumstances, which, assuming them to be true, would reasonably lead any ordinary prudent and cautious man, placed in the position of the accuser, to the conclusion that the person charged was probably guilty of the crime imputed. [p. 415, col. 1.]

The malice necessary to be established in a case of malicious prosecution does not mean malice in law, such as may be assumed from the intentional doing of a wrongful act, but malice in fact; malus animus indicating that the party was actuated either by spite or ill-will towards an individual, or by indirect or improper motives, though these may be wholly unconnected with any uncharitable feeling towards anybody. If there was an honest belief in the accused's guilt, neither anger nor hastiness on the part of the accuser would evidence malice. Anger, so far from being a wrong or indirect motive, is one of the motives on which the law relies to secure the prosecution of offenders, while hastiness in the 'accuser's conclusion as to the accused's guilt, although it might account for his coming to a wrong conclusion, would not show the presence of any indirect motives. [p. 421, col. 2.]

The test as to the burden or onus of proof is simply this: to ask oneself which party will be successful if no evidence is given, or if no more evidence is given than has been given at a particular point of the case, for it is obvious that as the controversy involved in the litigation travels on, the parties from moment to moment may reach points at which the Tribunal will have to say that if the case stops there it must be decided in a particular manner. First appeal from a decree of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Lahore, dated the 18th April 1917.

Sheikh Abdul Qadir, K. B., Messrs. M. Saleem and Badraddin Kureshi, for the Appellant.

Bakhshi Tek Chand and Lala Mehr Chand Mahajan, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is a first appeal by Abdul Shakur whose suit for damages for malicious prosecution against Lipton & Company, Calcutta, has been dismissed by the Subordinate Judge, Lahore.

The appellant is a general merchant of Lahore, and, up to the 31st December 1914, was under agreement with Liptons' not to sell their tea below certain rates. From the 1st January 1915 he commenced to undersell the other local merchants, who remained bound by the agreement. The result was protests on the part of the other merchants and correspondence between Liptons' and their Lahore Agent, a man named Lajpat Ram, about the best means of pacifying them. This correspondence shows that Liptons' wished at the same time to raise the prices of their various brands of tea, and that the Lahore merchants in February 1915 accepted an enhancement of two annas per pound tin of the yellow and blue label brand and one anna per tin of the red label brand, bringing the rates at which Liptons' teas were to be sold in Lahore up to Re. 1-4-0, Re. 1-2-0 and 0-14-0 per tin. Meanwhile, a price list issued by the appellant Abdul Shakur on 1st February advertised Liptons' yellow label tea at 0-15-0 per tin, blue label at 0-13-0 per tin and red label at Re. 0-10-0 per tin. As a counter stroke Liptons' advertised by hand-bills, posters and in the press a warning to the public that certain merchants in Lahore were holding old stocks of tea which they were trying to foist on the consumers at reduced rates, and inviting purchasers to insist upon being supplied with tins labelled "Packed in 1915." A considerable number of special labels were sent from Calcutta by Liptons' to Lajpat Ram for the purpose of being affixed to tins which had been received by retail vendors in 1915 and had left the Calcutta warehouse before the system of special labelling had been started there. Simultaneously, according to Mr. Newby, witness for the defendants in this case, who was Liptons' Calcutta Manager at the time, Lajpat Ram was instructed to invite the Lahore shopkeepers to return the remainder of their 1914 stocks to Calcutta, and to receive fresh tea in exchange. Whether these instructions were actually given or not is a point in dispute, and no letter conveying them has been forthcoming, but it has been proved that tea tinned in Calcutta as far back as March 1914 was labelled in a Lahore shop as packed in 1915.

The next thing that happened was, that tins of Liptons' tea were exposed for sale by Abdul Shakur in his shop labelled. "This was despatched by Messrs. Liptons' Limited, Calcutta, on 22nd December 1914 and received here on 4th January 1915. Guaranteed good. If not good return with the relative cash memo, and the price paid will be returned."

Lajpat Ram reported this to Liptons' and informed them that Abdul Shakur was so labelling tea which he had received from Calcutta in 1914. Liptons' were indignant, expressed their intention of taking legal proceedings against Abdul Shakur, and directed Lajpat Ram to secure as many of Abdul Shakur's labelled tins as possible, and send them down to Calcutta for examination.

Lajpat Ram obtained and sent some tins, the exact number of which has not been elicited. Liptons' consulted their Solicitors in Calcutta, who communicated with Mr. Broadway, Advocate, in Lahore. Lajpat Ram was instructed to see Mr. Broadway and to place at his disposal all his information on the matter. As a result, a complaint was drawn up by Mr. Broadway, charging Abdul Shakur with offences, under sections 487 and 488, Indian Penal Code, in that he had affixed the labels described above to tins of tea supplied to him before 22nd December and had sold goods in receptacles bearing false marks. The complaint was presented in Court on the 9th April 1915 by Mr. S. H. Andrews an employee of Liptons', who had been sent up from Calcutta for the purpose and was accompanied by six tins of tea bearing Abdul Shakur's labels, which Mr. Andrews swore in his examination as complainant, had been despatched from the Calcutta Warehouse, four on the 7th October 1914, and two on the 11th December 1914.

It is here necessary to describe the system by which Liptons' employees professed to be able to locate the date of despatch of any tin of tea sent out of their Calcutta Warehouse. Every label encircling the four sides of a square tin is or should be stamped with three perforated and inconspicuous letters, the first of which denotes the week of the month, the second the month and the third the year. This Code is stated to be a secret one, known only to a limited number of persons and to be changed frequently. The Code for 1914 has been revealed in the proceedings of this case, and is as follows: (1. Week) M=1st week, N=2nd week, O=3rd week, P=4th week, Q=5th week. The first week commences on the first of the month irrespective of the day of the week, the second week on the 8th and so on. (2. Months) U=September, V. October, W. November, X. December. (3. Year) U. 1914. M.X.U. means 1st week December 1914. Q.V.U. means 5th week October. According to Messrs. Newby and Andrews and other witnesses in the employ of Liptons', the tea to be despatched in compliance with an order from an up-country station is freshly tinned and packed on the day on which the order is received. The required quantity is discharged through tubes from the blending rooms upstairs into machines in the basement. The tea is weighed and run into tins by machinery. The tins are closed by hand. The requisite number of labels is stamped with the appropriate

Code letters in another machine. The labels are stuck on in yet another machine. The tins are then hand-wrapped in paper and immediately packed in boxes and the boxes are removed to the Railway Station on the same day or the next day. No stock of filled tins or packed boxes is kept for what are termed Railway orders, and thus the firm is able to say with confidence that every tin in a consignment despatched to Lahore, e.g., on the 22nd December 1914, has been filled on that or the preceding day and that the label of each tin will be marked O.X.U. The reason for the system has been stated to be that the Company finds it useful in dealing with complaints to know precisely when a tin of tea has been filled, and this, indeed, is obvious.

To return to the complaint of Mr. Andrews, which was dealt with by Mr. O'Neil Shaw, Magistrate of the First Class: summons was issued to Abdul Shakur, and on the 12th April Mr. Andrews and Counsel for the prosecution and defence were deputed by the Magistrate to visit Abdul Shakur's shop and to bring thence to Court any tins of labelled tea that they might find. They found exposed for sale a certain quantity of Liptons' tins which did not bear the offending labels, and 12 labelled tins were produced by Abdul Shakur. On five of these the Code marks were so indistinct that Mr. Andrews could not read them. Of the other seven, five were stated by Mr. Andrews to "belong to the consignment dated 7th October 1914" and the other two "to the consignment of the 11th December 1914." This evidence, by the way, was not strictly accurate. Five of the seven tins are before us, and one of those stated to belong to the consignment of 7th October is marked N.V.U, which means the second week of October 1914; while of the two December tins the first letter on one is very indistinct, and is as likely to be M, first week, as N, second week.

On 25th May 1915 the Magistrate framed a charge against Abdul Shakur under sections 487 and 488, Indian Penal Code, and on the 8th June 1915, the date fixed for the second cross-examination of the witnesses for the prosecution, Abdul Shakur brought to Court ten cases of tea (each case containing 60 one-lb tins) and said that these were what remained unpacked in his show room out of 25 cases sent to him by Liptons' from Calcutta on 22nd December 1914. Mr. Andrews, under cross-examination, was invited to pick out any cases that appeared to him not to have been tampered with, to open them and to see what was in them. He declined to do so. He admitted that the cases were Liptons' cases and bore their invoice mark. The Magistrate, Mr. O'Neil Shaw, then selected two out of the ten cases and had them opened. He stated later in his judgment, and also as a witness in the present suit, that he was convinced that these two cases had not been opened since they left Calcutta. Mr. Andrews was unable to point to anything about the boxes to indicate that they had been opened previously, but he declared that he was not satisfied that they had not been tampered with. The result of the test was that "most of the tins" in the first case (the figures are not given) were found to be marked O.X.U. (3rd week December 1914) and O.W.U. 3rd week of November 1914) and the marks on five could not be deciphered. In the second case there were three tins with no letters on them, eleven tins with indistinct letters, three tins marked N.X.U. (2nd week December 1914), three marked O.W.U. (3rd week November 1914), one marked M.X.U. (1st week December 1914) and the remaining thirty-nine marked O.X.U. (3rd week December 1914). Thereafter, Abdul Shakur produced as a defence witness, Mr. J. N. Marshall, a former employee of Liptons' at Calcutta, and then travelling agent for Brook Bond and Company, who gave a different description of the packing system at Liptons' to that stated by Mr. Andrews, and said that, after filling and labelling, the tins were stacked in compartments and that, when orders came boxes were packed from these compartments where tins might remain for days or for months. Eventually, on the 27th July 1915, the Magistrate delivered judgment acquitting Abdul Shakur.

On the 28th January 1916 Abdul Shakur brought the present action against Mr. Andrews and Liptons' and Company claiming Rs. 17,000 damages for malicious prosecution. The principal evidence led for the plaintiff consisted of proof that he had paid Rs. 2,100 as Counsel's fees in the criiminal case, statements of witnesses to the effect that his health had suffered, and that his reputation had been damaged, statements by other shop-keepers in Lahore whose 1914 tea had been labelled "packed in 1915" by or at the instance of Lajpat Ram, statement by himself and his servants that the labels put on by him correctly described the tins to which they had been affixed, a statement by Mr. Marshall which repeated the description given by the same witness in the criminal trial of Liptons' packing system, a number of documents mostly obtained from Mr. Linch, a defence witness, accountant in Liptons' Calcutta Office, and several tins of tea which had been produced in the criminal case. The chief witnesses for the defendants were Mr. Andrews and other members of Liptons' Calcutta staff, who were examined on commission, namely, Mr. Newby, the ex-manager, who admittedly was responsible for the criminal proceedings taken, Babu Ashutosh Kumar, the despatch clerk, Mr. Wagstaff, the Warehouse Superintendent, Mr. Stewart, the present Manager, and Mr. Linch, the Accountant. Lajpat Ram has not appeared in these proceedings as a witness for either party and his connection with Liptons' is said to have terminated soon after the criminal trial.
